Mr. CONGER. That bill should be entitled a bill to make easy trespasses upon the public lands. I object to it in its present form of title.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Public Lands a substitute for House bill No. 1215 for the relief of settlers upon the Osage trust and diminished reserved lands in Kansas, and for other purposes. The bill should be acted upon immediately, and I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. ATKINS. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BREWER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I ask my colleague to withdraw the call for the regular order until I can submit a resolution for reference to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BREWER. I will withdraw the call for the regular order.

BRIDGE OVER THE DETROIT RIVER.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I ask consent to submit for reference to the Committee on Commerce the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas recent progress in the art has shown the practicability of constructing bridges having spans of five hundred feet or possibly more: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and required to convene a board of officers of the Corps of Engineers of the Army, whose duty it shall be to inquire into and report whether for railroad purposes the river Detroit can be bridged at the city of Detroit, or within one mile above or below said city, in such manner as to accommodate the large trade and commerce crossing the river at that point, and without material or undue injury to the navigation of said river, a good and sufficient tug being always kept by the bridge-owners to assist any craft when required.

Mr. FINLEY. I object.

The SPEAKER. It is only for reference.

Mr. FINLEY. If the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] will withdraw his objection to the bill of my colleague, [Mr CONVERSE,] I will withdraw my objection in this case.

Mr. CONGER. "The gentleman from Michigan" makes no trades of that kind.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the morning hour will begin——

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the morning hour has proved very profitless I think as regards the bill pending during that hour. I should be very glad, so far as I am concerned, to yield the morning hour to the Committee on Appropriations if they have an appropriation bill ready for action.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the morning hour cannot be dispensed with except by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] will allow the Committee on Appropriations to direct it own business. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I extended to the gentleman a courtesy; if he does not accept it, the matter is with him.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I move that the morning hour be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2002) making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. There is a bill coming over from a former day as unfinished business in the House.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to raise the question of consideration upon that bill.

The SPEAKER. The question then is, will the House proceed to the bill in relation to diseases among cattle?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 49, noes 86.

Mr. McGOWAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The bill in reference to diseases among cattle having been made a special order by unanimous consent, will not a two-thirds vote be required to set it aside for other business?

The SPEAKER. The House by a majority vote can determine what business it will proceed with. The advantage, however, of the bill having been made a special order is that it keeps constantly coming up as soon as any intervening business which the House may consider is finished. On this question the ayes are 49, the noes 86. So the House decides not to proceed with the unfinished business.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the bill in reference to pay of letter-carriers.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I rise to oppose the motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of that bill. I want the House to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the bill in regard to publishing the reports of the Supreme Court. It is a question of much public importance, and will not take an hour.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois is not debatable. When the House goes into Committee of the Whole the gentleman from Virginia can test the sense of the committee as to what the order of business shall be.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. My object is to have an understanding that when the House goes into Committee of the Whole the bill I have referred to shall be taken up.

Mr. O'NEILL. Pending the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] I move that when the House shall again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the bill in reference to the pay of letter-carriers the time for general debate be extended for one hour.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I think that forty minutes of the time allowed for general debate remain unexpended; and when that time is exhausted the debate can be continued under the five-minute rule.

Mr. O'NEILL. I modify my motion so as to extend the time thirty minutes, instead of one hour.

The SPEAKER. This, with the forty minutes remaining, will be one hour and ten minutes.

Mr. SPARKS. The time for debate has been extended once or twice.

The motion of Mr. O'NEILL was not agreed to.

Mr. FINLEY moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of House bill No. 2002, it was agreed to; there being ayes 76, noes not counted.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. REAGAN in the chair.

PAY OF LETTER-CARRIERS.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending business in Committee of the Whole is the bill (H. R. No. 2002) making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move to lay this bill aside for the purpose of taking up the bill regulating the publication of the reports of the Supreme Court of the United States. It is important that legislation on this subject be had at the present session so that the reports which will be printed during the recess shall be published at the reduced rates proposed in the bill.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I think we can finish the letter-carrier bill to-day.

Mr. FINLEY. I make the point that the letter-carrier bill, being the unfinished business, must be first considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must entertain the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, who proposes to lay aside the pending bill and take up the bill providing for the publication of the Supreme Court reports.

Mr. FINLEY. As I understand, the House went into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the letter-carrier bill, and it is unfinished business.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole has power to determine what business it will consider.

The motion of Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, was not agreed to.

Mr. STONE. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose yesterday, I had submitted the question whether I held the floor. The Chair supposed perhaps that I had surrendered it, though I did not intend to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to yield the floor according to the practice in committee.

Mr. STONE. I am not at all particular about the matter, if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] is regarded as holding the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. There remain forty minutes for general debate.

Mr. KEIFER. I believe I had the floor at the time the motion was made that the committee rise.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. How are the forty minutes to be divided?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot determine that question. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor, and the Chair can put no limitations upon him.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. As I understand, half the time ought in fairness to be given to the opponents of the bill, and half the time to those who advocate it.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman so understands that to be the agreement the Chair will recognize the arrangement.

Mr. KEIFER. I should like to know how much of the time the gentleman from Illinois occupied yesterday. Before we make any further arrangement we ought to know how much of the three hours' time he has already occupied.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. That is all right.

Mr. KEIFER. I believe he occupied an hour and a half.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. No; only an hour and a quarter.

Mr. KEIFER. We are entitled, then, to a larger share of the forty minutes remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman occupied an hour and fifteen minutes. He first occupied an hour, and then his time was extended for half an hour, and of that half hour he only spoke fifteen minutes.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Then fifteen minutes of the remaining forty minutes belong to the friends of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will recognize that arrangement.

Mr. STONE. That will not be controverted at all. It should be admitted without question. I think it is correct, and those in favor of the bill are entitled to fifteen minutes of the forty minutes still remaining.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, there are a number of gentlemen who desire to speak on this subject. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WARD] on my left desires ten minutes of my time, and if I have the floor I will yield it to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that in committee the time cannot be farmed out; but when a member yields the floor he yields it subject to the recognition of the Chair. The Chair, however, will recognize first the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WARD,] as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. That is all I desire. We are only trying to partition the time between the two sides, giving to each what it is entitled to.

Mr. WARD. Mr. Chairman, I have no free-delivery office in my district; I have no city or town that can lay title to that privilege of free delivery under this proposed legislation. I wish I had. And if such were the fact I should not have the least hesitancy in opposing this bill and advocating the retention of the legislation passed in February last.

I am opposed to the bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations and now under consideration. I am opposed to it, in the first place, because I consider it to be an effort on the part of that committee to invade the province of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, as was forcibly demonstrated yesterday by my friend from Michigan, [Mr. STONE,] and to take jurisdiction of a subject which does not belong to them, thereby undoing the established system of the postal service.

It is idle to say, Mr. Chairman, that the act of February 21, 1879, was inconsiderate legislation. It was matured, having been before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads for a long time; not in the identical language in which it was enacted, but the general subject was up and under consideration for weeks and probably months.

It is true, sir, that the men who were interested did not come here with a lobby behind them, but selected from their own number intelligent young men who were fully conversant with the subject, and who had the ability to present it in such a way before the committee and before this House as entitled them to the consideration which they received and to influence members so that nearly three-fourths of this House voted in favor of the legislation then placed upon the statute-book.

A great deal has been said in reference to the labor required from these letter-carriers. I have in my hand a statement carefully prepared which shows exactly what those men do in the city of Philadelphia, and I ask attention to it. The letter-carrier has to report himself at the post-office at half past six o'clock in the morning. His duties commence immediately by arranging the letters for his route, which occupies at least an hour. Under the present system the carriers make five trips per day over their respective routes, and at the same time collect from the boxes; in addition to which they make an extra collection from the boxes at half past seven p. m. for delivery to the post-office. All this has to be done in all kinds of weather, and every fifth Sunday they are on duty from eight to nine o'clock in the morning and from two to three o'clock in the afternoon, beside making a night collection. Exposure to all kinds of weather necessarily produces sickness; and the moment they are unable to work their pay is stopped, and doctors' bills and other incidental expenses are incurred. I assert here without fear of contradiction there is no other class of workmen in this country from whom such severe service is required and yet paid so disproportionately as these letter-carriers.

It is not alone physical labor which is required of them through the long hours which are so excessive during which they are employed, but in addition to that, another quality is required of them to fit them for the position they hold. They must be men of intelligence; they must be men of more or less education; they must be men of settled character for honesty and probity. They are required, as was said here yesterday, to give bonds for the faithful performance of their duties, and I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] who has charge of this measure where he can put his finger upon another class of men in regard to whom physical, mental, and moral qualities are required in the same degree, and who are paid anything like the small compensation that is allowed to these men.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is another feature about this bill, which to my mind presents an aspect of gross injustice that is altogether indefensible. On the 21st of last February, under House bill No. 2133, which became the law, the salaries of carriers were fixed—one class at the rate of $1,000 per annum. From that time until the present those men have been performing the duties required of them by law in their respective positions faithfully, and according to the letter of their duty. They had the right to expect that their compensation would be regulated according to that law. In fact, that law created as to them was just as fully an obligation on the part of the Government as if the Postmaster-General under authority of law had entered into contract under seal with them. They had the pledge of their employer, the Government of the United States, that they would be paid for the services rendered by them according to the letter of that enactment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is proposed by the bill before the House? It is proposed to ignore that enactment, to ignore that contract, to retrograde the letter-carriers who trusted that bill back to their old rate of pay. I ask whether any gentleman upon this floor is prepared to defend that act of injustice? Can it be that the Government of the United States will not carry out its obligation and its contract with these men who have faithfully performed their duties during the time that has intervened from February 21 until this day, relying, as they had a right to rely, upon the good faith and the honor of the Government to see that they were paid under the provisions of the law and according to the rate mentioned in the act under which their duties were performed and under which they served? I do not know what has become of the innate sense of justice that rests in the mind of my good friend from Illinois when he reports such a measure as that, calculated to break down the obligation of the contract and refusing to pay the men under the terms of their agreement.

Mr. Chairman, when this subject was under consideration in this House in April, 1877, I took occasion to say:

> I believe as a class the letter-carriers are not paid an amount equivalent to the character of the men employed, the qualifications they require, and the services they perform. I believe there is no class of men as intelligent, as well disciplined, as courteous, who are required to perform such responsible duties, and suffer the exposure in all weathers during the long hours, providing at their own expense a prescribed uniform, that are paid anything like the low wages they receive. Fair wages to the men who do the work is both simple justice and wise legislation.

I repeat those sentiments now, and have seen nothing in any of the arguments that have been put forward in this debate in the least degree to weaken my faith in them.

Now one word more, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the letter-carrier system. In the debate of last June upon this subject the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] took very broad and strong ground upon the subject. I wish to read a few sentences from his remarks at that time:

> Now, Mr. Speaker, originally the law on the subject of free-delivery offices provided that free delivery might be established at post-offices where the population within the delivery of the office reached twenty thousand. Subsequently, by an act passed in 1876, the law was changed so as to limit the establishment of free-delivery offices to cities having a population within their corporate limits of thirty thousand. Now, sir, neither test was proper. In the first place it is the business that ought to be the test in this matter of free delivery. Those who pay for the music ought to enjoy it. That is my proposition; and perhaps it is right to have this double test, population and revenue. To give a place free delivery of mail matter will add to the revenue in two ways at least: First, by the payment of double postage on dropped letters; and, second, by the increase of letters written on account of the convenience of mailing and receiving letters through the establishment of letter-boxes at places remote from the post-office. In this way employment will be given to more worthy and needy men, and the people will be glad to pay for it. The general net post-office receipts will not be materially affected by a proper increase of free-delivery offices.

I indorse the doctrine which the gentleman there laid down. I say the free-delivery system ought to be extended according to the wants of the community, and the answer to the question whether it will pay or not to give the community this accommodation ought to be the governing rule in establishing free-delivery post-offices throughout the country. There can be no other sensible or practical test. Different circumstances rule in different communities. The proximity of population, the amount of business, the kind of business conducted in the locality, all enter into the question in determining whether or not free delivery ought to be established. According to the experience of times gone by it is a system "that grows by what it feeds upon," and the testimony is that the increase of local postal intercourse in the vicinities where these facilities are granted has been enough to overcome and overbalance the expense.

It has been stated here that the net revenue from the free-delivery system into the Treasury of the United States amounts to over $600,000 or $700,000. I have here a statement which I will ask to have printed with my remarks, which shows the increase between those years from the year 1868 to 1876 of 100 per cent. in the number of carriers, and an increase of 300 per cent. in the mailable matter handled by carriers in the cities where the system has been established.

From the Postmaster-General's reports, 1868 and 1876.

Number of cities	48	87
Number of carriers	1,198	2,255
Number of mail letters delivered	64,340,486	189,659,443
Number of local letters delivered	14,081,906	53,773,953
Newspapers delivered	16,910,715	80,675,040
Letters collected	63,164,625	200,280,079
Amount paid carriers, including incidental expenses	$995,934 59	$1,981,186 51
Postage on local matter	$475,982 36	$2,065,561 73

Now, Mr. Chairman, it would not be proper to introduce that kind of legislation into this bill. It would be subject to the point of order, and it would be ruled out. At some future time I may have the opportunity to present it in proper shape to the House, have it referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and have it come up for consideration. I protest now against the attempt made in this bill to cut down the pay of the letter-carriers as established by the act of February 21, and especially against the injustice, the indefensible injustice of endeavoring to cut it down during the time that has elapsed from the passage of that act till the present time.

If in order, I will yield the balance of my time to my colleague from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BINGHAM.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

Here the committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate was communicated by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 375) in relation to juries, and to repeal sections 801, 820, and 821, and part of 800 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I was not present during the discussion of this bill yesterday, but upon reading the record this morning of the debate which then occurred, I desire now to correct what I would then have attempted to correct had I been present. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] who has charge of this bill made this statement:

I had occasion to examine the English estimates the other day, and I find the English government pay their letter-carriers, all allowances included, at the commencement of the service $275 a year, and it takes twelve years' faithful service, through summer and winter, to get up to $400 a year, which is the maximum.

I have simply this to say in reference to the declaration of the gentleman, that the letter-carrier services of the two governments are in no respect parallel. I will endeavor to show you wherein they differ, and wherein the English service, even with its low compensation, is a service better paid and more desirable as a field for employment than service under the American system.

First, the English letter-carrier only delivers the mails, he does not collect them. The American letter-carrier carries his bag of mail matter on his route and from his route collects the mail from every box and carries it back to the post-office, thus performing a double labor. Second, the English letter-carrier has his clothing furnished him; the American letter-carrier furnishes his own clothing.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I know the gentleman does not want to misstate me. I included in my statement the allowance for clothing.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state that on page 331 of Her Majesty's Mails, the only available authority I can reach upon the subject, will be found the statement that "letter-carriers are furnished with uniforms."

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I stated the matter just as it was.

Mr. BINGHAM. Again, during illness the English letter-carrier is attended by a government physician, and is not docked for loss of time when his excuse is an acceptable one. The American letter-carrier is docked for every day of his absence, and medical attendance must be paid for from his own salary. The letter-carrier enters the service in England at sixteen years of age. Under the present regulations of the Post-Office Department of this country as issued but a short time since—and I desire to call the attention of my friend from New York [Mr. McCOOK] to this statement, for he referred yesterday to the large body of soldiers in the letter-carrier service—the present regulations of the Post-Office Department limit the ages between which persons can be employed in that service at from twenty-one to thirty-five years. No man to-day of middle-life, who fought during the late war, is eligible for employment in the letter-carrier service of the United States. I desire to state that I concur entirely with my friend from Ohio [Mr. MONROE] who in effect declared yesterday that the service of the letter-carrier literally takes the "pith and heart out of a man's life." He must be possessed of youth and physical vigor to stand the severe labor which the service requires, and when worn out is turned adrift. In England the letter-carrier gives no bond, nor is he required to deliver money, valuable, or registered letters, a responsibility which is thrown upon our letter-carriers, because they are under bonds, and their bondsmen are obligated for their faithful performance of duty in the delivery of mail matter.

In England the hours of labor are but ten a day, and the letter-carrier does not work on Sunday. In this country, in many cities of the United States, the least number of hours of service is twelve; in the city of Philadelphia it averages fourteen hours, and the men are employed two hours in the post-office on Sunday, and have to make a four-hour collection Sunday night.

In England the letter-carrier is allowed to accept fees or gratuities, and in many cases they receive large gratuities. By a recent order of the Post-Office Department of this country no carrier in our service is allowed to accept from the generous people on his route even a Christmas offering, although he may have rendered faithful service during the entire year.

In England the letter-carrier is pensioned or given a superannuated allowance at a certain age or when disabled for service. Not so with our letter-carriers. It has been the rare exception that any allowance has been made them. During my experience of six years in charge of the Philadelphia post-office I was enabled to secure but one man an allowance during his sickness caused by a fall, resulting in a broken limb, while he was in the discharge of his duty. Whatever may be the injury sustained, there is no regulation which allows the Post-Office Department to give a letter-carrier pay for the time he is absent from duty.

Again, in England the letter-carriers are assisted by a life-insurance policy; no such system exists in our country. In England they are allowed a furlough of two weeks every year, during which their pay continues. In the American service a letter-carrier is not allowed one day's absence with pay.

Again, for the information of the committee, from such records as I have been able to find upon the subject, the report of the postmaster-general of the British service, the statement is made that the London office alone has upon its superannuated roll eight hundred employés who are paid their annual stipend.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. That does not mean eight hundred letter-carriers only, but letter-carriers and employés. The letter-carriers get $100 a year after being worn out in the service.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is better than nothing.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Certainly, and so $400 a year is better than nothing.

Mr. BINGHAM. A great deal better. The gentleman from Illinois took exception to a statement which was made on this floor that following out the provisions of the act of February 21, 1879, would require the establishment of some sixty-five letter-carrier offices.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. No, sir; I did not state that.

Mr. BINGHAM. What did the gentleman state?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I said that it would require the establishment of thirty or thirty-one additional offices.

Mr. BINGHAM. So much the better for my illustration.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I said that with a very little effort the gross revenues could be made to extend the system to sixty-five offices.

Mr. BINGHAM. That will cover the point I desire to make. I merely propose, as the gentleman has seen proper to compare our service with the service of the United Kingdom, to make this statement: that free-delivery service has been established (by the last available report of the Postmaster-General of the United Kingdom) for the first time in five hundred and thirty-one new places, and the free deliveries in six hundred and twenty-two places have been increased in number or otherwise improved. My purpose is to show by this statement of facts the extent and generous administration of the foreign service where it has been established many years, and the limited location of the service under our system. Sixty-five offices the gentleman regards as an unreasonable extension. Not so on the other side, where five hundred and thirty-one were located in one year.

A little further on the gentleman makes this statement: he alleges that there are auxiliary carriers located in New York and Philadelphia. There are auxiliary carriers located in New York, but there are none in Philadelphia.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. They are reported to me by the Auditor as being located in Philadelphia.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have already stated as to the number and the hours the carriers are employed, which is the point I intended to cover, and to show that the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCOOK] was not in error when he stated that the carriers in that State worked twelve hours a day.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I do not suppose that the gentleman is desirous of leading the House into error.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman in his remarks of yesterday makes the statement that the average pay of the clerks is $775 per annum, being less than the carrier's pay. I desire to make clear the gentleman's remark, and it is that that compensation refers to the entire service. Further, I wish to say for the gentleman's information, and for the information of the House, that the pay of the clerks at letter-carrier offices is between $900 and $1,000, with this difference, that no clerk works over eight hours unless he is paid for extra time, and every carrier works from twelve to sixteen hours a day.

I do not think the gentleman desires to make a reflection on the administration of the Post-Office Department, but when he states that the post-office officials to-day send out their employés,—"the Toms, Dicks, and Harrys," as he states,—"to buy stamps at offices, in order that the revenues of their offices may be increased," he refers to an abuse that the present administration of the Post-Office Department has corrected and is correcting to-day.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The gentleman does not desire to misrepresent me, I am sure.

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. If I occupy any of the gentleman's time, I will yield him five minutes of my time.

The Post-Office Department did meet the difficulty about the sale of stamps in small offices some time ago, but we changed the law, and now they are paid by cancellation.

I said that the small offices could get a supply of stamps from the large offices as well as in Washington, in fact they practically do it.

Mr. BINGHAM. As I understand the law, if the postmaster, for the purpose either of increasing his compensation or bringing his office within the provisions of any act of Congress, does that, the Post-Office Department would arrest the official and deprive him of his commission.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. But in the large offices the pay cannot be increased in that way, because it is limited.

Mr. BINGHAM. I clearly understand that; but we are talking of the small offices, where the gentleman stated that the postmaster "intended to work up the gross revenues of the office to $20,000 a year," so as to come under the provision of the existing law and become a letter-carrier office. And now one point in regard to my own city. The gentleman states that there is a large surplus in New York and a small one in Philadelphia, Boston, and San Francisco. In regard to Philadelphia a surplus of $191,000 was received from the carrier service alone last year, and there is every probability of a larger income from that service next year. Now, Mr. Chairman, that surplus income of $191,000 is more than sufficient to pay the deficit charged to the Post-Office Department from the gentleman's own State, Illinois. His own State is deficient in meeting the expenses of the service $128,000, whilst Philadelphia yielded a surplus revenue of $191,000 from the carrier service alone, and $583,582.63 from the general service, and I do not propose to allow the sum of $191,000 to be belittled in this House.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BINGHAM.]

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the gentleman. I understood, from the gentleman who has control of the remaining time, that I was entitled to all the time remaining for discussion upon this question upon this side of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The understanding was that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was to have twenty-five minutes.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have been diverted from the general course of my argument, which I had carefully prepared in order to answer certain statements which have been made during the debate, and I desire the consideration of this committee for a few moments in order that I may rapidly reach the line of argument I had intended to follow. I do not think the bill presented by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] should receive the approval of this House. I regard it as crude in its several sections, and consider it unfair and inequitable in the compensations fixed for a large body of faithful and deserving employés of the Post-Office Department.

While I can readily understand the motive which doubtless has actuated the Committee on Appropriations to hasten to completion all legislation the necessities of the Government may require at this extra session of Congress, I cannot understand why legislation of a distinct detail and executive character should be presented by the Appropriations Committee which under the organization and rules of this House properly belongs to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. As well might the committee which the gentleman represents have indicated in the Army bill recently presented to this House the provisions that the several line and field officers of the Army should receive a larger or smaller compensation than existing law authorizes, or that the pay of a private soldier should be greater than at present fixed by law, or that the number and make-up of our battalions and regiments should be upon a different basis and under other conditions than those duly considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, reported to this House, and framed into enactments upon our statute-books. Should such a course have been adopted by the Committee on Appropriations, I am sure that every member of the Committee on Military Affairs would, to speak conservatively, protest against such unwarranted action and interference.

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads of the Forty-fifth Congress carefully considered a bill referred to that committee in the early days of the first session of that Congress, and after a thorough, critical, and careful amendment and examination into the whole subject, wisely regarding the efficiency of the carrier service as well as the question of justice and fair compensation to the employés of the postal service, reported a bill to that Congress which after general debate passed through the several stages of legislation required by the Constitution and stands to-day upon the statute-book as the law governing the carrier service. This bill became a law upon the 21st day of February last, a little more than three months ago, and now we have reported from the Committee on Appropriations the bill presented by the gentleman from Illinois for the consideration of this House which, in each and every section, either modifies, changes, or annuls the provisions of the bill which, reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, passed the last Congress less than one hundred days ago by the convincing and intelligent vote of 151 yeas to 51 nays in the House and 26 yeas to 16 nays in the Senate. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, if a radical change is necessary in the detail and executive administration of the carrier service of the Post-Office Department, or if a radical change is absolutely necessary in the compensation of a large body of Government employés of the aforesaid Department, common courtesy, to say the least, would commend the examination and consideration of this broad question to the committee to which under the rules of this House the whole subject properly belongs—your Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. And more especially, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the law of 1879 has not been tested, and therefore it cannot be condemned as unwise legislation. However, setting aside the courtesies due and prerogatives belonging to that committee, the bill before us contains so many unfair and unjust provisions that I will occupy the attention of this House in an endeavor to make clear the exceptions and objections which I file to the passage of this bill.

The free-delivery or carrier service of the Post-Office Department needs no defense or generous commendation at my hands. I cordially indorse the sentiments of the gentleman from Ohio as uttered in this debate. Its convenience and necessary existence to the perfection of our postal service is familiar to every member of this House. Meeting a great want in our central cities and large towns, it has grown and developed during the few years of its operations to such an extent that in the last fiscal year it returned a revenue of upward of $628,000 clear of all expenses, (see report Postmaster-General for 1878, page 43.) This service is established in eighty-eight cities of the Union, of which number sixty offices pay a large net revenue to the Government. The four great post-offices of New York City, Philadelphia, Boston, and San Francisco in the last fiscal year gave a net revenue to the Post-Office Department of over $1,100,000 from the carrier service alone. In other words, the paying offices where free delivery is established met all the expenses of the entire carrier service wherever established, and in addition yielded a profit or revenue of upward of $628,000 during the last year. Every indication or report thus far received by the Department for the present fiscal year leads to the conclusion that by virtue of growth the revenue from this service will be largely in excess of the last fiscal year.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I give the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy.

Certainly this is a service that demands the wisest and most considerate legislation, and when protected by the fostering enactments of the last Congress, should be allowed to return its great revenues and work out its usefulness, its efficiency, development, and growth.

The Post-Office Department, in view of the neglect of Congress to make the necessary appropriations for the carrier service, under the act of February 21, 1879, is now operating under the old law of June 8, 1872, and the regulations of the Department based upon the same. The carrier service, under that law and regulation, is divided into offices of the first class where the population is one hundred thousand and upward, and into a second class where the population of the city is less than one hundred thousand.

Offices of the first class are located at the following cities: Boston, Massachusetts; Brooklyn, New York; Buffalo, New York; Detroit, Michigan; Louisville, Kentucky; Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Newark, New Jersey; New York, New York; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Providence, Rhode Island; Saint Louis, Missouri; Washington, District of Columbia; Baltimore, Maryland; Chicago, Illinois; Cincinnati, Ohio; New Orleans, Louisiana; San Francisco, California; Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and Cleveland, Ohio.

The total number of carriers is reported by the superintendent of the free-delivery service to be 2,346; carriers in cities of the first class, 1,854; carriers in cities of the second class, 492.

The act of February 21, 1879, reads as follows:

An act to fix the pay of letter-carriers.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That for the more equitable compensation of letter-carriers there shall be, in all cities which contain a population of seventy-five thousand or more, two classes of letter-carriers, to be fixed by the Postmaster-General.

SEC. 2. The salaries of carriers of the first class, who shall have been in service at least one year, shall be $1,000 per annum, and the salaries of the carriers of the second class shall be $800 per annum. In all cities containing a population of less than seventy-five thousand there shall be one class of letter-carriers, who shall receive a salary of $850 per annum.

The Postmaster-General has, under date of February 21, 1879, asked for a deficiency appropriation for the present fiscal year of $92,000, and under date of March 20, 1879, an appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, the sum of $415,000, in order that the provisions of the act of February 21, 1879, may be carried into effect. By the law under which the Post-Office Department is now operating the carrier service, the compensation paid to carriers in cities of the second class—that is, in cities containing less than one hundred thousand population—is as follows: upon appointment, $575, less 5 per cent., per annum; after one year's service, $675, less 5 per cent., per annum; after two years' service, $775, less 5 per cent., per annum.

Section 1 of the pending bill will pay these employés, from the 21st day of February last up to the 30th day of this month, by virtue of the deficiency asked for, at the rate of $850 per annum. In other words, the question of length of service is disregarded, and all carriers in cities of the second class will be paid at the rate of $850 per annum.

Section 5 of the pending bill goes into effect on the 1st day of July next, when these same carriers in cities of the second class who have just received by virtue of section 1 of the pending bill a compensation at the rate of $850 per annum are relegated without reason or cause to a compensation of $800 per annum. I do not object to the increase, or rather the carrying out of the provisions of the act of February 21, 1879, which gives these faithful, hard-working carriers $850 per annum. I consider that they deserve it, and the Committee on Appropriations but comply with the law when they provide for the deficiency. But it is the inconsistency—I do not think I use too harsh a term when I say cruel discrimination—which the following sections would enact that I earnestly object to. Not a single office the carrier force of which the gentleman's bill in section 1 so generously and legally provides for pays a revenue to the Government, yet the gentleman concedes their pay under the act of February, 1879, which is an increase, and decreases the pay of that very large body of men employed at offices in cities of the first class, where the revenue covers the entire expense of the service and yields the great profit to the Department which I have before indicated.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I ask to interrupt the gentleman again. I will yield him further time, because I want to get this matter right before the House. In the respect just referred to by him the committee recommend no legislation. They recommend an appropriation for the deficiency. There is a deficiency in cities having less than seventy-five thousand population because they have only one class of letter-carriers. But in cities containing over seventy-five thousand population the law provides for two classes of carriers—a first and a second class, the first class at $1,000 each, the second at $800. Now, the Postmaster-General has never executed the law in that particular. There is no carrier belonging specifically to the first class or the second class. On the contrary, the Postmaster-General has gone on and paid nearly all these employés $831. There is no deficiency, because that provision of the law never went into operation. If the gentleman undertakes to make an appropriation now to carry out the existing law he will have to provide for paying a part of these carriers, those who belong to the first class, $1,000 a year; and he will have to take from the salaries of others a little over $30 a year in order to bring them down to $800. The committee does not seek to legislate in reference to that matter.

Mr. BINGHAM. In response to the gentleman as to the point submitted I will say that if the Postmaster-General has seen fit, in the exercise of a wise judgment, not to carry out the provisions of the law, it is not right by the retroactive legislation such as this bill embraces in section 2 to deprive these letter-carriers of that to which they are in equity entitled. If section 2 of the gentleman's bill be enacted, these carriers will have no remedy because you make legal the pay they have been receiving in the past. When you provide for increasing the pay of carriers at second-class offices from $575 to $850, I cannot see why you should not provide equally for giving to carriers at the first-class offices the pay to which the law entitles them. If there is a deficiency, that deficiency can be appropriated for at any time.

I say the gentleman's bill accepts the compensation of the act of 1879 for carriers of the second-class cities and in section 2 forbids and disregards the provisions of the same act for carriers in cities of the first class.

Carriers who are now receiving $575 per annum in cities of the second class are increased to $850 per annum, and carriers now receiving $675 per annum in cities of the first class are continued at the old compensation and not increased.

Section 4 of the bill reads as follows:

That letter-carriers in cities containing a population of seventy-five thousand or more shall be divided into two classes, known as first and second class respectively, and the first class shall, at all times in each city, be as nearly equal in numbers to the second class as possible. The salary of letter-carriers of the first class shall be $900 and of the second class $800 per annum respectively.

Gentlemen will bear in mind that the act of February 21, 1879, gives carriers of the first class, after one year of service, $1,000 per annum, and upon appointment $800 per annum. Carriers in cities of the first class, under the law and regulation which the Department is now obeying, receive upon appointment $675, less 5 per cent., per annum; after one year's service $775, less 5 per cent., per annum; after two years' service $875, less 5 per cent., per annum. Gentlemen will observe that the provisions of the bill as offered by the distinguished member from Illinois extend no such generous consideration to carriers in the great first-class cities as section 1 of the bill extends to carriers in the second-class cities where the law of February 21, 1879, is to be observed and obeyed. Under the present bill every carrier in a second-class city, the compensation being fixed at $800, has an increase of pay. Surely if the benefits of the act of February 21, 1879, are to be extended to one class of carriers they should be extended to all classes. Now, gentlemen, mark the severity of section 4 of the pending bill, wherein it declares "that the carriers of the first class receiving $900 per annum shall be as nearly equal in number as possible to the carriers of the second class receiving $800 per annum."

It affects the several cities which I shall enumerate as follows:

Cities.	Number employed at $675, less 5 per cent.	Number employed at $775, less 5 per cent.	Number employed at $875, less 5 per cent.	Number of carriers.	Number that will be reduced from $875 to $800 if the bill passes.

* Fifty carriers employed at $975, less 5 per cent., (provided by act of Congress.)

In San Francisco, California, where by a special law the Department is allowed to pay an annual compensation of less than $1,000 per annum for the entire force and by regulation has fixed that compensation at $975, under the gentleman's bill twenty-five of these men would be reduced $175 per annum, and the remaining twenty-five would be reduced $75 per annum.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Allow me to interrupt the gentleman at this point, because I want to get the facts before the House. While it is true, as he says, that the pay of a small number of these carriers would be reduced from $831 to $800, the same is true under the law which we propose to repeal.

Mr. BINGHAM. But the existing law gives a man $200 additional when he receives his promotion, thus making up the compensation for the loss of $31 for a year or two.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Under our bill the carrier will get $100 additional when he gets his promotion, instead of $200; and I think $100 enough.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let me give the gentleman an illustration of the working of the bill. In Philadelphia alone fifty-four carriers would be reduced from $875 to $800.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. No, sir; $831 is the pay they get now.

Mr. BINGHAM. I understand that; the 5 per cent. reduction applies to all the figures I submit. Eight hundred and seventy-five dollars I make as the compensation, because that is the figure fixed, less 5 per cent., by the recent order of the Department. Fifty-four are reduced in Philadelphia from $875 to $800. Now, when they get their increase under the law of February last they will get $200. In two years the ratio of change of carriers in the Philadelphia post-office, twenty-five each year, would promote every one of these men, and they could afford to give up this small amount, $31 per annum, as the gentleman desires me to state it. When their promotion came they would receive a fair and equitable compensation.

You will observe not only how unjust and cruel the provisions of the pending bill are, but, while the recent legislation of February last wisely increased the compensation of all the carriers employed in every class of the service, this bill is presented reducing the carriers' compensation in the large cities where the work is 50 per cent. more severe and 50 per cent. greater in mail matter handled, and where the revenue that supports the entire service is received, and where the net profit of $628,000 is turned from and into the Treasury, and increases the compensation of every carrier in cities of the second class where no net revenue is received to support the service.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I will yield to the gentleman two minutes of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. There are only five minutes remaining.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Very well; I will yield two of the five minutes and retain three for myself.

Mr. BINGHAM. Thanking the gentleman again for his courtesy I will conclude my remarks by calling the attention of the committee to section 3 of the pending bill, which limits the establishment of the free-delivery service to cities containing a population of not less than thirty thousand within its corporate limits. The act of 1879 re-enacts the law of 1873 and continues the establishment of the carrier service in all cities containing a population of not less than twenty thousand within their corporate limits. To-day, at this very time, thirty-one cities, possibly under the law sixty-five communities, are clamoring at the doors of the Post-Office Department for the free-delivery service. All claim to come within the provisions of the act of 1879 and are entitled under the law to the conveniences and business benefits of the free service. The gentleman's bill deprives them of this right and by the simple change of twenty thousand into thirty thousand inhabitants will continue to deprive them until their populations reach the greater number. I venture the declaration that no one of these many cities will reach the thirty thousand population within the next ten years. Comment is unnecessary.

I cannot believe that either the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, who presents this bill, or the Committee on Appropriations, could have known and understood the full effect and unjust discrimination of the proposed legislation.

I protest against the passage of the bill, because it offends the spirit and the letter of all recent legislation upon the subject, because its provisions are inconsistent, and because its every section is unjust, unfair, and unwise. Let the Committee on Appropriations present a bill to this House, or let this Committee of the Whole House amend the pending bill appropriating the deficiency asked for by the Postmaster-General in his several communications, permitting the act of February 21, 1879, to remain intact, and you will have given consistency, force, and standing to the carrier service of the Post-Office Department, a service, I regret to say, which has heretofore been largely impaired in its usefulness by a too frequent and often unnecessary change in the law governing and controlling this service.

Should it so happen that gentlemen on the other side of this House should ever come into power and have the control of the several departments of the Government, I hope an amendment will be submitted and carried following the standard of the English service, which the republican administration of the Government has been endeavoring to follow ever since 1864 when the letter-carrier system was established, so that good, faithful, hard-working, honest employés of the service shall be retained in office during good behavior. If such an amendment had come from the Committee on Appropriations, representing the dominant control in the business of this House, I unqualifiedly state to the gentleman from Illinois that to that amendment I would give my hearty consent, and say amen to its enactment into law.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the three minutes remaining of the time allowed for general debate are entirely sufficient for my purpose. I only wish to say in conclusion of this general debate that the bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations pays the letter-carriers $800 a year in all cities of less than seventy-five thousand population, and in all cities of more than seventy-five thousand it pays them eight or nine hundred dollars a year, which is 7 per cent. more than they are getting to-day. It is 7 per cent. more than they have received for years, and in my judgment it is quite enough. It is much better salary than is paid to other employés of the Government.

I shall ask the House to adopt the bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations in that respect. If, however, it should not be adopted, then I shall ask the House to travel the other road and walk up like men and appropriate between four and five hundred thousand dollars at one stroke, which is the amount necessary to carry out what I believe to be extravagant and unnecessary legislation.

I now call for the reading of the bill by sections for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate has closed and the bill is now open to amendment and debate under the five-minute rule. The Clerk will read the first section of the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. After that is done I desire to submit a substitute for the whole bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute will be received and considered as pending, but under the rules cannot be voted on until the original text has been perfected.

Mr. KEIFER. That is all I desire, that the substitute shall be read and considered as pending at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish the substitute read?

Mr. KEIFER. I do.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Let the text of the original bill be first perfected. It will save time if we go on with the bill in the regular parliamentary order.

Mr. KEIFER. It is quite in order, however, to submit the substitute at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute will be received but will not be acted on until the bill has been perfected.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. GARFIELD. Whenever a bill is open to amendment it is perfectly competent to offer amendments to the text of the original bill. Those have to be acted on first before the substitute is voted on.

Mr. COX. The substitute will remain pending.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire it to be read at this time.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Then I suppose fifteen or twenty substitutes can be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That, in addition to the amounts heretofore appropriated, the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely:

For payment to letter-carriers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and to extend the service of such carriers for said year under the provisions of the act approved February 21, 1879, entitled "An act to fix the pay of letter-carriers," in addition to the sum heretofore appropriated, $353,000. For payment of increased salary to letter-carriers under provisions of existing law for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, $71,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute is not pending until the consideration of the bill by sections is completed. The first paragraph will now be read.

The Clerk read the first paragraph of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That, in addition to the amounts heretofore appropriated, the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely:

For payment of letter-carriers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, $131,900.

No amendment was offered to the first paragraph.

The Clerk read the second paragraph of section 1, as follows:

For payment of increased salary to letter-carriers in cities containing a population of less than seventy-five thousand inhabitants, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, under the provisions of the act of February 21, 1879, entitled "An act to fix the pay of letter-carriers," $25,000.

The committee proposed the following amendment:

In line 12, after "seventy-five thousand," strike out the word "inhabitants."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 2 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That all payments heretofore made to letter-carriers in cities containing a population of seventy-five thousand or more inhabitants since the approval of said act, be, and the same are, declared legal, and shall be continued at the same rate until the 30th day of June, 1879, and in full discharge for the services of such letter-carriers.

The committee proposed the following amendment:

In line 3 strike out the word "inhabitants."

The Clerk read section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That letter-carriers may be employed for the free delivery of mail matter as frequently as the public service may require in any city containing a population of not less than thirty thousand inhabitants within its corporate limits: Provided, That this section shall not affect the free delivery in cities where it is now established

The committee proposed the following amendment:

In line 4 strike out the word "inhabitants."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. I move to strike out the section as amended. This section limits the cities to which letter-carriers may be appointed and which may have a free-delivery system to those containing thirty thousand inhabitants instead of those having twenty thousand as at present. I am opposed to that and ask the House to strike out this section.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Let the vote be taken.

The question being put, there were—ayes 77, noes 19.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. A quorum has not voted.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers and appoints the gentleman from Texas, Mr. MILLS, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON.

Before the count of the affirmative vote was completed,

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois said: I do not ask for further count.

So the section, as amended, was stricken out.

The Clerk read section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. That letter-carriers in cities containing a population of seventy-five thousand or more shall be divided into two classes, known as first class and second class respectively. And the first class shall at all times in each city be as nearly equal in numbers to the second class as possible. The salaries of letter-carriers of the first class shall be $900 and of the second class $800 per annum, respectively; and after the original classification of the two classes of carriers, appointments of letter-carriers shall be made to the second class, and appointments to the first class shall be made by promotion for efficiency from the second class.

No amendment was offered to this section.

The Clerk read section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. That salaries of letter-carriers in cities containing a population of less than seventy-five thousand inhabitants shall be $800 per annum each.

The committee proposed the following amendment:

In line 2 strike out the word "inhabitants."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] who has the bill in charge, a question. What is the salary of the carriers as now established by law?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The salary of the carriers as now established by law is $850 in cities containing a population under seventy-five thousand, and it is $800 for one class and $1,000 for another class in cities containing a population of over seventy-five thousand. The salaries they are getting, in fact, however, the new law not having been put in force, is about 7 per cent. less than the salaries fixed by this bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 4, lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "$900 and of the second class $800 per annum, respectively," and insert in lieu thereof "the same compensation received for similar services prior to the 21st of February last.

And in section 5 strike out "$800" and insert "the same compensation received for similar services prior to the 21st of February last."

Mr. BAKER. I make the point of order that the fourth section has been passed and that it is only the fifth section which is now before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained as to section 4. Does any portion of the gentleman's amendment apply to the fifth section?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I desire to make it apply to the fifth section.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Let the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 5 strike out "$800" and insert "the same compensation received for similar services prior to 21st February last."

Mr. MCMILLIN. Being 7½ per cent. less than is proposed by this bill.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read section 6, as follows:

SEC. 6 That auxiliary carriers may be appointed in any city at a salary not to exceed $400 per annum; and they shall, in case of vacancy, be promoted, as the Postmaster-General may by regulation provide, to the grade of letter-carriers.

The committee proposed the following amendment:

Strike out the words "and they shall, in case of vacancy, be promoted, as the Postmaster-General may by regulation provide, to the grade of letter-carriers."

Mr. STONE. I move to strike out the whole section.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the amendment of the committee.

The question being put,

The CHAIRMAN stated that the "noes" appeared to prevail.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to be heard upon that question for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The House has already voted on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to be heard upon the motion to strike out the entire section

Mr. STONE. I withdraw my motio .

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I would like to be heard a moment. I drew this section originally as it appears without the amendment. On consulting with the superintendent of the free-delivery system he desired that that portion of the section which the committee proposed to strike out should be stricken out or modified for the reason that if it was left in it would embarrass the Department where they employ auxiliary carriers by giving a man a claim to be promoted to the first vacancy, whereas the vacancy may be in station "L" and he may be employed in station "A" and may understand station "A" very well, and know nothing of station "L." Upon that suggestion this amendment was made and I hope it will be concurred in.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would state for the information of the committee that the law of February 21, 1879, section 3, reads as follows:

Upon the recommendation of the postmaster of any city, the Postmaster-General may establish a third grade of letter-carriers known as auxiliaries, who shall be paid at the rate of $400 per annum.

Now, the only city where auxiliaries are employed is the city of New York, and the rule of the Department is to promote an auxiliary carrier when he is a fit and capable man for promotion.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Then you consent that the amendment should be agreed to?

Mr. BINGHAM. The law covers the section. I am against every section in the bill.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. But you think the amendment is right, striking out the latter clause of this section?

Mr. BINGHAM. I think it is wholly unnecessary, as the law now covers the case.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. But I propose to amend the law.

Mr. STONE. The gentleman does not amend it.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I want to get the law in proper shape, and I am amending it. If it is made perfect that is the end of it.

Mr. O'NEILL. Why go through all this trouble?

Mr. BINGHAM. I claim that the existing law covers this entire section.

Mr. COX. There is no doubt about that.

The question was taken on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations; and on a division there were—ayes 8, noes 61.

Mr. BAKER. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. O'NEILL. No such point was made yesterday, and I consider it unfair that it should be made now.

Mr. BAKER. The gentleman may consider it as he pleases.

Mr. COX. My friend from Indiana belongs to the Committee on Appropriations, and we want to help them with their business.

Mr. BAKER. Then let the gentlemen be present and make a quorum.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Indiana is usually generous.

Mr. BAKER. I certainly mean to be generous, especially to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX. Do not make the point on your own committee.

Mr. BAKER. I do not consider that the Committee on Appropriations owns the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint tellers, no quorum having voted.

Mr. STONE. I think we will accept the amendment rather than break up a quorum.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That substitute carriers may be appointed at the nominal salary of $1 per annum, and they shall receive the pro rata pay of the carrier or auxiliary carrier whose route they may be required to serve; and they shall be promoted as the Postmaster-General may by regulation provide, in case of vacancy, to auxiliary carriers.

The Committee on Appropriations reported an amendment to strike out all of the section after the word "serve," as follows:

And they shall be promoted as the Postmaster-General may by regulation provide, in case of vacancy, to auxiliary carriers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 8, as follows:

SEC. 8. That sections 4, 5, 6, and 7 of this act shall be in force on and after July 1, 1879; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

No amendments were offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] as a substitute for the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that the substitute is intended to make the appropriations necessary to carry out existing laws; it leaves out all of the general legislation proposed in this bill. Now, the statement made by the Postmaster-General in a communication which he sent to the Senate some time ago in relation to the letter-carrier law which was approved by the President February 21, 1879, makes the various estimates necessary to carry out that law. The substitute is a mere appropriation bill which I have offered. It undertakes no legislation at all, it leaves out all the legislation contained in the pending bill. In the estimate of the Postmaster-General he states that there will be required for the remainder of the fiscal year, 1879, $71,000 to pay increased salaries and $21,000 to extend the service, making $92,000. In the appropriation as provided by my substitute I put in this $71,000, omitting the $21,000 for extending the services in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, for the reason that I am informed at the Post-Office Department that in the remainder of this year it will be impossible to extend the service, so that the $21,000 is omitted in the appropriation.

The Postmaster-General states that for the next fiscal year, that is, the year ending June 30, 1880, there will be required, in order to extend the service and for the increased pay of carriers, the sum of $353,000 in addition to the $2,000,000 already appropriated, if one-half of the carriers in cities of the first class are paid an annual salary of $1,000 each, and $415,000 if two-thirds of them are paid $1,000 each, as provided in section 4 of the law of last session. In my substitute I have included the smaller sum of $353,000, which, according to the estimate of the Postmaster-General, will enable him to pay only one-half of the carriers in cities of the first class at the rate of $1,000 a year each.

I understand that there are many members on this floor who think we should make provision for the maximum number of two-thirds of the carriers at $1,000 a year each, as provided for in section 4 of the act of February 21, 1879. That section provides that at no time shall the number of carriers in the first-class cities receiving the maximum salary of $1,000 be more than two-thirds or less than one-half of the whole number of carriers actually in service in the cities in which they are employed. For my part, I do not think these letter-carriers are overpaid. I would not, personally, object to paying two-thirds of them at the rate of $1,000 per annum. I have, however, offered my substitute so as to provide for paying one-half only at that rate, and I trust the substitute will be adopted.

Mr. BAKER. I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. I have not yet yielded the floor. I desire to say that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] made a suggestion to me to change the sum appropriated by my substitute from $353,000 to $415,000. If he desires to move such an amendment I will yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. COX. I move to amend the substitute so as to make the amount $415,000, which will allow two-thirds of the carriers to receive $1,000 each. We all understand it; it is the maximum allowed under the law of last session. These carriers deserve it, and I am surprised that my friend from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] should drop down, when we have so good a case. I now yield to my friend from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER.]

Mr. BAKER. Thanking the gentleman from New York, I will take the floor in my own right.

Mr. COX. Well, now, that is good. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAKER. I desire to say that there is no one more anxious to see a wisely regulated postal system, including the free-delivery system, established in this country than I am. But I want to warn gentlemen that they are taking a course which in my judgment will destroy their system, and justly do so.

Already of the eighty-eight free-delivery cities in the country but four pay the expenses of the free-delivery system. Hundreds of thousands of dollars are annually taken from the tax-payers of the country for the purpose of furnishing a luxury to those who live in small towns of only 30,000 inhabitants. And if the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] shall be adopted, $415,000 more of the hard-earned money of the tax-payers will be wrung from them in order to extend this system to towns of only 20,000 inhabitants.

Mr. STONE. Will the gentleman yield to me——

Mr. BAKER. Not in my five minutes. I desire to say that with the law of last winter carried out this free-delivery system will be extended to from seventy to ninety other cities, and hundreds of thousands of dollars will be drawn from the hard earnings of the tax-payers in order to carry out that law.

Let me say to gentlemen that they are to-day inviting an answer to the question whether or not the rural commoners have any rights as against these city gentlemen who are asking that the horny-handed laborers of the country shall pay out of their hard earnings in order to give them the benefit of this free-delivery system. That is a question, gentlemen, which you are inviting.

Wherever the population in your cities is such that the people cannot without great inconvenience go to the post-offices and obtain their mails, I am ready to see this free-delivery system extended; but to extend it to towns of only ten thousand inhabitants, as it can be done under this law—and by the law every town of twenty thousand inhabitants is entitled to it—will be simply an outrage on a people who are already burdened with taxation almost too onerous to be borne.

I say to gentlemen who are in favor of this system, who are anxious to have appointed campaign electioneerers in their little cities and towns, that they had better not go too far in pressing this matter. I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] that there are people not only upon the prairies of Illinois, to whom he so sneeringly alluded yesterday, but upon the prairies all over the West, who when this question is submitted to them, whether or not they shall wade through the mud and travel through the heat and cold for miles to obtain their own letters, and at the same time be taxed for the purpose of extending this free-delivery system to little hamlets of ten thousand or fifteen thousand inhabitants, as it can be extended and will be under the operation of this law, which fixes $20,000 of revenue as the amount to entitle a town to this system, I say when that question is presented to them some gentlemen who seem so red-hot here in favor of forcing this through will be called to account.

I am astonished that we have not heard a word said on the question of retrenchment and economy on the other side of the House. I am amazed that the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] who in season and out of season has blown beautiful blasts on that sonorous trumpet of his in the interest of economy and reform, has not made an assault upon this proposition. But no; doubtless some of his constituents are to be served by forcing through a measure that could not get through unless, like the log-rolling river and harbor bill, the conflicting and varying elements of the country are thrown into a conglomerated heat, and then the measure is rushed through in order that every district in the United States may have a little slice of the pork out of Uncle Samuel's barrel.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would like to put an inquiry to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COX rose.

Mr. BAKER. It affords me pleasure to yield to my friend from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. COX. I will take the floor from my "horny-handed" friend, though I do not believe that the gentleman ever did a full old-fashioned day's work in his life.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. COX. I move to strike out the last word, simply to say that when the gentleman from Indiana undertakes to tell us that the people in New York City and our other large cities are not entitled to some kindly consideration in this business, he mistakes. In four cities we have more than $1,114,000 of surplus arising out of this free-delivery system.

Mr. BAKER. I apprehend that.

Mr. COX. You bow to that. Why do you not vote that way?

Mr. BAKER. I am going to vote for the free-delivery system in cities where it pays.

Mr. COX. You said you would yield to me, but you do not. [Laughter.] Nine hundred and sixty thousand dollars is the surplus of New York City. It pays. I made a mistake in stating the amount yesterday. The carriers there work about fourteen hours in getting through their deliveries. Yet the gentleman has not the kindness, or the courtesy, or the goodness, or the justice to take into consideration the real labor performed, so as to apply the old equitable rule of quantum meruit, and properly appropriate this money which is earned by the delivery system in New York and three other cities—San Francisco, Boston, Philadelphia, &c.—making, according to the return of the Postmaster-General, $1,114,460 surplus. Why can you not be just?

Mr. BAKER rose.

Mr. COX. Now, do not interrupt me.

Mr. BAKER. Why should this free-delivery system be applied to cities of twenty thousand people, where the system does not pay?

Mr. COX. We are making up the deficiency for your Indiana people by our New York labor. We are paying $200,000 extra for the delivery of letters in the State of Indiana; yet the gentleman gets up here without any blush and proposes to take our money—I do not say that he robs—he proposes to take the money earned by the men who deliver letters in New York City and apply it to Indiana. Sir, [addressing Mr. BAKER,] there is a deficiency in your State. You do not deny it; you look me square in the eye and do not deny it. [Laughter.] Now, I am trying to get this House to vote the larger and true sum. If it declines to vote what I propose, then I will fall back on the proposition of my gallant friend from Ohio and take the next best thing.

How does your Committee on Appropriations appear here to-day? "Carrying out existing law," are they? Opposed to "riders," are they?

Mr. BAKER. Who amended Rule 120?

Mr. COX, (to Mr. BAKER.) Do not say a word.

Mr. BAKER. Be fair about that. Let us know who did it.

Mr. COX. Well, Rule 120 was amended by a statesman; that is enough.

Mr. BAKER. I want to know the name of that distinguished statesman.

Mr. COX. It has a sibilant sound in it; if the gentleman will look for it he can find it. The gentleman from Indiana undertakes to say that the existing law shall not be carried out. He comes in here seeking to repeal the existing law. Yet he is a member of the Committee on Appropriations—a republican member!

Mr. BAKER rose.

Mr. COX. Now, sit down. The point is that here is a law which was passed in this House by a two-thirds vote.

A MEMBER. Three-fourths.

Another MEMBER. Four-fifths.

Mr. COX. Yes, it was passed in this House by an overwhelming vote, and was indorsed with emphasis by the Senate. The gentleman from Indiana himself gave it a quasi indorsement; he has not opened his head about it from that time to this; but now he comes in here and talks about his "horny hand." He proposes to strike down the men who pay for the delivery of letters in his own State of Indiana. He is guilty of the unkindness, the unblushing—I will not say insolence, I will not say impudence—he is guilty of the unstatesmanlike conduct of coming in with a proposition to take from us our money and apply it to Indiana; and this is coupled with a proposition that the existing law shall not be carried out, but shall be repealed indirectly by a rider. Why, sir, such riders ought to be overthrown if they do not dismount. [Laughter.]

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I move to amend by inserting the following:

Provided, That there shall be no difference in the classification or pay of mail-carriers in any part of the United States.

Mr. KEIFER. Is that in order? I make the point of order that this is an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman from Tennessee wishes to speak I will withdraw my amendment, and he can renew it.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not understand that the gentleman from New York withdraws his amendment to strike out of my substitute $353,000 and insert $415,000.

Mr. COX. I offer that amendment in good faith. I want a vote on it.

Mr. KEIFER. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee cannot be in order until a vote is taken upon the amendment of the gentlemen from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments pending, and it is not in order to offer a third.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. As soon as it is in order I will ask the privilege of offering this amendment.

I desire to say a word in answer to the statement of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HAWLEY. The floor belongs to those who are opposed to the amendment of the gentleman on the opposite side.

Mr. STONE. I suppose so.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have been trying to get the floor.

Mr. McCOOK. So have I in every possible way, but I have not succeeded.

Mr. STONE. I am opposed to the amendment. The gentleman from New York desires a larger sum.

I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, one word in regard to the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER.] As he has shown the amount appropriated by his substitute is $424,000 only, being $71,000 to supply the deficiency for the present fiscal year, without extending the service beyond it, and $353,000 for the next fiscal year, making a total of $424,000 only for the two years. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] says this is an appropriation of $415,000 more than the bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BAKER. The gentleman misunderstands me. I said the change in the law made last winter operates as an increase of from four to five hundred thousand dollars—$415,000. I was not speaking of the increase made by the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio over the amount reported by the committee at all.

Mr. STONE. The gentleman is as far out of the way in that statement as in the other. Instead of taking $415,000 it only changes the bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations in the sum of $267,100. The bill reported by the committee appropriates $131,900 and $25,000, making $156,900, and deducting that from the amount contained in the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio, you have but $267,100 to carry into effect the law of last February.

Mr. BAKER. For how long?

Mr. STONE. For two years, for the fiscal year closing in 1879 and for the fiscal year closing in 1880.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. For one year and a fraction.

Mr. STONE. Yes; for one year and a fraction. That is true, for this fiscal year and for the next fiscal year. I wished only to call the attention of the committee to the fact that it does not increase in any such sum as was stated.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York withdraw his amendment?

Mr. COX. I do not. [Cries of "Vote! Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

Mr. COX. It ought to be adopted.

Amend the substitute by striking out "$353,000" and in lieu thereof inserting "$415,000."

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to strike out the last word; and, Mr. Chairman, I do so for the purpose of saying a single word on this subject. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] desires to put two-thirds of the letter-carriers in the larger cities on the larger salary, leaving the remaining one-third to be paid at the rate of $800. You will observe the law puts the letter-carriers in cities under seventy-five thousand population all in one grade down to $850. I do not see myself the justice of the law of February last in that regard nor the gentleman's amendment. I cannot see why the letter-carriers in the city of New York, or two-thirds of them, should have $1,000 a year, or $150 a year more than letter-carriers in cities under seventy-five thousand inhabitants. Those in cities under seventy-five thousand inhabitants work their twelve and fourteen hours a day precisely the same as those in cities of larger population.

A MEMBER. Because they have more to do.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I do not think they have any more to do than in cities of smaller population, where the houses usually are spread over more ground, and the carrier has a larger area to travel over. It is possible he may not start out with as large a bag of mail, but he has farther to travel. In the city of New York two blocks, possibly one, will furnish a carrier with all the work he can do. One would have no more work to do in a day than the other. Each works from twelve to fourteen hours a day, and one requires just as much intelligence and fidelity as the other. Rent may be higher, but other expenses of living are lower. I can see no other ground, therefore, for the gentleman's determination to have two-thirds of the men in the larger cities paid a hundred and fifty dollars a year more than the others than that given by the eminent broker of Wall street for stuttering more in New York than in Baltimore—because it was a larger city. [Laughter.]

Mr. FIELD. There is one reason why the salaries of letter-carriers should be higher in the larger than in the smaller cities. The rents are higher in the larger cities than they are in the smaller cities; and the cost of living is higher and the wages are higher. For the reasons which have been stated I am in favor of the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] and opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BINGHAM rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I withdraw it.

Mr. BINGHAM. I renew the amendment.

I simply want to say in answer to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] as to the amount of labor performed by the carriers in the first and second class cities between which by existing law there is a distinction of $150 in the maximum compensation, that the distinction has only reference to the maximum compensation, and that one-third or one-half of the carriers will be at a less compensation than the eight-hundred-and-fifty-dollar carriers in the second-class cities. The carriers in the second-class cities receive $850. In the larger cities those of one class receive $800 and those of the other class $1,000; the increase taking place on promotion.

But the point I want to make in answer to the gentleman from Connecticut is as to the amount of labor performed. The report of the Postmaster-General for the last year clearly sets forth the statistics upon that point. As to the ground traversed, the carrier in the first-class city may not traverse more ground, but he has frequently to go up to the fourth, fifth, and sixth stories of many of the houses, which is the hardest kind of work that devolves on him. But independently of that the statistics in the report of the Postmaster-General show, as regards the carrier service in Philadelphia and in New York—I will illustrate by those two cities the percentage running similarly as to the others—that each carrier handled in New York 403,358 pieces of mail matter; in other words, fifteen hundred pieces of mail matter a day; while in Philadelphia each carrier handled about eighteen hundred pieces of mail matter a day. In no city of the second class do they handle over eight hundred pieces of mail matter a day.

Mr. HAWLEY. Eight hundred?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX. That is so.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is all I wish to say.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I desire to state as a further explanation of the difference in the salaries of the letter-carriers that the reason which governed the committee in reporting the law in the shape in which it passed, was that in cities where carriers are not very numerous it is almost impossible to grade them into classes. For the carriers in those cities, therefore, the rate of salary was fixed at $850; while in the larger cities the first-class carrier gets $1,000, and the second-class carrier $800. It was thought the average compensation was substantially the same, taking into consideration the fact that in cities of the first class rents and other expenses of living were very much greater.

Mr. O'NEILL. I wish to say in reply to what has been said by my friend from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER,] of the Committee on Appropriations, that I would like to know where those horny-handed constituents of his, as he calls them, are, where those citizens of his district or State are who work by the day, day after day, who either by letter, petition, or personal interview have requested him to vote for this bill in the shape reported by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON?] I want to know where the citizen of this country is to be found who to-day does not want the mail and post-office facilities extended in every way so that he may be accommodated, whether by free delivery or not.

It may be very well for the gentleman, with a view to his own district or his own State, to make these statements. He may be experiencing some trouble there. The gentleman has made a fine electioneering speech to-day, but I do not want him to do his electioneering on this floor. I want him to point out where by petition or by letter he has heard any citizen of his State complain of the law passed on the 21st of February last.

I had thought that the passage of that act would have been the end of the question about the increase of pay of the letter-carriers. Does the gentleman not know that it will never be possible for the Post-Office Department to be carried on without a deficiency? The people of this country do not expect it. What they want is the extension of mail service. What the people of the large cities want is that the mail service shall be performed in such a way that it will provide the proper conveniences and facilities for the operations of business. And what the men in the country want is exactly the same thing.

Because the gentleman from Indiana may live in a town or a city where he can go to his post-office conveniently, does he want to deprive cities having a population of twenty thousand or upward of having the benefits of a system which has been a great success, and which furnishes more than a million dollars to pay for the deficiencies in the other parts of the service?

The whole argument is in favor of extension. If gentlemen want to repeal this act of February last let them attempt it fairly and squarely by a bill for that purpose instead of attempting it by indirection. However, if they propose to repeal it in this way, I think this Committee of the Whole had better now and at once settle the question forever, that we may pass to some other legislation. Why, sir, for years, year after year, in the Houses of which I have had the honor to be a member, we have fought for the proper compensation of letter-carriers and the extension of the free-delivery system; yet to-day gentlemen are endeavoring to break down that system. Now, I want to know who are the horny-handed men in the gentleman's district who are crying out "Down with taxation!" and for the purpose of depriving the people of an efficient mail service and letter-carriers of proper compensation?

Mr. BAKER. I move to strike out the last word. I suppose the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] is aware it sometimes happens that men who are serving on the floor of Congress have occasion to express their judgment in reference to matters of public concern without having a combination organized for the purpose of attempting to influence their judgment and their action, either through resolutions formulated in public meetings or by means of petitions gotten up and circulated by interested parties, or by correspondents. If the gentleman wants to know who are these "horny-handed" men that are opposed to this proposition I will tell him who are opposed to it; I will tell him what I believe the tax-payers, the laboring masses, on whose shoulders rests the fabric of our Government to-day, are in favor of. I believe they are in favor of extending the benefits of this law in respect to our postal system equally and alike to all, so that the tax-payer, however humble he may be, by his lowly fireside or on his little farm, shall enjoy the same equal laws as the man who lives in the district represented so elegantly and so eloquently by the witty gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Now, the question is whether or not there shall be one system of mail distribution for the mass of the people of this country, or whether there shall be an exceptional and privileged class for whose benefit the tax-payers are to appropriate money to extend this distribution in particular localities. I think the gentleman will find that there are "horny-handed" farmers not only in the West but in Pennsylvania who will say, and do say, that there should be a uniform law extending to all classes of the people the privileges of this postal system, and that if any class want special service, giving them the privilege of having their letters laid on their breakfast tables or gathered from six to twelve times a day, those men who have this privilege over and above the common benefits extended to all the tax-payers of the country should pay for this additional benefit. That is all I say. I say it is right and just that the city of New York, or any other city, if it enjoys this special privilege, should pay for it.

Mr. COX. We do pay for it, and we pay for a portion of the expenses of your mail service.

Mr. McCOOK. I make no pretense to any special information in regard to this matter, but as the free-delivery system was inaugurated in New York, and perhaps has met with its greatest success there, it appears to me, as one of the representatives of that city, that I cannot very well sit still when I hear a speech of the character made by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER.]

I do not know that the State of Indiana has any exclusive privilege to "horny-handed sons of labor." My own impression is, that in the city and State of New York, that indorse this system, we have as many honest laboring-men as they have in Indiana. I hope and believe, however, that no Representative of the State of New York would stand up and make an appeal in the manner in which the gentleman does, for the purpose of defeating the measure.

Now, so far as this bill is concerned, in order to give some slight idea of the magnitude of the labor of the carriers in the city of New York, it is only necessary to state that there are four hundred and forty letter-carriers in that city, and forty-five auxiliaries at a salary of $400. They report for duty at 6.30 in the morning, and are on duty until 6.30 in the evening, except on alternate days, when they work until nine or ten o'clock in the night. They make seven deliveries and sixteen collections every day.

In the year 1878 in the city of New York, as I find from the report of the Postmaster-General, they delivered: 39,900,000 letters, 13,000,000 postal cards, 22,000,000 local letters, 301,000 registered letters, and 10,000,000 newspapers; making a total of 85,201,000 packages delivered by the carriers.

There were collected during the same year: 67,540,000 letters, 9,869,000 postal cards, and 10,000,000 newspapers; making a total of 87,409,000 packages collected.

The aggregate during the whole year was 173,000,000 packages. The average of each carrier was 403,000. Of the four hundred carriers in the city of New York, three hundred are assigned to the duty of delivering letters and packages from the general and branch offices, and they have delivered an annual average of 300,000 packages. They work every day in the year, except Sundays.

Taking twelve hours as a day's labor, they deliver on the average about one thousand packages a day or over one package every minute and a half. Now, in regard to the receipts from the city of New York: the revenues of the post-office in the city of New York are in round numbers $2,900,000 and the net revenue from the post-office is $1,800,000. The gross revenue from the free-delivery system is $1,280,000. The gross expenses of this branch of the service is $334,000, leaving a net revenue from this source alone of $946,000, and the city of New York, speaking through one of its Representatives, is entirely willing that that surplus revenue shall be distributed so as to enlighten if necessary the Representative from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER.]

Now, on yesterday the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] in speaking in regard to the character of the vote by which the bill was passed, which the measure under discussion substantially repeals, failed to give an analysis of the vote. I have gone over it with some little care, and it seems to me by reading the one hundred and fifty names of those who voted for that bill, the gentleman will find representative men voted for it. Among the democrats were, BLACKBURN, CARLISLE, EWING, HOUSE, MANNING, MCMAHON, SPRINGER, Rice, and others. Of the republicans, but 6 voted against it and 95 for it, and of the democrats 55 voted for it and 54 against it.

Mr. COX. I now ask for a vote on my amendment to the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from New York to strike out in the substitute "$353,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$415,000."

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 48, noes 43.

Mr. MCMILLIN. No quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MCMILLIN and Mr. COX were appointed.

The commitee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 75, noes 55.

Mr. MCMILLIN (one of the tellers) and Mr. BAKER. No quorum.

Mr. COX, (one of the tellers.) There is a quorum present in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will continue the count.

Mr. BAKER. If unanimous consent is given that the yeas and nays on this proposition may be had in the House, I will not insist upon a further count at the present time, and will withdraw my point of order that no quorum voted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If the amendment should be adopted, will it not be in order to call for a separate vote upon it in the House?

Mr. BAKER. It is an amendment to an amendment.

The tellers having completed their count, reported that there were—ayes 87, noes 61.

So the amendment to the substitute was adopted.

Mr. BAKER. I give notice that if I have the right to do so I shall call for the yeas and nays in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now upon agreeing to the substitute as amended.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I move to amend the substitute by adding to it the following:

Provided, That there shall be no difference in the classification or pay of mail-carriers in any part of the United States.

Mr. KEIFER. I hope that will not be adopted.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Before that is voted upon I would like to be heard.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would inquire of my colleague, if his amendment shall be adopted, what will be the salary of the letter-carriers throughout the United States? Which will control, the higher or the lower rate?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. That is a question which will have to be determined. Before I address myself to the amendment I have offered, I desire to say that I am opposed——

Mr. CONGER. I think the amendment is subject to the point of order that it changes existing law. The present law makes a distinction in the pay of letter-carriers, and this amendment, if adopted, will increase expenditures by making the pay of all letter-carriers equal.

Mr. BAKER. The answer to that is that the bill before the committee proposes to change existing law, and an amendment to such a bill further to change existing law certainly cannot be out of order.

Mr. CONGER. The substitute does not propose to change existing law upon this point, and this is an amendment to the substitute. The object of the substitute is to prevent any change in the existing law, and this amendment will be a change of existing law without any retrenchment or reform in it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the substitute as amended, and then the proposed amendment to the substitute.

The substitute was read, as follows:

That, in addition to the amount heretofore appropriated, the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely:

For payment to letter-carriers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and to extend the service of such carriers for said year, under the provision of an act approved February 21, 1879, entitled "An act to fix the pay of letter-carriers," in addition to the sum heretofore appropriated, $415,000.

For payment of increased salary to letter-carriers, under the provisions of existing law, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, $71,000.

The amendment of Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, was to add to the substitute the following:

Provided, That there shall be no difference in the classification or pay of mail-carriers in any part of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. KEIFER. Now let us have a vote on the substitute.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Does the Chair rule my amendment out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules it out of order as being a change of existing law.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. The whole bill proposes to change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposed amendment is to the substitute, which does not involve a change of existing law, but merely makes the appropriations to carry out existing law. The amendment proposes to change existing law, and it does not appear that it will work retrenchment if adopted.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Then, in order to avoid that point of order, I will modify my amendment so that it will read as follows:

Provided, That there shall be no difference in the classification or pay of mail-carriers in any part of the United States, all of whom shall receive not more than $850 a year each.

Mr. CONGER. I make the same point of order upon that. The object of the modified amendment is to change the classification which the law already provides. The Chair will recollect that the substitute makes appropriations according to the existing law; the amendment proposes to change existing law.

Mr. KEIFER. And is not in the interest of economy.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. A word on the point of order. Under the present law the salaries of letter-carriers in cities of less than seventy-five thousand inhabitants is $850 a year; in cities of over seventy-five thousand inhabitants there are two classes, one of $800 and the other of $1,000 a year, two-thirds of whom may be at $1,000 and one-third at $800 a year, for which this substitute proposes to make appropriations as amended a few minutes ago. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee is not only germane, but in order; because it will decrease expenditures. In other words, if adopted it will take less money to pay these employés than if not adopted.

Mr. CONGER. That will have to be computed. It reduces the salaries of some, but largely increases the salaries of others.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Not at all; it does not increase a single salary.

Mr. CONGER. It gives an increase of salary to all of a certain class in the larger cities.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. While it increases one-third of the carriers in the first-class cities from $800 to $850, it decreases two-thirds from $1,000 to $850.

Mr. CONGER. But it brings up those now receiving $750.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. No; they are already brought up under the existing law.

Mr. MITCHELL. How about those who receive only $400.

Mr. BAKER. It does not touch them.

Mr. MITCHELL. I insist that it does, because they are appointed under existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the amendment as modified is germane, and as it indicates a reduction of expenditures, is in order.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Before I address myself to the amendment I have just offered I have a few words to say about the general proposition. I am opposed to the bill reported from the committee and I favor the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio for several reasons; but none of them are of the character which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says influences those who oppose his bill. One is that the bill reported by the committee does an act of great injustice to a poorly paid and worthy class of people. Another objection to it is that it repeals an existing law; and I have heard so much lately about the treasonable and revolutionary tendencies of that method of legislation in speeches of my friend from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and other gentlemen of his party, and have learned so much on that subject from veto messages of the President, that I have a strong suspicion on my mind that to repeal laws by appropriation bills is vicious, if not dangerous and revolutionary. At least, I do not want to see it applied for the first time to a bill cutting down the salaries of letter-carriers, nor, indeed, for the repeal of any other law that protects any of our working classes. Let retrenchment and economy commence higher up. Let our economic statesmen strike larger game before smiting the poor letter-carriers.

Like the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] I am actuated in this matter by no personal or local consideration. It is of no consequence to me what my constituents may think about it. I am speaking for the "horny-handed" yeomanry of the country, the down-trodden and oppressed tax-payers, just like he has done. The fact that I live in one of the largest, and I may say the best city in the whole Mississippi Valley does not influence me any more than if I lived in a country village as the gentleman from Indiana does. I know that he takes his position on this question earnestly; I know that he is as honest and sincere in his convictions as if he had in his district Saint Louis, Chicago, or Springfield; and that if he represented all those cities that fact would in no way influence his action upon this bill. Living in a city where we have a free delivery I have had some opportunity to judge of the benefits of the system, and I have also had some opportunity to determine the amount of labor performed by the letter-carriers, and how poorly they are paid for their services.

I know of no class of laboring people in my city who work more hours than they do, and all are perhaps quite as well paid. I know how patiently, faithfully, and laboriously they toil in pursuit of their avocation. Let us deal justly if not generously with them.

The gentleman from Indiana, the great apostle of economy in the House since my old friend Judge Holman of his State left it, says that we are taking the people's money to pay these letter-carriers. Very true; we take the people's money to pay all the expenses of this Government, but in this case it is taken to pay the people for the benefit of the people. I think, however, he is mistaken in the assumption that only three or four cities having the free delivery pay the expense of the service.

Mr. BAKER. Four.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. In my own city of Memphis there is an excess of $31,000 paid annually into the Treasury over the expense of administering that service. This sum, I suppose, goes to pay in part the expense incurred by the Government in supplying mail service to the towns and hamlets in his district where the postal revenue does not amount to one-half or, in some cases, not to one-tenth of what it costs the Government, and yet he complains that Memphis has a free delivery. What disinterested economy in the management of other people's money! I am willing to give him or his party all the political capital they may make by cutting down the wages of working people. The people of this country do not favor that system of economy.

Now, sir, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has already said very much of what I had intended to say in support of the amendment I have offered. There can be no reason that I can conceive of which would warrant the payment of a greater sum to mail-carriers in one locality than another. All the men in the service of this Government are supposed to be paid in accordance with the services they render. Every letter-carrier in the service of the Post-Office Department has precisely the same kind of work to do. He may have a smaller or a larger district; there may be a greater or a less number of persons to whom he delivers letters, but the duties of the different carriers occupy the same time, require the same amount of labor; and I can conceive of no principle of justice or right which can justify the payment of $1,000 to a mail-carrier in New York and $850 or $400 to a mail-carrier in the city of Memphis, when both perform precisely the same service. The Memphis man does as much work, is confronted with as many hardships, and has to pay as much, and even more, to live. Why, then, pay him less? If any discrimination is made, he should be paid more, for his salary comes out of the pockets of his own people and not out of the National Treasury.

Now, in regard to the classification. I grant you as to some classes of public servants it may be proper, in order to advance the public interests and to secure an efficient administration of public business, that they should be educated to the particular branch of service which they are called upon to perform. But this is not a duty of that character. A letter-carrier may be just as efficient after a week's service as after ten years. I can see no reason why there should be either different classes or different rates of pay in different localities.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word about this matter—not about the merits of the bill; I have talked enough about that. Gentlemen do their own voting and they are answerable to their own constituents. If my friend from New England or some gentleman from New York or Memphis or Kansas, going home to his constituents where the letter-carrier system prevails, where there are five or fifty or one hundred men getting $1,000 a year for such service, can turn round and look in the face the thousands of men, skilled laborers, who do not earn $600 a year, and say "it is right that these favored few should receive $1,000 each, and that you, the unfavored many, should pay their salaries," well and good. That is a position which other gentlemen may shoulder the responsibility of taking; as for me, I will not.

Now one word to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] who has just taken his seat, and the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.] Many slurs have been thrown at the Committee on Appropriations for reporting this bill. Is that manly? It is not right, you say, to put a rider on an appropriation bill where it is productive of economy, where it is right and equitable and just. The very father of the rule authorizing such legislation turns round in the person of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and damns his own progeny here upon this floor, descending almost to the verge of demagogism that he may carry his point. Oh, no; but the Committee on Appropriations is to be abused because they carry out the very rule you placed with your iron democratic hand upon the book of rules. You turn round and make faces because, forsooth, the committee which you have created has obeyed your behest as expressed in the rules. It is all wrong in a little matter where letter-carriers are affected and where legislation should be had, but you can come in with an extra session of Congress and with a democratic grip on the throat of the country. Then you can set your foot down and say this Committee on Appropriations under this rule can put a rider on an appropriation bill looking toward revolution. That is all right; and the great apostle of economy and the self-styled statesman from New York [Mr. COX] says it is all right and proper. I agree that this rule was originally conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity for the purpose of demagogism and partisanship. If I had begotten it I would at least respect it in life and give it burial in death.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. You begot it in 1858.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. It was begotten by democrats. It was your offspring on the other side of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I wish to ask my friend if that rule was not begotten in 1858 by the republican party?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Oh, no; it was begotten by Mr. COX. [Great laughter.] Its birth was presided over by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, now Speaker of this House, and it was suckled by the democratic party. It came into the world deformed, misshapen, and lives to plague its progenitors. Now you make faces at it. Gentlemen on the other side get up in their places and make faces at it. They make mouths at me because, forsooth, I am charged with the care of a bill reported legitimately and properly under that rule. If there ever was a measure coming within the operation of that rule that was well timed and equitable it is the very one now pending reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I only wished to stir up gentleman's minds a little in the way of remembrance. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEIFER. I hope we will now have a vote.

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend by striking out the last word. When I raised the point of order I was of the impression this proposed amendment increased the expenditure. I had not then the statistics or the time to make the figures. I believe it is now admitted that it will increase the expenditures some $63,000. I believe the gentleman who moved the amendment will himself admit that it does increase expenditure in the aggregate in this bill between sixty and sixty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I have just received that information. I do not know whether it is correct or not, but if my amendment has the effect of increasing the appropriation the point of order would have been good, and I should not like to insist upon it if it does increase expenditure over that proposed in the bill and defeat its operation.

Mr. CONGER. I do not speak to revive the point of order I made, but from my extreme anxiety that gentlemen who are the special advocates of retrenchment may not be entrapped into voting for this amendment under the idea they are voting for retrenchment and possibly for reform. [Laughter.]

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Lest the amendment defeat the object of the bill, I withdraw it, although I think it to be eminently right and proper there should be no such distinction.

Mr. TALBOTT. I move the following to come in as an additional section:

That in any city where letter-carriers are authorized by law, carriers shall be appointed and letter-boxes established for the accommodation of the inhabitants wherever the public convenience may require, notwithstanding it may be beyond the corporate limits of such town or city, provided the places of delivery be adjacent thereto, said places of delivery not to exceed one-half mile beyond the corporate limits of such town or city.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained and the amendment ruled out.

The question recurred on Mr. KEIFER'S substitute as amended.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 41.

Mr. BAKER. There is no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint Mr. BAKER and Mr. COX as tellers.

Mr. BAKER. I withdraw the point of order that no quorum has voted if it is understood I shall have the yeas and nays on the substitute in the House.

Mr. KEIFER. We agree to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute, as amended, is agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. I now move the committee rise and report the bill and amendment to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. REAGAN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration a bill (H. R. No. 2002) making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendment.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I do not know the gentleman is entitled to recognition for that purpose. I believe I have charge of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio was recognized.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. If the Chair wants to recognize the gentleman to make that demand, all right, I have not a word to say; but the Chair will do it subject to my protest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No motion can be more thoroughly proper.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. If the Chair in all his experience knows of a case where a member not having charge of the bill has been recognized to move the previous question, I would like to know it.

Mr. KEIFER. I insist on my motion.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I make the point under parliamentary practice, and I appeal to the fairness and knowledge of parliamentary usage possessed by the gentleman now occupying the chair whether or no he holds that to be right—whether or no he dare to say that in a parliamentary sense that is right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois had lost control of the floor by the adoption of the substitute.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The House has not adopted the substitute. The House does not yet know what has been the action of the committee.

Mr. STEVENSON. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is in order.

The question being taken, there were ayes 23, noes not counted.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER here resumed the chair and said: The Chair learns the question is on seconding the demand for the previous question on the bill and the amendment.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that motion is properly pending before the House. I had charge of the bill, and until I lose charge by the House refusing to second the demand for the previous question I claim that I am entitled under all parliamentary usage to be recognized for that purpose.

Mr. KEIFER. I was recognized to make that motion by the Chair. I had charge of the substitute which was adopted by the committee and which was reported to the House. I therefore made the motion.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Illinois make any effort to submit a motion?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The very moment I discovered——

Mr. COX. The gentleman never rose to make any motion. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to be heard on that point. The gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, remained in the chair some little time after the committee rose. I was wishing that he should go out of the chair that I might take charge of the bill, as I had a right to do, by any motion I saw proper to make. A gentleman came along and attracted my attention for a moment, and when I next raised my eye the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] was in the chair as Speaker pro tempore; and just then a motion was made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER,] and I at once claimed my right to make the motion.

Mr. COX. This is not your bill at all; it is another bill. Your bill has gone to the rear, and this has taken its place.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] ought to have been recognized in the House when the bill came from Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Illinois reported the bill, and it was on his motion referred to the Committee of the Whole, and the committee adopted a substitute, as the Chair is advised, changing the bill——

Mr. KEIFER. Against the wishes of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. But now the bill is pending in the House and I still have charge of it. The House may never adopt the substitute. The whole proposition is pending in the House.

Mr. SPARKS. The adoption of a substitute certainly does not deprive my colleague of his charge of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair dislikes to pass on the act of another gentleman temporarily occupying the chair——

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I will relieve the Chair from any embarrassment on that subject, the attention of the House having now been called to the proceeding.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not desire to be relieved from any duty he ought to perform. If compelled to rule on the act of the occupant of the chair, he will do so.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I recognize the fact that the Speaker was not in the chair when I ought to have been recognized. The Chair having stated that fact, I will make no further point on it, but will let the gentleman from Ohio, through the aid of his colleague in this fight, commit a rape on this measure. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEIFER. The committee have already done that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that when a bill is reported from a standing committee and referred to the Committee of the Whole, the member reporting the bill and having charge of it would naturally be the one to be recognized when the bill came back to the House from the Committee of the Whole, although amendments should have been adopted, or even an amendment in the nature of a substitute. But the Chair is advised that in this instance the gentleman from Illinois did not show his usual speed in trying to get recognition; and the Chair again states he does not wish to reverse the recognition given by the gentleman temporarily occupying the chair, unless compelled to do so by demand of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON.]

Mr. COX. I rise to a little matter of personal explanation. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] never got upon his feet to say "Mr. Speaker." The only man who addressed the Chair while I was occupying it temporarily was the gentleman from Ohio, who had the right to address the Chair first; and the gentleman from Illinois knew it, because he never addressed the Chair at all. And this attack on the Speaker or the sub-Speaker is all wrong, and the gentleman ought to apologize to the House for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPARKS. I rather think it is the gentleman who took the chair who ought to apologize. The interest he manifested in this discussion when in Committee of the Whole made it very indelicate for him to take that position.

Mr. COX. The Speaker will say that I got out of that place as soon as I could.

Mr. SPARKS. Partly at my suggestion.

Mr. COX. That is not so.

Mr. SPARKS. It was very indelicate for the gentleman to be there.

Mr. COX. I say this further. I was sent for by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] to take the chair as Speaker pro tempore. He said the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] had been delegated for that purpose but was not then in his seat. As I was interested in the success of the bill I desired to get out of the chair, and I did get out of it as soon as I could when the Speaker came. How else could I get out of it?

Mr. MILLS. I move to lay the bill and amendments on the table, and I ask for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the demand for the previous question as pending, and the gentleman from Texas moves to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. SAMFORD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. At the time the substitute was adopted in the committee there was a right reserved to have the yeas and nays upon it in the House.

The SPEAKER. That was a notice that the yeas and nays would be asked.

Mr. SAMFORD. If the substitute be defeated, shall we then vote upon the original bill?

The SPEAKER. If the substitute be defeated, the original bill will then come up.

Mr. SAMFORD. But if the motion of the gentleman from Texas should prevail, to lay the bill upon the table, it will not come up.

The SPEAKER. An affirmative vote upon that motion would carry the whole subject to the table.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the motion to lay upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The question then recurs upon the substitute reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REAGAN. Will not the first vote be upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to the substitute, to perfect the substitute, and then upon the substitute?

Mr. KEIFER. I would ask if the previous question has yet been voted upon.

The SPEAKER. It has not, because the motion was pending to lay upon the table.

Mr. KEIFER. That motion is withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] is correct. The question then recurs upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BAKER. On what?

The SPEAKER. First on the amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the question upon that is not divisible.

The previous question was seconded and the main question was ordered, being upon the substitute reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLYMER. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. REAGAN. The item of four hundred and odd thousand dollars was an amendment offered to the substitute, and I desire to know if the House will not have to take a vote upon that amendment to perfect the substitute before it votes on the substitute.

Mr. KEIFER. That is impossible now.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule upon the subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

Any member may call for the division of a question, before or after the main question is ordered, which shall be divided if it comprehend propositions in substance so distinct that, one being taken away, a substantive proposition shall remain for the decision of the House. A motion to strike out and insert shall be deemed indivisible. But it has been decided on appeals that on motions to commit with instructions, or on the different branches of instructions on a Senate amendment, on an amendment reported as a single amendment from a Committee of the Whole, on a series of resolutions proposed to be inserted in lieu of other matter, a division of the question cannot be had.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that this is a single amendment reported from the committee, and therefore it is not divisible.

Mr. REAGAN. I think there is a mistake about that.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman mean a mistake of fact?

Mr. REAGAN. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] proposed to appropriate three hundred odd thousand dollars, and the gentleman from New York offered an amendment to increase the sum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will remember that the proposition in the committee was a substitute for the bill, and there was an amendment offered to that substitute, and it was agreed to and became a part of the substitute, and therefore the substitute comes before the House as a single amendment requiring only a single vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 114, nays 81, not voting 91; as follows:

Mr. DIBRELL. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. HOUK.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Upon this question I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. STEPHENS, who would vote in favor of the substitute, while I should vote against it.

Mr. AIKEN. My colleague from South Carolina, Mr. RICHARDSON, who is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. CAMP, would on this question vote "no."

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. My colleague, Mr. CHALMERS, who is absent by leave of the House, is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. VAN VOORHIS.

Mr. POUND. My colleague, Mr. HAZELTON, is absent by leave of the House, and is paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BLOUNT. I am not advised how either gentleman would vote on this question.

Mr. RICE. My colleague, Mr. CRAPO, is paired with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. ROSS.

Mr. ROBINSON. My colleague, Mr. MORSE, is paired generally with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. KELLEY, but I presume on this question both gentlemen, if present, would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. STONE. The gentleman from New York, Mr. STARIN, is paired with the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. KIMMEL; and the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. MONEY, with the gentleman from New York, Mr. CROWLEY.

Mr. BAILEY. My colleague, Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, is paired with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. ROBESON; my colleague, Mr. MULLER, with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HEILMAN; my colleague, Mr. LOUNSBERY, with the gentleman from Maine, Mr. REED; and my colleague, Mr. COVERT, with my colleague, Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. WHITE. I am paired with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. THOMAS TURNER.

Mr. WILBER. The gentleman from Indiana, Mr. ORTH, is paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. DICKEY. I do not know how either gentleman would vote on this question.

Mr. FRYE. My colleagues, Mr. LINDSEY and Mr. REED, are paired.

Mr. BAYNE. I am paired on all political questions with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. FROST, who is absent on account of sickness in his family. But this question is not regarded by him or myself as political. Feeling, therefore, at liberty to vote, I vote "ay." I am informed that he would also vote "ay." My colleague, Mr. ERRETT, is paired on all political questions with the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. SCALES. Mr. ERRETT would vote "ay."

Mr. MILLS. I am paired on all political questions with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. FORT; but as I do not deem this a political question I have voted.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on ordering the bill, as amended, to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. SAMFORD. I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion of Mr. WEAVER was not agreed to.

The question being then taken on the motion of Mr. SAMFORD to lay the bill on the table, the Speaker declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. SAMFORD. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; there being—ayes 33, noes 125; more than one-fifth in the affirmative.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 68, nays 117, not voting 101; as follows:

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. TALBOTT. My colleague, Mr. McLANE, is paired with Mr. BOYD.

Mr. MANNING. My colleague, Mr. MONEY, who is absent by leave of the House, is paired with Mr. CROWLEY.

Mr. MULDROW. I am paired with Mr. DWIGHT, of New York.

Mr. BEALE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. JORGENSEN. If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. STEELE. My colleague, Mr. SCALES, is paired with Mr. ERRETT, of Pennsylvania. If my colleague were present and unpaired, he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama. My colleague, Mr. SHELLEY, is paired with Mr. MILLER, of New York.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I am paired with Mr. URNER, of Maryland. If he were here, I should vote in the affirmative. My colleague, Mr. SINGLETON, is paired with Mr. MILES, of Connecticut.

Mr. DIBRELL. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. HOUK.

Mr. AIKEN. My colleague, Mr. RICHARDSON, is paired with Mr. CAMP, of New York. If present, my colleague would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. My colleague, Mr. CHALMERS, who is absent by leave of the House, is paired with Mr. VAN VOORHIS, of New York.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. FERNANDO WOOD is paired with Mr. ROBESON, Mr. MULLER with Mr. HEILMAN, Mr. LOUNSBERY with Mr. REED, and Mr. COVERT with Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. POUND. My colleague, Mr. HAZELTON, is paired with Mr. BLOUNT, of Georgia.

Mr. WILBER. Mr. ORTH, of Indiana, is paired with Mr. DICKEY, of Ohio.

On motion of Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, the reading the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. COX demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 100, noes 48.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. I move to amend the title by striking out the words and "for other purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 435) to correct an error in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1879; when the Speaker signed the same.

JOHN HAMILTON.

Mr. McMAHON moved, by unanimous consent, that leave be granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the discharge papers of John Hamilton, there having been an adverse report in the case.

The SPEAKER. That request will be referred, under the rules, to the appropriate committee.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence, by unanimous consent, was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. PRESCOTT, for ten days, from Monday next, on account of important business;

To Mr. HOUK, indefinitely, on account of serious sickness in his family; and

To Mr. HENDERSON, until Friday next.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. VANCE. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WHITE. I move that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Tuesday next.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to adjourn, and I insist the first question is on the motion to adjourn as a question of higher privilege.

Mr. WHITE. My motion was in before that was entertained.

The SPEAKER. It does not matter whether it was in before the motion to adjourn or not. The Chair submits the question first on the motion to adjourn over until Tuesday next.

Mr. GARFIELD. But I have moved the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the motion to adjourn over until Tuesday as a preceding motion.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mine is a question of higher privilege.

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. GARFIELD. The motion to adjourn not a question of higher privilege?

The SPEAKER. The motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn is first in order under the practice of the House.

Mr. MILLS. The rules expressly provide that the House shall first fix the day to which it shall adjourn before voting on the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. There is no question about that; but for the information of the gentleman from Ohio, who is usually so well posted on the rules, the Chair will have an extract from the Manual read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"A motion to adjourn, and a motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, shall be always in order, and these motions shall be decided without debate."—Rule 44. It has been decided and acted upon that the motion "to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn" takes precedence of a motion "to adjourn;" the reason being that, before the House adjourns, it is proper to fix the time to which it shall adjourn.

Mr. WHITE'S motion was disagreed to.

The motion to adjourn was then agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and three minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. HENKLE: The petition of James T. Blakistone, for compensation for services rendered in the Doorkeeper's department, House of Representatives, Forty-fifth Congress—to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. RICE: Papers relating to the claim of the late owners of the British whaling-bark Chance, for compensation for transporting ninety-six shipwrecked American seamen—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. SAWYER: The petition of Eugene McSweeny, for one month's pay, from the date of his discharge from the soldiers' roll of the Doorkeeper, House of Representatives, Forty-sixth Congress—to the Committee of Accounts.

By Mr. SHALLENBERGER: The petition of S. J. Burnett, and other citizens of Warrensburgh, Missouri, for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 226) to increase pensions in certain cases—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, June 9, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

COLUMBIA HOSPITAL FOR WOMEN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. KERNAN a director on the part of the Senate of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum under the provisions of the act of June 10, 1872, in the place of Mr. SARGENT, whose term of service has expired.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 11th of February, 1879, a report of the commanding officer of the Department of the Columbia in relation to the claim of F. G. Schwatka, sr., against the United States for seizure of his donation claim at Point Adams, Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with section 2 of the river and harbor act of June 18, 1878, a report from S. T. Abert, United States civil engineer, upon the survey of the Yadkin River, North Carolina; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FERRY presented a resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, in favor of the passage of a law by Congress equalizing the bounties of all soldiers who served in the Federal Army during the late war, and who were honorably discharged; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GARLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 594) for the relief of Thomas Langton, of Dundee, Michigan, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report a bill to remove the political disabilities of James F. Harrison, of Virginia. If there be no objection, I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The bill (S. No. 669) to remove the political disabilities of James F. Harrison, of Virginia, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent to consider the bill at this time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I want this bill to go over just as I did when I used to report these disability bills myself, in the regular way. I do not suppose there is the slightest objection to the bill; but it should take its regular order on the Calendar and it can be called up to-morrow. There are other matters to come up to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the petition of William N. R. Beale, of Missouri, praying the removal of his political disabilities, reported a bill (S. No. 670) to remove the political disabilities of William N. R. Beale, of Missouri; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WALLACE, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 85) fixing the date on which the pay of the committee clerks, pages, and laborers of the House of Representatives who are paid during the session only shall begin for this session, reported it with amendments.

CORRECTION OF AN ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. VANCE. I am authorized by the Committee on Enrolled Bills, to whom was referred a House concurrent resolution correcting a clerical error in a former bill, to report it back without amendment; and I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered at this time.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the Joint Committee on Enrolled Bills be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to change and correct the title of House bill No. 1999, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes,' approved March 4, 1879," as passed by the two Houses of Congress at the present session, by striking out the word "fourth" which occurs therein and inserting in lieu thereof the word "third."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to know, before I consent, how we can change a statute by a concurrent resolution, as I understand that to be a concurrent resolution, not a joint resolution. I see it is in the ordinary concurrent form:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) &c.

We cannot change a statute in that way.

Mr. HEREFORD. There is no statute sought to be changed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is it, then?

Mr. HEREFORD. The resolution simply authorizes the Joint Committee on Enrolled Bills to make a change of a date in the enrolled bill referred to before it goes to the President. It is still within the control of Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a bill passed at this session which has not yet gone to the President?

Mr. HEREFORD. It has not yet gone to the President.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not the slightest objection, if that is the case.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and concurred in.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. KERNAN. At the request of the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH,] who is absent to-day, I ask leave to introduce a bill.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 671) to amend the act entitled "An act for enrolling and licensing ships or vessels to be employed in the coasting trade and fisheries, and for regulating the same," passed February 18, 1793; and it was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 672) giving a pension to Abram F. Farrar; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KIRKWOOD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 673) for the relief of soldiers and sailors becoming totally disabled in the service of the country; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GARLAND asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 675) to provide office rooms for the National Board of Health, and for the publication of its reports and papers, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the select committee to investigate and report the best means of preventing the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases.

Mr. SAULSBURY (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 676) to amend class 2 of the general incorporation laws of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONAS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 677) for the relief of E. Troisgros; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PENSION TO FAMILY OF GENERAL SHIELDS.

Mr. VEST. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill, and I shall ask its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 674) for the benefit of the widow and children of General James Shields; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. VEST. I ask that the bill be read at length.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That payment of the pension of $100 monthly granted to James Shields, late a brigadier-general of United States Volunteers, by an act of Congress approved June the 18th, 1878, be continued to his widow and children, the full amount of said pension to be paid said widow during her life, and at her death, if the same should occur during the minority of said children or any of them, then the said pension shall be paid to so many of said children as may then be minors, in equal parts, until they reach respectively the age of twenty-one years.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I am very well aware that the objection of a single Senator will delay the present consideration of the bill; but it is a bill sui generis and based upon facts which have never before been brought to the consideration of the Congress of the United States. I do not propose to give any résumé of the life and public services of General Shields. They are a part of the common history of the country. I simply desire, as his successor in office, to state the fact that by a special act of Congress a pension of $100 monthly was granted to him, and that by his death that pension under the law absolutely ceases. Not having died by reason of wounds received in the service of the country, by the general pension law the pension dies with him. His family are now in indigent circumstances. He left to them only his glory and his sword. He left a widow and three children who are absolutely dependent upon charity for support. While the State which I have the honor in part to represent, and which he represented so well upon this floor, does not seek to put aside or to put off upon any one or upon the Government of the country the glory and the duty of providing for his family, yet as he belonged to the whole country, as his services and his memory belonged to the whole Union, it seemed to me and to his friends that this task, if task it be, should be first offered to this General Government.

I know, sir, as I said, that the objection of a single Senater can postpone the consideration of this measure and put it upon the Calendar. I violate, I trust, no parliamentary confidence or rule when I state that the Committee on Pensions, to whom this bill would go ordinarily, does not propose the consideration of any measure during the present session of Congress. For this reason and because of the fact that this bill, if passed, would be passed above and beyond any ordinary rule, if for no other reason, I ask for its present consideration, and when so passed it will be a compliment worthy of the man, worthy of his services, and worthy of his memory.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know whether this case can be distinguished from a great many other cases where gallant soldiers have died after a war, not from wounds received in the service, as in this case, so as to make this a proper matter to act upon. If it can be distinguished, certainly I shall very gladly go for it; but I should like to consider it and have it printed, and see how it stands.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator speak a little louder?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only said that I do not know whether the circumstances of this particular case may properly distinguish it from other similar cases where a gallant soldier died after the expiration of a war, from other causes than those incident to the service. If it can be distinguished, of course I shall be very glad indeed to go for the bill. In order to consider whether it can, I do not think that a delay of a day would be very injurious, so that I should like to see it printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri wish the bill referred or placed on the Calendar?

Mr. VEST. Let it be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will be printed of course, I believe under our rules.

THE COINAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further routine business the morning hour is at an end, and the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] on the 6th instant to discharge the Committee on Finance from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 564) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to coinage and coin and bullion certificates, and for other purposes.

Mr. VOORHEES. I hope that may be permitted to go over until to-morrow and that it will not be taken up at this time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it go over until December.

Mr. VOORHEES. If I have consent of the Senate, I desire that it may go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CONKLING. Would not the Senator rather make it December?

Mr. VOORHEES. No.

Mr. COKE. With the understanding that it shall come up to-morrow after the routine morning business, I am content to let it go over until that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the resolution being postponed until to-morrow? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CHANGES OF SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

Mr. EATON. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the amendments to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 1) to repeal certain clauses in the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1879. The joint resolution passed the Senate some days since with amendments, and it was returned to this body with certain other amendments which were made to it in the House. The Committee on Appropriations advise the Senate to non-concur in the amendments of the House. I do not care to amplify or give any of the reasons at this time that induced the Committee on Appropriations to make that direction, but such is the unanimous action of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CONKLING. What are the amendments?

Mr. EATON. If the Senator desires, they can be read.

Mr. CONKLING. I will not ask to have them read, nor will I trouble the Senator at length to state them, but will he be kind enough to indicate enough of them that we may understand the matter?

Mr. EATON. There is one amendment to pay the widow and heirs of Hon. Rush Clark, deceased, $9,235.50; another to pay the widow of Hon. Gustave Schleicher, deceased, two years' salary, $10,000; another to pay a certain messenger $83.33 per month; another to pay the salary of an additional associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Dakota, $680; another for a deficiency in the appropriation for the pay of cadets at the Military Academy for the current fiscal year, $7,500; the sum of $9,000 to pay adjusted accounts for services or expenses incurred in completing the eighth census; $4,090 to pay adjusted accounts for services or expenses incurred in completing the ninth census, and so on.

Mr. CONKLING. Those are House amendments?

Mr. EATON. Those are House amendments.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator recommends non-concurrence?

Mr. EATON. Yes, sir; non-concurrence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made by the House of Representatives.

The amendments were non-concurred in.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no further morning business. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 17, noes 19; no quorum voting.

Mr. ANTHONY called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and the Secretary called the roll.

Mr. PLATT. On political questions I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.] I do not consider this to be a political question, and therefore vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Allison,	Burnside,	Dawes,	Morrill,
Anthony,	Cameron of Pa.,	Edmunds,	Platt,
Bell,	Carpenter,	Ferry,	Rollins,

USE OF TROOPS.

Mr. EATON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. EATON. I will withdraw the motion for my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. If there is no measure that any Senator desires to call up for consideration, I ask that Senate bill No. 621 be taken up, in order that I may submit some remarks upon that bill.

The bill was read by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that to be taken up for a speech?

Mr. HARRIS. I simply desire it to be taken up in order to submit some remarks upon it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not for the purpose of final action to-day?

Mr. HARRIS. No, sir; only for the purpose indicated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 621) authorizing the employment of the militia and the land and naval forces of the United States in certain cases, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, while I know that I can say nothing upon the questions presented by the bill under consideration which has not been already much better said by others, I ask the indulgence of the Senate to assign some of the reasons which have controlled, and will control, my vote upon these questions.

Congress has devoted much the greater portion of the last two months to debating the necessity and propriety of the repeal of certain statutes, one of which, it is asserted by the majority of the two Houses, seriously impairs, if it does not deny to a citizen charged with crime, the right of trial by that "impartial jury" guaranteed to him by the sixth article of the amendments to the Constitution.

And the others in their practical operations impair, if, indeed, they do not wholly destroy, the freedom of elections in the States, by the interposition of the power of the Federal Government, through its election supervisors, marshals, and deputy marshals, supported by the power of the Army, with authority to arrest, without warrant and without charge, whomsoever the supervisors or marshals may assume to have committed, or be about to commit, any one of the various offenses created by the election statutes of the United States.

The majority upon this floor insist that these statutes are not only of doubtful constitutionality, but wholly unnecessary, unjust, and in their practical operations destructive of the dearest rights of freemen, for when you have destroyed the freedom of elections and the purity and impartiality of the jury-box the chief bulwarks of civil liberty are gone.

But it is asserted by the minority that these statutes are constitutional, necessary, and just.

The debate has been characterized by great ability and research, and if it had been strictly confined to the merits of the questions the time devoted to it would not have been without profit, but, unfortunately, it has been made by republican Senators the occasion, I will not say pretext, to fight the battles of the war over again and revive, as far as it is possible for them to revive, the bitter memories of that unfortunate and bloody struggle, for what purpose I will not inquire, having no right to question motives on this floor. But I may say without impropriety, and can say with perfect confidence, that the inevitable and only effect of that line of argument is, and must be, to arouse the worst passions of the people, and revive, stimulate, and emphasize the bitter sectional prejudices and hate which characterized the war period, which must inevitably tend to define sharply the lines of sectional parties, and solidify one section of the country against another.

Mr. President, will the country, or any section of the country, be benefited by these constant and bitter sectional strifes? Passion, sectional prejudice, and hate may be important and necessary instrumentalities to aid in restoring to power a party unwilling to rely upon the cool dispassionate judgment of the country upon its principles, practices, and policy, but cannot possibly promote any one of the great interests of the country.

Can the people be diverted from the real issues which so deeply affect their rights and interests by these appeals to passion, resentment, and hate? Are the issues which caused the war eighteen years ago, or the war itself, pertinent to the question of the repeal of these statutes? Even if it be admitted that either belligerent was wholly wrong and responsible for all the consequences of that bloody struggle, does it aid us in arriving at a conclusion as to whether these statutes should be repealed or not?

Cannot each party afford to rely upon such honest judgment as the country may render upon the merits of the questions without seeking aid from inflammatory appeals and efforts to rekindle the dying embers of sectional prejudice and hate? And do not such appeals argue that the party resorting to them regards its fortunes as desperate, if not utterly hopeless?

The war ended fourteen years ago, so far as the men who endured its hardships, privations, and perils are concerned, and rages now only with those who never heard the roar of its artillery except through the medium of the public press, or saw the flash of its swords except through the reports of its generals, with no other result, whatever may be the motive, than to distract the councils and destroy the peace of the country.

Mr. President, let all men be held responsible, I care not how strictly, for their acts in the past and the present, but let the country have peace so that it may devote its energies to building up its waste places, developing its immense resources, and promoting its material interests. And instead of attempting to lash the public mind into a furor let us address ourselves dispassionately to the consideration of the questions which so deeply affect the rights and interests of the people of the country. While we may profit by experience, we cannot change the past. Then why stir the embers of bitter memories? Why not give our best and undivided efforts to the practical and living questions of the present and the future?

I need not refer to the history of centuries in the past or to the many volumes which have been written to show the high estimation in which trial by an impartial jury in all criminal prosecutions has been held by all civilized countries and peoples. It is sufficient for my purpose to refer to the sixth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, ratified in 1791, which provides that—

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, &c.

Section 820 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, among other things, provides that—

To have given, directly or indirectly, any assistance in money, arms, horses, clothes, or anything whatever, to or for the use or benefit of any person whom the giver of such assistance knew to have joined, or to be about to join, any insurrection or rebellion, or to have resisted, or to be about to resist, with force of arms, the execution of the laws of the United States, or whom he had good ground to believe to have joined, or to be about to join, any insurrection or rebellion, or to have resisted, or to be about to resist, with force of arms, the execution of the laws of the United States; or to have counseled or advised any person to join any insurrection or rebellion, or to resist with force of arms the laws of the United States—shall be causes of disqualification and challenge of grand and petit jurors in the courts of the United States.

Section 821 authorizes the court in its discretion, upon the motion of the district attorney, to set aside as disqualified any person summoned as a grand or petit juror who cannot on oath bring himself within the rule of competency prescribed by section 820 just quoted.

Mr. President, sections 820 and 821 put it in the power of the district attorney and the judge to disqualify and reject from service on the juries in the courts of the United States the great majority of the men of intelligence and character in a number of the States of the Union. The most ardent Union man in the South, knowing that his son had joined or having reason to believe was about to join the confederate army, if he gave him a dinner or a supper, or, finding him with bare and bleeding feet marching over the frozen ground, gave him a pair of shoes, is by such acts disqualified for service upon a jury, even though the district attorney who makes the motion to disqualify and the judge who decides the question may have been among the most zealous and determined of confederate soldiers.

If the administration of justice is to be aided by the virtue and intelligence of the country in the jury-box these sections should be repealed; but I will not occupy the time of the Senate by attempting to add to what has already been so well said by other Senators in the argument of this question.

Mr. President, the freedom of elections is a matter of equal, if not paramount importance to any that has occupied the attention of Congress or the country. If interference on the part of the Federal Government in the elections in the States can be justified at all, it must find its justification in the fourth section of the first article of the Constitution, which provides that "the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators."

From this language it is, in my judgment, plain—too plain to admit of doubt—that the intention of the framers of the Constitution was that the States should regulate in their own way all things pertaining to the election of Representatives in Congress, and the power to "make or alter such regulations" was delegated to Congress as a means of self-preservation, to be exercised only when the States failed to make such regulations, or made such as might not accomplish the object of securing the election of Representatives; the language employed being mandatory to the State and permissive to the Congress: "The times, places, and manner of holding elections," &c., "SHALL be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress MAY at any time by law make or alter such regulations."

But suppose the proper construction of this clause to be that Congress may act in the matter primarily and without regard to the action of the State Legislatures; the power is by express terms limited to regulating "the times, places, and manner of holding elections."

It will not be claimed that this gives Congress the slightest pretense to the power to prescribe the qualifications of voters, or in any manner to interfere with any step which the laws of the State may require to be taken as a condition-precedent to the right to vote. That power is reserved to, and resides exclusively in, the States.

Section 2 of the first article of the Constitution provides that—

The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

Under this clause the right to vote for a Representative in Congress depends wholly and entirely upon the right to vote for representatives in the most numerous branch of the State Legislature, as prescribed by the laws of the State.

In the case of Minor vs. Happersett, 21 Wallace, the Supreme Court of the United States says:

The United States has no voters in the States of its own creation. The elective officers of the United States are elected directly or indirectly by the State voters. The members of the House of Representatives are to be chosen by the people of the States, and the electors in each State must have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the Legislature.

In United States vs. Reese et al., 2 Otto, 217, the court says:

The fifteenth amendment does not confer the right of suffrage upon any one. It prevents the States or the United States, however, from giving preference in this particular to one citizen of the United States over another on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

It follows that the amendment has invested the citizens of the United States with a new constitutional right which is within the protecting power of Congress. That right is exemption from discrimination in the exercise of the elective franchise on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

In the case of United States vs. Cruikshank et al., 2 Otto, 555, the court says:

In Minor vs. Happersett we decided that the Constitution of the United States has not conferred the right of suffrage upon any one, and that the United States have no voters of their own creation in the States. And in the United States vs. Reese et al. we hold that the fifteenth amendment has invested the citizens of the United States with a new constitutional right, which is exemption from discrimination in the exercise of the elective franchise on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. From this it appears that the right of suffrage is not a necessary attribute of national citizenship. * * * The right to vote in the States comes from the States; but the right of exemption from the prohibited discrimination comes from the United States.

That the States have the full, complete, and sole power to prescribe the qualifications of voters, and to prescribe all acts to be performed by the citizen as conditions-precedent to the exercise of the right to vote, subject only to the one single restriction which prohibits discriminations "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude," is too clear to admit of argument.

Elections are the creatures of State jurisdiction, of State laws, and are made by the voters of the States, and not of United States; and the States, and the States alone, determine who the voters are and the qualifications necessary to make them voters.

Now, Mr. President, I insist that the intention of the convention which framed the Constitution, plainly deducible from the language employed, was that each State should not only prescribe the qualifications of its own voters, but should also regulate "the times, places, and manner of holding" its own elections, and that Congress should "make or alter such regulations" only when and where the States had failed to make them, or had made such as would not or might not secure the election of Representatives to Congress. But if it be admitted that Congress may act in the matter without regard to the action of the States, certainly no one will deny that the power of Congress is limited to regulating "the times, places, and manner of holding the elections."

What is the meaning of the word "manner" in this clause? Obviously, the method, the way of performing or executing; the method, or way of holding an election, that is, to determine whether the voting shall be viva voce, or by ballot; and if by ballot, whether by written or printed, and whether on parchment or paper, and the kind of paper, and whether folded or open tickets. But the power to determine the way in which an election shall be held falls very far short of the power to determine who shall elect, or what qualifications the elector shall have, or the steps to be taken, or the time and manner of taking the steps necessary to qualify the citizen as a voter. Yet, Mr. President, under this assumed power to regulate times, places, and manner of electing Representatives, we find Federal statutes authorizing the judges of United States courts, upon the written application of two citizens of any city or town of over twenty thousand inhabitants, or upon such application of ten citizens in good standing, in any county or parish, to appoint two election supervisors for each election precinct or voting place, in such city, town, county, or parish.

By section 2016 of the Revised Statutes these supervisors are authorized and required to attend at all times and places fixed by the laws of the State for the registration of voters, and to challenge any person offering to register, and to attend at all times and places when the names of registered voters may be marked for challenge, and to cause such names registered as they may deem proper to be so marked, and to personally inspect and scrutinize such registry, and to affix their signature to each page of the original list and each copy of such list of registered voters.

Section 2017 requires the supervisors to attend at all times and places for holding elections where a Representative in Congress is to be voted for, to be and remain where the ballot-boxes are kept at all times from the opening of the polls until all votes cast have been counted and the proper certificates and returns made, and to personally inspect and scrutinize the manner in which the voting is done, and the way in which the poll-books, registry lists, and tallies or check-books are kept.

Section 2018 requires the supervisors to personally scrutinize, count, and canvass each ballot in their election district or voting precinct cast, and make and forward to the chief supervisor such certificates and returns of such ballots as that officer may require, and to attach to such certificate or return any statement touching the truth or accuracy of the registry or the truth or fairness of the election and canvass that the supervisors, or either of them, may desire to make.

Section 2021 requires the marshal, upon the application in writing of two citizens of any city or town of twenty thousand inhabitants or upward, where an election for Representatives in Congress is to be held, to appoint special deputy marshals, without limit as to number, to aid and assist the supervisors of election in the verification of any list of persons who have registered or voted; to attend in each voting precinct at the times and places fixed for the registration of voters, and at the polls at all times when such election is being held.

Section 2022 provides that the marshal and his general and special deputies shall keep the peace, and support and protect the supervisors in the discharge of their duties at the places of registration and at the polls, and prevent fraudulent registration and fraudulent voting, or fraudulent conduct on the part of any officer of election, and immediately, either at the place of registration or place of voting or elsewhere, and either before or after registering or voting, arrest, and take into custody, with or without process, any person who commits or attempts, or offers to commit any of the acts or offenses prohibited by this act, and for the purposes of arrest the supervisors are clothed with the powers of the marshal in the absence of that officer.

Section 2024 authorizes the marshal to summon the posse comitatus of his district (the persons present) to aid him in this laudable work of arrest.

Section 2025 authorizes the judge of the circuit court of the United States to appoint a commissioner who shall be the chief supervisor of elections for the judicial district, who holds his office "so long as faithful and capable," that is, for life, or as long as he works for the success of the party in power, and the duty of organizing and supervising the election machinery of the judicial district is devolved upon him.

Section 2031 fixes fees which are to be paid to the chief supervisor for the various acts he is authorized to perform, and provides that each supervisor of election and each special deputy marshal shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States $5 per day for each day he is actually on duty, not exceeding ten days.

Section 2002 forbids the presence of armed troops at the polls, unless necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States, "or to keep the peace at the polls."

Section 2007 provides that where the laws of the State require any act to be done by a citizen to qualify him to vote, such as registration, or the payment of taxes, or other similar act, and such citizen makes affidavit that he proposed to perform such act and was prevented by the failure or omission of the officer of the State, such affidavit shall qualify him, and his vote shall be received and counted, a qualification prescribed by act of Congress, wholly different from and in conflict with that fixed by the laws of the State; and section 2008 declares that every judge, inspector, or other election officer who refuses or omits to receive and count such vote shall forfeit to the party aggrieved the sum of $500 with costs.

Section 5521 provides that any person appointed supervisor of election, or special deputy marshal, who takes the oath of office and afterward fails or refuses, without good and lawful excuse, to perform and discharge fully the duties, obligations, and requirements of such office, shall not only forfeit the office with loss of pay, but shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than one year, or by fine of not less than $200, nor more than $500, or both fine and imprisonment.

Section 5522 provides that every person, whether with or without authority, power, or process of any State, who obstructs, hinders, assaults, or by bribery, solicitation, or otherwise, interferes with, or prevents the supervisors or marshal or deputy marshal, in the performance of any duty required of them, or which either of them may be authorized to perform by any law of the United States, or any person who refuses or neglects to aid and assist any supervisor, marshal, or deputy marshal, or either of them, in the performance of his duties, when required by him, or either of them, to give such aid, "shall be liable to instant arrest without process, and shall be punished by imprisonment not more than two years, or by a fine of not more than $3,000, or by such fine and imprisonment." Under this section a citizen who, "by solicitation" or respectful appeal to the deputy marshal not to arrest and imprison his neighbor for offering to vote, may be indicted in the Federal court, and be imprisoned two years and fined $3,000.

Mr. President, the Supreme Court of the United States said, in the Cruikshank case, quoted a few moments since, that "the right to vote in the States comes from the States," which means unmistakeably, if it means anything, that the States have the exclusive right, not only to prescribe the qualifications of voters, but also to determine when the citizen has complied with the requirements of the Constitution and the laws of the State so as to have become a qualified voter. Yet, notwithstanding the fact that the Federal Government has no power under the Constitution, as that instrument is construed by the Supreme Court, to prescribe the qualifications of voters, or to determine when they are qualified and legal voters, these election laws which we propose to repeal assume absolute control of the qualifications of the voter as well as the times, places, and manner of holding the elections.

Section 2007, as before stated, declares that a citizen shall be entitled to vote upon a qualification different from and in conflict with that prescribed by the laws of the State; but worse, much worse than this, these election laws send Federal supervisors and deputy marshals to the places of registration and to the polls, with authority, not only to supervise and keep the peace, but to prevent fraudulent registration and fraudulent voting and fraudulent conduct on the part of the State's registrar and the State's judges of election, clothed with authority to arrest and imprison without warrant these officers of the State. If the supervisor is to prevent fraudulent registration, he must decide who it is lawful to register, under the law of the State, and who it would be fraudulent to register. Hence, his authority is supreme in determining this important question as to who may or may not thus qualify themselves to vote, and the authority of the officer of the State in the performance of what is purely a State duty, under State laws, is contemned and trampled down by Federal usurpation.

The States place their own judges or inspectors of election at the polls to determine who are entitled, under the laws of the State, to vote; but the Federal supervisor and deputy marshal are there, supported by the bayonets of the Army, not only to keep the peace at the polls, but to prevent fraudulent voting. John Jones offers his vote. The judges of election, the only persons known to the laws of the State authorized to determine the question decide that he is a legal voter. The deputy marshal, under the authority of this act of Congress, says no; Jones is not a legal voter, the vote is fraudulent, and he arrests and imprisons Jones for offering to vote, and arrests and imprisons the judges of election for fraudulent conduct in deciding that Jones had the right to vote, and in this way these petty Federal officials defy the laws of the States and decide for themselves who shall be registered as voters and who shall vote; or, if it suits the purposes of their party better, they may arrest the judges and break up the election altogether.

"To prevent fraud!" These are popular and taking catch-words. They have an honest and sanctimonious look in the statutes, and would command great respect if it was not known that the most stupendous frauds ever perpetrated upon a free people have been perpetrated by these officials appointed under the false pretense of preventing frauds and keeping the peace.

Mr. President, there is scarcely a section of this election law which does not contain gross and alarming usurpations of the rights and powers of the States, scarcely a section that does not bristle with insult to the States and the people, by the plainly implied distrust in the honesty of the administration of the States and in the integrity and patriotism of the people.

It is absurd to say the States shall prescribe the qualifications of voters when by act of Congress you put a hireling deputy marshal, whose chief recommendations are partisan zeal and bad character, to dominate the officers of the States, clothed with authority to reverse their decisions as to who are qualified and entitled to vote. It is doing by indirection what no man will have the hardihood to say Congress can do directly.

Mr. President, under this act not only the right to vote but the liberty of the citizen is made to depend upon the judgment, caprice, or corrupt partisan motives of this petty Federal official of brief but unlimited authority, whom, if the Army happens not to be present to support him, and he finds himself wanting in the physical power necessary thus to override and trample under foot the rights and liberty of the citizen, every person present, if called upon, must aid in this unwarrantable and odious assault upon the rights of the States and the liberty of the people, or incur the heavy and degrading penalties of fine and imprisonment, under the judgment of a Federal court, which may be based upon the verdict of a packed jury, under your present jury law.

Mr. President, it is not only unwise and impolitic, but dangerous in the last degree to lodge powers like these in the hands of any one man, even the most wise, discreet, and honorable. It becomes simply appalling and monstrous when placed in the hands of such men as have generally heretofore played the role of special deputy marshals in our large cities and towns. Let us examine for a moment the character of these guardians of peace and purity of elections.

I read from a statement made by the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON,] a few days since, as to the character of some of the supervisors and deputy marshals appointed in the city of New York in 1870; and in reproducing this statement I do not forget that the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] stated at the time that it first appeared in a party newspaper—the New York World—nor do I forget that the Senator failed to deny the truth of the statement, or to state that it had been denied in New York after its publication. Therefore I do not hesitate to reproduce it.

Who and what are these conservators of peace and purity?

Theodore, alias Mike Anthony, alias Snuffey, of 24 Cherry street, a laborer, thirty-five years of age, married, and cannot read or write. Anthony was arrested by Detective James Finn, of the fourth precinct, on July 24, 1870, for larceny from the person, and was held in $2,000 bail for trial by Justice Hogan. He was indicted by the grand jury on the charge on the 23d of August last.

Joseph Frazier, of 279 Water street, is a thief and confederate of thieves.

James Miller is the keeper of a den of prostitution in the basement of 339 Water street.

James Tinnigan keeps a similar den in the basement of 337 Water street.

James Sullivan, alias Slocum, keeps a house of prostitution at 330 Water street, which is a resort for desperate thieves.

Frank Winkle keeps a house of prostitution at 337½ Water street. The police are frequently called in to quell fights in Winkle's place, and it bears a hard reputation.

The radical authorities have appointed one John, alias "Buckey," McCabe a supervisor of the eighth district, Fifteenth ward. He is now under indictment for shooting a man with intent to kill. This precious "supervisor" originated here, and was first known to the police for his dexterity in robbing emigrants. His picture is in the "rogues' gallery" at police headquarters in this city, No. 225. He was known as "Pat. Maddon," alias "Old Sow," alias Honsey Nichols, alias Dennis McCabe. His real name is Andrew Andrews. His wife resides in North Pearl street, and the "supervisor" of the eighth district, Fifteenth ward, New York, is down in the directory as a citizen of Albany.

Thomas McIntire, marshal Eighth ward; has been frequently arrested for beating his aged mother; sent several times to Blackwell's Island.

Timothy Lynch, marshal sixth district, First ward; a Washington Market lounger.

Peter Mose, marshal Sixth ward; an habitual drunkard.

John Connor, supervisor first district, First ward; keeps a disorderly gin-mill, resort of lowest characters.

Francis Jordan, supervisor sixth district, First ward; lives in New Jersey; was turned out of the post-office by Postmaster James for bad conduct.

Bernard Dugan, supervisor eighth district, First ward; habitual drunkard. His wife left him on account of his drunkenness, and procured a divorce on that ground.

John Tobin, supervisor ninth district, First ward; arrested about six months ago for grand larceny.

Patrick Murphy, supervisor fourth district, Sixth ward; two years ago distributed fraudulent naturalization papers, and would furnish them to anybody that would promise to vote for Grant.

Edward Slevin, jr., supervisor second district, Fourth ward; has an indictment now pending against him in court of general sessions for cutting a boy named Kilkenny.

Michael Foley, supervisor fourth district, Fourth ward; well-known repeater, voting for anybody that will pay.

James F. Day, supervisor seventh district, Fourth ward; shot at a man in a fight between the Walsh Association and a gang from Water street.

John Connors, alias "Jockey," supervisor third district, Fourth ward; a well-known desperate character.

Harry Rice, supervisor thirteenth district, Sixth ward; was connected with the Chatham-street concert-saloon murder, and fled to Nebraska to escape punishment.

Thomas Lane, supervisor seventeenth district, Sixth ward; formerly keeper of a notorious den at Five Points; headquarters of thieves and robbers.

John Lane, supervisor twenty-second district, same ward; was indicted for receiving stolen goods; has served a term in Sing Sing.

Edward Foley, supervisor sixth district, Ninth ward; arrested last year for stealing a watch.

Humphrey Ayers, supervisor eighteenth district, Ninth ward; arrested six years ago for robbing the United States mail.

John Dowling, supervisor nineteenth district, Ninth ward; arrested August 20, 1869, for till-tapping.

James Fitzsimmons, supervisor twentieth district, Ninth ward; arrested August 1, 1868, for robbery.

John Martin, supervisor fifth district, Twelfth ward; arrested a few years ago under an indictment for arson.

Samuel Rich, supervisor fourth district, Thirteenth ward; served a term of two years at Sing Sing for felonious assault.

John, alias "Buckey" McCabe, supervisor eighth district, Fifteenth ward; charged with shooting a man with intent to kill about a year ago.

William P. Burke, supervisor twentieth district, Eighth ward; served his term in the State prison of Massachusetts for burglary; also two years in the New York State prison.

James McCabe, supervisor fourth district, Eighth ward; now confined in the Tombs under indictment for highway robbery.

William Irving, supervisor fourteenth district, Eighth ward; has served a term in Sing Sing prison for burglary committed in the Eighth ward, and has never been pardoned.

Patrick Henry Kily, alias Fred Williams, supervisor twenty-second district, Eighth ward; keeper of a house of ill-fame, resort of the lowest and vilest characters.

Patrick Hefferman, supervisor of the tenth district, Sixth ward; arrested some time since for attempted murder.

Frederick Sterringer, supervisor Eighth ward; has been arrested several times for keeping disorderly house.

J. F. Baderhop, supervisor Tenth ward; arrested for murder a few years since.

Ed. Weaver, marshal in Eighth ward; has been but a short time out of State's prison, where he has been serving out his sentence.

Walter Prince, (colored,) marshal Eighth ward; now in prison awaiting trial for highway robbery.

Andrew Andrews, alias Hans Nicols, marshal; panel-thief; been sentenced two or three times to State's prison, and has just returned from Blackwell's Island.

Now, Mr. President, after this specimen of the character of persons selected in 1870 to supervise and control State officers in the matter of conducting elections in New York, let us look for a moment to how this system of Federal supervision of elections has worked in other localities, and the extent to which the freedom of the ballot-box and the fairness of elections have been preserved by these model custodians of Federal power in the promotion of peace and good order at the polls. I read from the evidence of Judge Mackey, of South Carolina, taken before the Wallace committee, a few days since, as to some of the events of the election of 1876 in that State:

THOMAS J. MACKEY sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you reside?
Answer. Chester, South Carolina.
Q. How long have you resided in the State of South Carolina?
A. From my birth; I am a native of the State.
Q. What is your official position?
A. Circuit judge.
Q. What counties comprise your circuit?
A. York, Lancaster, Chester, and Fairfield—the upper portion of the State.
Q. How long have you been circuit judge?
A. Nearly eight years.
Q. Were you circuit judge during last year?
A. I was.
Q. What has been your political affiliation?
A. Until 1876 with the republican party; from that date with the democratic party.
Q. Were you present at the election in 1876 in Chester?
A. I was.

The CHAIRMAN. Please state, Judge Mackey, what you saw at the polls in 1876 in regard to the military at Chester.

The WITNESS. I was called upon on the 7th day of November, 1876, while the general election was being held in the State for State officers, member of the Legislature, members of Congress, and presidential electors, to interpose my official authority to check the interference of the military and deputy marshals with the voters. On the afternoon before the election there arrived in Chester a detachment of about forty men of the Eighteenth Infantry, United States Army, and coincident with the arrival a number of persons, numbering twenty-nine or thirty, appeared at the military encampment, about four hundred yards off. They wore badges as United States deputy marshals.

By Mr. TELLER:

Q. Who did—the military?
A. These persons who claimed to be deputy marshals wore badges designating them as deputy marshals. They were headed by one James Cantan, a white man from Columbia, South Carolina.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Proceed.
A. Several of them openly proclaimed in my hearing their purpose to carry the election, and exhibited a printed circular purporting to have been signed by the Attorney-General of the United States, Attorney-General Taft, directed to the marshals in the several States, in which the deputy marshals were instructed that they should——

Mr. TELLER. I object to that. That circular can be produced, and there is no use going into it in this way. I object to what the circular contained being stated, because it can be produced.

WITNESS. I only referred to it to explain my own action.

* * * * * * *

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Go on without stating what the circular contained.
A. I desire to say that it instructed them to disregard the process of the State courts in the exercise of their duties. My court convened that evening in Chester, and I declared that information had been laid before me by numerous citizens that they were threatened with violence.

By Mr. TELLER:

Q. Wait a moment. Were these complaints in writing, affidavits, or anything of that kind?
A. Not at that stage. I stated that an attempt to exercise the powers claimed by these parties would, I feared, result in a breach of the public peace, and I charged the sheriff to be prudent and careful.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you make an order of the court?
A. Yes, sir.

Mr. TELLER. I submit that it would be better to have the order.

The CHAIRMAN. He need not give the contents of the order.

The WITNESS. The next morning the polls were opened at six, and at about seven o'clock several citizens called on me and complained that they were being intimidated in the exercise of the elective franchise, one of them, a colored man, with his head bleeding; he had been stricken down by a deputy marshal. He was remitted to a trial justice, the committing magistrate, to make his complaint. The magistrate issued warrants embracing sixteen deputy marshals charged with intimidating voters. I countersigned those warrants on being informed by the sheriff that these parties had fled to the military encampment. Four of them were arrested upon those warrants and brought before me and were sent to the justice who had issued the warrants. Their preliminary examination was had there. They were bound over to answer in the court of the general sessions, under our statute, for intimidating voters, which was to assemble in February, 1877. At two o'clock in the day complaint was lodged before me that the chief deputy marshal of the county, Isaac Cassels, had, at the head of a band of colored republicans, assaulted colored voters at Kearney Hill precinct, Chester County, tearing from their hands the Hayes and Hampton ticket; several of these voters refusing to surrender their tickets had been knocked down by Isaac Cassels and those associated with him. The trial justice being reported ill, I issued the warrant in that case myself.

Isaac Cassels fled to the military encampment of a detachment of the Eighteenth Infantry, then posted within the vicinity of the Kearney Hill precinct. The officer at first refused to surrender him, but on his attention being called to the fifty-third article of war in the Revised Articles of War of June, 1874, providing that an officer resisting the execution of process issued by the judge of any State court should be court-martialed, and on conviction cashiered, he surrendered Isaac Cassels on the warrant, that included four of the deputy marshals, who were placed on trial. They alleged that they acted in the due exercise of their official powers. It was held that there was no authority for appointing a deputy special marshal beyond the limits of a city having a population of twenty thousand inhabitants or upward. Three of them were acquitted. Isaac Cassels was convicted and sentenced to a term of three months' imprisonment in the county jail, the lowest penalty prescribed by law.

At about the time I issued the warrant for Isaac Cassels I learned that the military had taken possession of the poll. I was then standing at a distance of two hundred yards from the poll conversing with a gentleman when this information was given me. I looked out; saw the military just marching into the court-house yard. The polls were opened in the court-house. There were two polls, one above and one below. I passed on to the vicinity of the court-house and saw that a detachment of the Eighteenth Infantry, numbering nineteen men, under Lieutenant Hinton, had formed in two lines, their right resting at a point within thirty feet of the poll, and voters in passing to the poll were required to pass between these two lines of soldiers with fixed bayonets.

On complaint made to me on oath that voters were interfered with by the military and threatened, I issued a warrant for Lieutenant Hinton and his entire detachment, which was placed in the hands of the sheriff, with orders to use the necessary force to execute the warrant. The sheriff made a verbal report that Lieutenant Hinton stated that he had been summoned by a deputy marshal; further, that there was no breach of the peace at the polls, all having proceeded quietly, except a breach committed by a deputy marshal in wresting tickets from the hands of voters. Lieutenant Hinton had declared to him that he had not interfered.

By Mr. PLATT:

Q. Was that what the sheriff or what Hinton reported?
A. That is what the sheriff reported; and he reported that Lieutenant Hinton declared that he was informed when he marched to the polls that violence was imminent at the polls, and that there had been a breach of the peace, in fact; that he had no intention to interfere with voters, and asked to be saved the disgrace of an arrest and probable committal to jail, and stated that he would remove his troops back of the court-house and out of view of the voters. The sheriff desired to know of me whether he should proceed to execute the warrant or suspend its execution in view of the retirement of the detachment from the front of the poll, leaving the way to the polls clear. I instructed him that that would be sufficient. The military were removed, the ways to the polls were not obstructed by the military, and that was done. I saw the detachment a few minutes after in the rear of the court-house.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Describe, if you can, the conduct of the deputy marshals toward the voters.

A. Several of the deputy marshals that I saw were engaged in distributing republican tickets. They were uttering oaths, threats, curses, charging the colored persons who had democratic tickets in their hands (they were in line with the whites waiting their respective turns to vote, and they had the Hayes and Hampton ticket) with betraying their race, cursing them, and using threats and violence; these marshals consisting, some of them, of the very lowest characters in the community—ex-convicts.

Q. Were they white or colored?

A. All colored except one. That one was James Canton, a detective from Columbia.

Q. How many of them were there?

A. Twenty-nine or thirty, I counted.

Q. Did you see their commissions?

A. I saw the commission of one a few days after the election—Isaac Cassels; he who had been taken from the military encampment.

Q. By whom was it signed?

A. The United States marshal for the State of South Carolina, R. M. Wallace.

Q. Was there any indorsement upon it?

A. The words were on the head of the commission, "Stand by your party."

Q. What was Mr. Cassel's attitude toward the remaining twenty-nine marshals? Was he the chief?

A. He claimed to be the chief deputy marshal. He was an ex-convict.

Q. For what?

A. Grand larceny—hog-stealing.

Q. Where had he been convicted?

A. In the court of general sessions for the county of Chester, before my predecessor, in 1871.

Q. Had he been sent to the penitentiary?

A. Sent to the penitentiary and pardoned.

Q. Do you know the names of any of the rest of the deputy marshals, and what their past histories had been?

A. Major Brown, who claimed to be a deputy marshal and wore the badge of a deputy marshal, was convicted of rape in 1869 and sentenced to the penitentiary.

By Mr. TELLER:

Q. A colored man?

A. A colored man; he still resides at Chester.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Can you give the names of any others?

A. Alexander George, convicted of petit larceny twice. Henry Saunders; I do not know that Saunders was convicted.

Q. Is he a man of good character?

A. A notoriously bad man; a drunkard.

Q. Do you know whether the marshal who appointed them was acquainted with these men?

A. I do; he was thoroughly familiar with them; he knew them personally; they were active agents in the canvass of his father.

Q. What was the composition of the jury before whom these deputy marshals were tried?

A. In the case of Isaac Cassels, nine were republicans, colored, and three democrats, white—parties who were classed in their political affiliations as republicans and democrats. There was no judicial test of that fact.

Q. Nine colored men and three whites were on the jury?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there at that time, 1876, at the polls any breach of the peace that you know of?

A. Not beyond what I have stated, by the deputy marshals.

Q. Was there to your knowledge or did you see any interference with the tickets of voters by the deputy marshals?

A. I did.

Q. What did they do?

A. By Alexander George and Henry Saunders proceeding to the line where colored voters were that had the Hayes-Hampton ticket. There were three tickets voted: the Hayes-Chamberlain ticket, the Tilden-Hampton ticket, and the Hayes-Hampton ticket. The purpose of the Hayes-Hampton ticket was to draw from the republican ranks the better element to vote for Hampton for governor, while at the same time to satisfy the political consciences of republicans who felt that they were bound to vote for the candidate of the national republican party, while as a matter of local administration they could support the democratic candidate. That ticket was torn from the hands of voters by Alexander George. It came under my notice.

Q. You saw that yourself?

A. I saw that from a jewelry store opposite the poll on the street.

Q. Was it in more than one instance?

A. In three or four instances.

Q. About how many at that time of day were there in line prepared to vote?

A. Between seven and eight o'clock in the morning, the point of time of which I speak, there were probably eight hundred persons.

Q. What portion of these were colored?

A. Very nearly two-thirds.

Q. Where was the polling place?

A. At the court-house, precinct No. 1 above, and precinct No. 2 below. Two precincts or polling-places were established at the court-house.

Q. What is the population of the town of Chester?

A. About 2,500. Under our statute a voter of the county has a right to vote in any precinct in the county at a general election. Many of the voters were from other precincts.

Q. Please state now as to 1878. What was the conduct of the deputy marshals there?

A. The conduct of the deputy marshals did not fall under my observation in 1878.

Q. Do you know whether there were deputy marshals at the polls in Chester in 1878?

A. They were not. The marshal was well aware of the fact that under my ruling deputy marshals would have been apprehended had they attempted to exercise their powers at the polls.

By Mr. TELLER:

Q. You made a speech in which you stated that, did you not?

A. No, sir; not a speech; but in a ruling on the trial of Isaac Cassels I held that his act was ultra vires.

Q. Did you not make a speech a day or two before the election, in which you said that if any man attempted in a district outside of a town of twenty thousand inhabitants to act as a deputy marshal you would put him in jail?

A. I did not make a speech.

Q. But you said it publicly?

A. I regarded it simply as a conspiracy under the forms of law; I would have done it.

Q. You stated publicly that you would do that?

A. No; but that the party would be subject to indictment; and I would unhesitatingly, upon proper complaint, issue a warrant for the apprehension of persons interfering with voters in the pretended character of deputy marshals, holding that the appointment was ultra vires—that there was no power. That prevented deputy marshals from appearing at Chester.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you know of any instance of intimidation of colored voters, republicans or democrats, for voting the democratic ticket in 1878?

A. I do not.

Q. Do you know of any act of violence committed upon colored democrats or colored men for voting the democratic ticket?

A. I do.

Q. Please state what instance it was.

A. In the county of Sumter, on the night of the 8th of November, the night after the last general election, a colored democrat was threatened——

By Mr. TELLER:

Q. Did you hear this?

A. I heard it through the testimony.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was there anybody indicted and tried in the court over which you presided for burning the house of a colored democrat?

A. There was at the March term, 1879, in the court of general sessions for the county of Sumter.

Q. Who were they?

A. Two colored men were indicted, charged with arson.

Q. What was the charge against them?

A. The burning of a barn situated in the county of Sumter. The name of the prosecuting witness I forget, a colored person, however. A barn, the property of a person of color, was burnt. That was testified to. Of course it was not alleged in the indictment that he was a person of color. The proof was that this person whose barn was burnt was threatened by the two defendants, the day before the election, that if he did not withdraw from the colored democratic club they would put fire to him. That was their language. The proof was that the two defendants had fired the barn of the prosecuting witness, a barn located within sixty yards of his dwelling, which is arson by our statute.

Q. When?

A. That the barn had been consumed the night after the election. The jury returned a verdict of guilty. The defendants were ably and earnestly defended. There were eight colored republicans on the jury that convicted. They were sentenced to the penitentiary. There was no exception to the charge of the presiding judge and no appeal from the verdict.

By Mr. TELLER:

Q. They were indicted for arson, and convicted, and sent to the penitentiary as being guilty of arson?

A. Yes, sir. They were defended by a very prominent democratic lawyer in Sumter, Mr. J. Fleming.

Q. Appointed by the court?

A. No, sir; retained by the defendants.

Q. Do you reside in Sumter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that your circuit?

A. Under the act of 1877 the circuit judges are required to rotate, to pass through the entire State, holding the respective circuits in their order under the rotation system. Sumter is the third circuit.

These supervisors and deputy marshals, and such as these, are the creatures selected under this system of Federal election laws to dominate and control the officers of the States in the execution of the laws of the States.

Mr. President, is there a State in the Union so weak as not to be able, or whose people are so corrupt as not to be willing, to keep the peace at the polls and to conduct its own elections fairly and honestly, so that the will of the majority, freely expressed through the ballot-box, shall be recorded and sustained?

If there be such a State, then indeed has the theory of government, so happily conceived by our fathers, proved a most signal failure; for that theory is based upon the idea that the people are capable of self-government. Are they capable? or is it necessary that deputy marshals should be assigned to the duty of controlling them?

For nearly three-quarters of a century the country was prosperous, progressive, and happy without Federal interference with the freedom of elections, or administering degrading test oaths to jurors.

These may be, and doubtless are, convenient instrumentalities in the hands of an unscrupulous political party with which to perpetuate its power, but they are not the less subversive of the rights of and degrading to a free people.

This Federal election machinery is an immense engine of power in the hands of the Executive, who, if unscrupulous, may use it to perpetuate the power of his party. And in the light of recent events it requires no great stretch of imagination to suppose that the love of power and place may possibly induce even a President to be not overscrupulous as to the means by which the political destinies of the country are controlled.

The President appoints Federal judges. The judges appoint election supervisors.

The President appoints marshals. The marshals appoint their deputies without limit as to number.

The President is Commander-in-Chief of the Army, and he may send the Army to "keep the peace at the polls." With his supervisors and marshals dominating at the office of registration and supported at the polls by the Army, dominating there, with power to arrest whomsoever they please without warrant and without charge, if they fail to alarm and drive every timid voter of the opposing party from the polls, they may arrest them by the thousand, as Davenport did in New York in 1878, and hold them in custody until the polls are closed, and thus the freedom of elections and the purity of the ballot-box are preserved and the triumph of the party is secured. And in addition to the vast power wielded through these instrumentalities, when you take into account the ninety thousand active, earnest partisans who hold office under Executive appointment, you may form some estimate of the danger to constitutional liberty from executive influence and power.

Yet the people who are thus wronged and insulted by this Federal interference are asked to believe that Federal supervision of elections is necessary to the protection of the newly acquired rights of the freedmen of the South.

To show how utterly false is such pretense it is only necessary to look to the practical operations of this cunningly devised partisan scheme to see the extent to which this machinery has been used to protect the rights of that class of voters.

It is shown by the report of the Attorney-General and the reports of investigating committees that in 1876 there were 4,863 supervisors of elections appointed, and 11,610 marshals. One thousand seven hundred and seventy-nine of these supervisors, more than one-third of the whole number, were appointed in the State of New York, while more than one-fourth of the whole number of marshals were on duty in the same State.

The whole number of supervisors appointed in 1878, was		4,881
Of these New York had	1,953
And Pennsylvania	1,682, making	3,635
Two-thirds of the whole number in these two States, leaving only (to the other thirty-six States)		1,246
The whole number of deputy marshals appointed in 1878, was		5,494
Of these New York had		2,308
Leaving only in the other thirty-seven States		3,186
For the luxury of this Federal supervision of State elections in 1876 there was paid out of the Treasury		$285,921 27
Of this there was expended in the State of New York		156,000 00
More than half; leaving only		129,921 27
as the amount expended in the other thirty-seven States. And of this balance there was expended in Pennsylvania		37,000 00
While in the States of Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia, only		48,719 86 was expended; only about one-sixth of the whole amount.
And in 1878 there was expended of the money of the people for this purpose		222,714 22
Of this amount there was paid to supervisors of elections in the State of New York other than the chief supervisors	$52,074 50
To deputy marshals	38,647 55
The chief supervisors in New York have not reported their expenditures for 1878, but assuming them to be the same as in 1876	39,261 28
It makes the total expended in that State		129,983 33
Which leaves as the amount expended in the other thirty-seven States only		92,730 89

I learn from the deposition of Marshal Payne, of the southern district of New York, taken before the Wallace committee a few days since, the following facts as to the amounts of public money expended upon supervisors and deputy marshals in the city of New York in the matter of supervising elections under these laws:

In 1872	$100,687 20
In 1876	79,955 62
Making an aggregate of	$324,295 39

of the money of the people used for the purpose of controlling the elections in a single city.

Mr. President, these facts and figures show that it has taken about five times as many supervisors and marshals and has cost about five times as much money to protect the voting rights of the freedmen in the single State of New York as in all the States in the South together.

It is not true, Mr. President, and never was true, that these election laws were enacted to protect the colored man in his right to vote. The object and purpose extended far beyond that, the main object being to enable the party in power to perpetuate its supremacy by the bribes and intimidations which these statutes enable it to offer. Is it not a bribe, corrupt, plain, and undisguised, for a marshal to propose to a member of the opposing party to appoint him a special deputy at $5 per day, on condition that he will vote and work for the marshal's ticket? And under this law there is no limit to the number of deputies the marshal may appoint. Potent as this influence is in controlling votes, the power of arrest enables the marshal to drive more opposing voters from the polls than he can bring to the support of his ticket by this species of bribery. And when this prostituted hireling of brief but despotic authority dons his badge of office, which proclaims him the representative of the aggregated powers of the Government, backed and supported by the Army of the United States, with authority to say to the registrar, or the judge of election, "Your decision is fraudulent; in the name and by the authority of the United States I arrest and imprison you." Or he may say to the citizen, whom the sworn officers of the State have decided to be a qualified voter, "Your offer to vote is fraudulent; you shall not vote; off to a prison."

Mr. President, section 2022 of the Revised Statutes puts it in the power of a mere subordinate hireling of a political party to override the laws of a State, to reverse the decisions of its officers, and to deprive the citizen, not only of his right to vote, but of his liberty "without due process of law." With such powers it is no wonder that the party controlling this machinery should gain in doubtful districts somewhat in proportion to the number of deputy marshals employed and the amount of money used—a cunningly devised scheme to convert the money that is wrung from the people by taxation into a corruption fund with which to control elections and cheat the people of their choice.

And yet, Mr. President, when the majority in the two Houses incorporate in an appropriation bill provisions repealing statutes so nefarious as these, and so liable to abuse, and so habitually abused, it is characterized by republican Senators generally as revolutionary and by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] as "the new rebellion against nationality; * * * an attempt to do by legislation what four years of bloody rebellion failed to do by the sword, namely, to destroy our nationality."

Sharp, indeed, must be the vision and fertile the brain that can see rebellion against nationality or destruction to the Government in the simple proposition to repeal statutes which destroy the purity and impartiality of the jury-box and invade the freedom of elections.

The Senator may see, as I think I do, the downfall of the political party to which he belongs in the repeal of these laws, which are the chief tenure by which it holds power; but I beg to assure him that there is a broad and well-marked distinction between the downfall of his party and the destruction of the Government. But I do not wonder, Mr. President, that the Senator is extravagant in his figures of speech, for so meritorious and important are these laws in the estimation of the republican party, and so useful to that party is this election machinery, that every republican in Congress has said by his vote and the republican President has said by his vetoes that they will starve the Army and allow the civil departments of the Government to be closed for want of appropriations rather than consent to the repeal of these statutes and surrender the power to arbitrarily control the elections.

Mr. President, repeal these statutes, wipe them from the statute-book, and allow them no longer to disgrace our civilization, and thereby secure to the people of the States free, fair, and honest elections, uncontrolled and unawed by the interference of corrupt partisan marshals supported by the bayonets of the Army, and the republican party may and most probably will go down, but the Government will be perpetuated under auspices much more favorable to peace, prosperity, happiness, and nationality than it has enjoyed for many years, or can ever enjoy under the rule of the republican party.

The country may then hope to see no more class legislation by which the interests of capital are fostered and promoted at the expense of the honest labor and productive industries of the country.

It may hope to see no more returning-board frauds by which the will of the people may be thwarted.

It may hope to see no more traffic in post-traderships or peculations in whisky rings by the incumbents of high places.

It may hope to see the military held subordinate to civil authority.

It may hope to see the chosen officers of the States administer the laws of the States free from Federal interference and domination.

It may expect to see the Government of the United States honestly and economically administered and the supremacy of its authority, within the scope of all the powers delegated to it by the Constitution, asserted, respected, and maintained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. DAWES in the chair.) What is the further pleasure of the Senate in regard to the bill now pending?

Mr. HARRIS. It may go over informally.

Mr. WALLACE. Let it remain on the Calendar or lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will lie on the table unless objection be made.

REPRINTING OF A BILL.

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. President, on Friday last I reported from the Select Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries the bill (H. R. No. 1847) to provide for the appointment of a "Mississippi River commission" for the improvement of said river from the head of the passes, near its mouth, to its headwaters. This morning I notice in the printed copy of the bill several mistakes. I send up a bill which conforms to the report of the committee, and ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the order to print will be made.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M.

ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 435) to correct the reading of "An act making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and completion of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1879.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate;

A bill (H. R. No. 2002) making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 66) legalizing the action of the President and the Secretary of War in sending rations and tents to the yellow-fever sufferers.

ENROLLED BILL.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 435) to correct an error in "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1879.

ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the further pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. WALLACE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at one o'clock and thirty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 9, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. SAMUEL DOMER, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at ten minutes past twelve o'clock. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to appropriate committees, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider. Under this call joint resolutions and memorials of State and territorial Legislatures are in order. Under this call, also, resolutions calling upon the Executive Departments for information will be in order for reference to appropriate committees.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent that the call be extended until all the States and Territories have been gone through.

Mr. CONGER. I object unless it be confined to bills and joint resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot qualify his objection. He may make it absolutely or not at all.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman may ask unanimous consent for the extension of the call qualified in the way I have suggested.

Mr. DUNNELL. I shall not modify my request.

Mr. CONGER. It will be remembered that under the call last Monday things were introduced that I had to object to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business of the morning hour, coming over from the morning hour of last Monday, is the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to lay on the table the appeal of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] from the decision of the Chair in relation to a resolution for an amendment to the rules introduced by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair directs to be read the entry in the Journal.

JUNE 2, 1879.

Mr. SPRINGER gave notice of the following proposed amendment to Rule 51, viz:

Resolved, That Rule 51 be amended by adding thereto the following:

"And any pending measure reported but not disposed of shall be regarded as unfinished business, and shall be in order after the morning hour of any day when such business would be in order."

Mr. CONGER made the point of order that the said notice of amendment to the rules was not in order during the call of States and Territories on Monday for bills on leave.

The SPEAKER sustained the point of order on the ground that the rules and practice of the House did not provide for notice of amendments to the rules during the said call.

Mr. SPRINGER thereupon moved the reference of the said amendment to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CONGER made the point of order that the rules did not provide for the reference of proposed amendments to the rules on the call of States and Territories on Monday for bills on leave.

The SPEAKER overruled the point of order on the ground that under the decision of a former Speaker, sustained on appeal by the House, the said proposition submitted by Mr. SPRINGER was in order under said call, said decision being binding on the Chair until reversed by the House.

Mr. CONGER appealed from the decision of the Chair.

Pending which,

Mr. COX moved that the said appeal do lie on the table.

When

The morning hour expired.

The SPEAKER. The question is on laying on the table the appeal from the decision of the Chair by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I took that course——

Mr. ACKLEN. Debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes the gentleman from Michigan wishes to make some statement in reference to his appeal.

Mr. CONGER. I made that appeal to give further time for considering the decision of the Chair. I desired further time to consider it myself. During the time that has since elapsed I have examined the matter, and I think under the new rule if such a resolution once comes before the House in the morning hour it can be referred. Therefore I withdraw my appeal.

The SPEAKER. The appeal is withdrawn. The call commences with the State of Maine.

Mr. SPRINGER. I submit that the call should begin where it left off at the close of the morning hour on Monday last. The call rested with the State of Illinois when the morning hour expired. I was the last member recognized during the morning hour.

Mr. CONGER. Subsequently, by unanimous consent, all bills were allowed to be introduced without any objection. Although the call of States was not formally gone through with, yet no objection was made to the introduction of bills. I think the call should commence again at the beginning.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour expired pending the motion to lay on the table the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. SPRINGER. No injustice can be done to any one, because the call, commencing at the State of Illinois, will stop there when all the States and Territories have been called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read from the record of the proceedings of Monday last:

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. CONGER. I will take the coming week to look over the authorities on this point.

The call rests with the State of Illinois.

NANCY E. KELLEY.

Mr. FORSYTHE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2181) granting a pension to Nancy E. Kelley, widow of Thomas F. Kelley, of Company F, Fifty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HENRY G. CONRAD.

Mr. FORSYTHE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2182) granting a pension to Henry G. Conrad, Fifty fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

RELIEF OF CITIZENS OF INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. GUNTER (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2183) for the relief of such citizens of the Indian nations and tribes of the Indian Territory as lost property and effects on account of the war of the rebellion; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES R. BERRY.

Mr. GUNTER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2184) for the relief of James R. Berry, of Arkansas; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

PROPERTY OF CHEROKEE CITIZENS.

Mr. GUNTER (by request) also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 86) directing the Secretary of War to ascertain the description and value of the property of the Cherokee citizens included in the present military reservation and post at Fort Gibson, Indian Territory, and to report the same to Congress; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SUITS AGAINST CORPORATIONS.

Mr. ACKLEN. I think the regular order is the unfinished business, being the resolution which I offered for the appointment of a select committee in relation to claims against the government of Nicaragua.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. Motions to suspend the rules are not yet in order. The resolution offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ACKLEN] will be read.

CLAIMS AGAINST NICARAGUA.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five members of this House be appointed by the Speaker, which committee shall have power to sit during the recess, to inquire into all claims of citizens of the United States against the government of Nicaragua for indemnity for lives of relatives taken, wounds and other personal injuries inflicted, and property taken, injured, or destroyed, which claims have heretofore been filed in the Department of State and now remain pending and unsatisfied; and said committee shall ascertain and determine what amounts and to what persons the government of Nicaragua is liable to make compensation on account thereof, and report the same, with the evidence in reference thereto, to Congress at its next session; and said committee shall give such public notice as it may deem necessary of the times and places when and where it will sit to hear said claims and testimony in support of the same, and shall have power to send for persons and papers, and administer oaths. It shall also obtain and use all proofs relative thereto on file in the Department of State, and such other evidence as any party in interest may produce and offer that it may deem pertinent thereto. It shall have power to employ a clerk and a stenographer, and the necessary expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on the vouchers of the chairman of said committee.

Mr. ACKLEN. I desire simply to say——

Mr. CONGER. I wish to know how this comes in.

The SPEAKER. As unfinished business coming over from the morning hour of a former day, when such class of business as this was in order to be offered.

Mr. ACKLEN. I desire to say that this has been recommended by the Secretary of State, has passed the Senate, and been favorably reported by a sub-committee of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House. I demand the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. I do not see how this can come in during this morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the record to be examined. The Chair was advised by the journal clerk that this came up as unfinished business. [After a pause.] The Chair is advised that the resolution was offered, under Rule 52, on April 23, which was a Wednesday. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

52. Reports from committees having been presented and disposed of, the Speaker shall call for resolutions from the members of each State and Delegate from each Territory, beginning with Maine and the Territory last organized, alternately; and they shall not be debated on the very day of their being presented, nor on any day assigned by the House for the receipt of resolutions, unless where the House shall direct otherwise, but shall lie on the table, to be taken up in the order in which they were presented; and if on any day the whole of the States and Territories shall not be called, the Speaker shall begin on the next day where he left off the previous day: Provided, That no member shall offer more than one resolution, or one series of resolutions, all relating to the same subject, until all the States and Territories shall have been called.—January 14, 1829.

Mr. CONGER. It could not certainly come in until the remaining business of the morning hour had been disposed of, and the regular order would be to proceed with the call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read the rule under which the business of the morning hour of Mondays is conducted.

The Clerk read Rule 130, as follows:

All the States and Territories shall be called for bills on leave and resolutions every Monday during each session of Congress; and, if necessary to secure the object on said days, all resolutions which shall give rise to debate shall lie over for discussion, under the rules of the House already established; and the whole of said days shall be appropriated to bills on leave and resolutions, until all the States and Territories are called through. And the Speaker shall first call the States and Territories for bills on leave; and all bills so introduced during the first hour after the Journal is read shall be referred, without debate, to their appropriate committees: Provided, however, That a bill so introduced and referred, and all bills at any time introduced by unanimous consent and referred, shall not be brought back into the House upon a motion to reconsider. And on said call joint resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures for printing and reference may be introduced.

The SPEAKER. There seem to be two opportunities presented under two different rules for the introduction of resolutions; one is under Rule 52, which is after the exhausting of the call of the committees for reports during the usual morning hour, and the other is on Monday, under Rule 130, after the call of States for bills, &c., for reference has been complied with and completed.

The question arises naturally in the mind of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] whether these two rules merge in their operation after introduction of business under their provisions; whether, in fact, business reported under either call and unfinished would have a right to be considered as unfinished business not disposed of, where the operation of either rule for like business is reached on a subsequent day? It is a very nice point of order. This resolution was read and brought up on a Wednesday under Rule 52, and the same condition is now reached under Rule 130 for to-day.

The question is, whether the two rules are merged and the unfinished business of either can be considered as coming up under the operation of the opposite rule.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that the morning hour has expired.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] now makes the point of order that the morning hour has expired, and the Chair sustains the point of order and will reserve his decision on the first point of order until such time as the question may again occur in the order of business in the House.

account; and as to whether they have not likewise invested much of their funds in the purchase of stocks and bonds, or other evidences of debts of other railroads; and further, as to whether two certain contracts between said Union Pacific Railroad and the Kansas Pacific Railroad, made on or about the 23d of April, 1875, were not in contravention of the acts under which both of said roads were chartered, and of the special laws under which they are conducted; and that this committee have power to send for persons and papers.

And said committee are authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths. And said committee are further authorized to employ a stenographer at a fair compensation. And said committee are authorized to appoint a sub-committee of its own members for the purpose of pursuing these investigations, said committee when appointed to have all the powers conferred by this resolution. And said committee or its sub-committee may make their investigations either at the city of Washington or at any of the cities or other places where public buildings are being erected or material prepared, as they may deem proper; and said committee or its sub-committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of Congress; and the expenses attending the carrying out of these investigations shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, not to exceed $5,000; and the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized and directed to pay the same.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order on that resolution that it should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The pending motion is to suspend all the rules for the purpose of adopting the resolution; and if that motion shall prevail it will suspend the rule requiring a proposition of this kind to go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. Is this resolution the first in order according to the list?

The SPEAKER. It is a report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and the Chair is advised that it is a unanimous report.

Mr. CONGER. Is it any more privileged because it would enable that committee to make excursions than it would be if it were some other committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has always given the preference for motions to suspend the rules to members representing a committee over individual members.

Mr. CONGER. Then I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the vote had better be first taken viva voce; it may not be necessary to call the yeas and nays.

The question was taken viva voce; and

The SPEAKER announced that in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds had not voted in the affirmative.

Mr. MURCH called for a division.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let the resolution be again read.

Many MEMBERS. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. There is objection to reading the resolution again.

The question was taken upon a division; and there were—ayes 67, noes 72.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. MURCH called for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 116, nays 82, not voting 88; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House to the fourth amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 1) to repeal certain clauses of the sundry civil appropriation act, approved March 3, 1879.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the resolution of the House authorizing certain changes in House enrolled bill No. 1999, to amend an act making appropriations for rivers and harbors, &c.

IMPORTATION OF NEAT CATTLE FOR BREEDING PURPOSES.

Mr. COVERT. By instruction of the Committee on Agriculture I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 2006) to amend sections 2493 and 2494 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to the importation of neat cattle into the United States for breeding purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 2493 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2493. The importation of neat cattle and the hides of neat cattle from any foreign country into the United States is prohibited: Provided, That the operation of this section shall be suspended as to any foreign country or countries, or any part of such country or countries, whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall officially determine, and give public notice thereof, that such importation will not tend to the introduction or spread of contagious or infectious diseases among the cattle of the United States; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered, and it shall be his duty, to make all necessary orders and regulations to carry this law into effect, or to suspend the same as therein provided, and to send copies thereof to the proper officers in the United States, and to such officers or agents of the United States in foreign countries as he shall judge necessary: And provided further, That neat cattle may be imported from any portion of Great Britain into the United States for breeding purposes, under such directions, regulations, and restrictions as the Secretary of the Treasury may establish for the thorough inspection and examination of such neat cattle. If, upon such examination and investigation, such cattle shall be found to be free from any infectious or contagious disease, such cattle shall be permitted to be landed and received at any port in the United States, and taken to their place of destination."

Section 2494 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2494. The President of the United States, whenever, in his judgment, the importation of neat cattle and the hides of neat cattle may be made without danger of the introduction or spread of contagious or infectious disease among the cattle of the United States, may, by proclamation, declare the provisions of the preceding section prohibiting or restricting the importation of neat cattle and the hides of neat cattle from any foreign country into the United States to be inoperative; and the same shall be afterward inoperative and of no effect from and after thirty days from the date of said proclamation."

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask by unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be allowed to explain the bill.

The SPEAKER. How long?

Mr. COVERT. Very briefly.

Mr. DUNNELL. Say five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Speaker, the established law of this land today relative to the matter of cattle importation amounts to an almost entire prohibition of the importation of foreign animals. It prevents the reception into this country of a single head of foreign cattle unless the importation of animals from any particular country is made general. Under existing law it is true that the operation of the prohibition may be suspended as to any foreign country or countries—whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall officially determine and give notice that such importation will not tend to the introduction of infectious diseases among our native cattle. But this suspension of law is coupled with a number of embarrassing regulations, involving the giving of official notification to our representatives abroad, and with other technical conditions.

Under the law as it now stands the President of the United States may also, by proclamation, declare the ports of this country open for the reception of animals imported from any particular foreign country, but this provision also, if acted upon, would make the importation from any one country general or rather wholesale in its character. It would be unwise, undoubtedly, at this time to suspend the operations of existing law in general terms, and to open our ports for the reception of animals from any one section abroad in this general or wholesale manner. While this is so, there exists on the part of owners and raisers of choice animals in this country great embarrassment—I might go further and say great hardship—by reason of the existence of these prohibitory provisions. Should these provisions be continued there will be great danger of our choice kinds of cattle becoming entirely extinct. The amendment involved in the bill under discussion looks toward a remedy for this threatened evil. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may, in special cases and upon being satisfied that no evil results will follow his action in that regard, permit special importations of cattle into this country from Great Britain. It seems to me that no danger whatever can follow the adoption of this proposed amendment. The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to couple with his permission such restrictive measures against the possible introduction of contagious disease as in the exercise of his judgment should be invoked.

Since the introduction of this bill, Mr. Speaker, I have received letters from many gentlemen in various sections of the country and who are largely interested in the matter of cattle raising, who warmly approve the spirit of this proposed amendment. I hope, sir, that the bill will pass.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is this unanimously reported from the committee?

Mr. COVERT. It is.

Mr. MILLS. Let the bill be again read.

The bill was again read.

The rules were suspended and the bill passed, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I am unanimously authorized and directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report a substitute for the bill presented a few days ago (H. R. No. 2172) making appropriations for defraying the expenses of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government, and which was recommitted, and I now ask unanimous consent to submit a brief statement, and that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] may likewise be allowed to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. How long?

Mr. ATKINS. Five minutes each.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The substitute was read, as follows:

SEC. 3. That sections 4771, 4772, and 4773 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, providing for biennial examinations of pensioners, are hereby repealed: Provided, That the Commissioner of Pensions shall have the same power as heretofore to order special examinations, whenever, in his judgment, the same may be necessary, and to increase or reduce the pension according to right and justice; but in no case shall a pension be withdrawn or reduced except upon notice to the pensioner and a hearing upon sworn testimony, except as to the certificate of the examining surgeon. In order to provide for the speedy payment of arrearages of pensions, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue immediately in payment thereof, as they may be adjusted, the legal-tender currency, now in the United States Treasury, held as a special fund for the redemption of fractional currency under section 1 of joint resolution No. 17 of the Congress of the United States, approved July 22, 1876; and fractional currency presented for redemption shall be redeemed in any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 4. That the fifth paragraph of that portion of the act of June 20, 1878, making appropriation for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1879, and for other purposes, relating to the District of Columbia, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that the sum of money therein appropriated to pay the workingmen of said District shall be paid to those whose claims are due and unpaid from the District of Columbia for work under the superintendents of the late board of public works, and also from contractors whose accounts against the government of said District had been paid in part or in full prior or subsequently to the act of June 23, 1874, and of those who have not been paid prior to or since said date, by the late board of public works or by the commissioners of the District of Columbia; and the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to turn into the Treasury of the United States any moneys now in their possession due or belonging to contractors under the late board of public works, who have not paid their laborers or workmen: Provided, That if the said sum of $75,000 in said act mentioned shall not be sufficient to pay all such claims found to be due under the provisions of said act of June 20, 1878, and of this section, then there shall be made the original pro rata reduction of each claim and the amount to be paid on each claim shall be paid and received in full discharge of the claim of such workman; and that no such claims shall be received, filed, or audited subsequently to the 1st day of July, 1879: Provided further, That the amount or pro rata amount found to be due to each workman shall only be paid to him in person, if living, or in case of non-residents of the District of Columbia, by draft on the Treasury of the United States to his or their order, or to his or their legal representatives, if dead.

SEC. 5. That the pay of assistant messengers, firemen, watchmen, and laborers provided for in this act, unless otherwise specially stated in particular cases in the act of June 19, 1878, which it continues and makes available, (except as declared in the first section of this act,) shall be as follows: For assistant messengers, firemen, and watchmen, $720 per annum each; for laborers, $660 per annum each; and a sufficient amount to meet the provisions of this section is hereby appropriated.

Mr. ATKINS. The substitute which has been read at the desk by the Clerk differs in a very few respects from the bill which was reported the other day and recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, and which has been printed and laid on the desks of members.

The principal feature of difference between the substitute and the bill as originally reported consists in an appropriation of $150,000 for the payment of the salaries of storekeepers and gaugers necessitated by the increase of distilleries in several of the Southern States within the last few months. It really is almost in the nature of a deficiency for this year; but the Committee on Appropriations thought it was very important the appropriation should be made, in order that those officers might be paid.

This bill does not increase a single salary, unless it be considered that raising the pay of messengers from $660 to $720 is an increase. The pay of laborers is also raised from $600 to $660.

I deem it necessary, Mr. Speaker, to go over the various items of difference between this substitute and the bill reported the other day. They relate principally to clerical force. There are nine copyists, for instance, that were left out accidentally in the Land Office. The salary of the Third Assistant Secretary of State was left out accidentally, that salary having been formerly appropriated for in the sundry civil act. There is also in this bill, over and above what was in the bill reported the other day, provision for fifteen clerks for the Pension Bureau. Although we gave in the vetoed bill all that the Commissioner of Pensions asked, still he says, on account of the great increase of business necessitated by the arrearages of pensions act, he wants fifteen clerks more; and we have given him in this bill fifteen more than there were in the vetoed bill or than there are now in the law.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, re-enacts the present law with certain eliminations, certain things taken out which are not necessary, the occasions for them having lapsed. It is not necessary to go over them. I could not do it in the five minutes allowed me. There are no political restrictions upon this bill—political restrictions so called.

A MEMBER. Good!

Mr. ATKINS. The restriction that was upon the vetoed bill and which created such a contest upon this floor is not embraced in this bill. Nor is the appropriation for the contingent expenses of the courts of the country, amounting to $2,600,000 or $2,700,000, embraced in this bill. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that it was upon that portion of the appropriation bill that the restrictive clauses were placed with regard to the payment of deputy marshals and supervisors of elections. That matter will be embraced in a subsequent bill, a supplemental bill, if I may so style it, a supplemental judicial appropriation bill, which my honorable friend from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] will probably report to-day to the House.

The object, Mr. Speaker, in having adopted this plan to pass this appropriation bill was simply to avoid going over line by line and section by section a bill of ninety pages, which would have required perhaps a week or ten days' time to pass through this House, and how long it would have required to pass through the Senate I am not prepared to say. I admit that the mode of bringing this bill forward is somewhat irregular, and the manner of the bill itself is somewhat irregular. But, sir, with this explanation and with the additional remark that the Committee on Appropriations are unanimously agreed upon this bill, I yield the floor to my colleague upon the committee, the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

Mr. HAWLEY. As the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has said, this bill aims to do what was aimed at in the more regular legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, omitting what are characterized as the political sections. Now, we of the minority of the committee, and I might say the republicans in general, are opposed to the present form of the bill—very much opposed to it. As the bill stands it is a re-enactment in six or eight lines of the appropriations for the current year, with some fifteen or twenty pages, excepting those things that have been performed during the year. Of course, it is not necessary to repeat an appropriation for repairing the roof on the Medical Museum, for example. It is a re-enactment, therefore, of the appropriations for the current year, excepting a large number of things that have been done, and adding provisions on various matters that were not provided for in the act governing the current year—supplying various deficieneies and making various corrections.

Now, the minority would very much have preferred to pass the regular appropriation bill for these branches of the public service which was substantially approved by the last Congress, which went through this House and the Senate, came back from the Senate with certain amendments in which the House concurred, making approval No. 3, and which was again approved by a majority of the House when it was attempted to pass the bill over the veto, which makes approval No. 4. Four times Congress, within four months, has approved the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, which, minus the politics, we should have preferred to take because of its very much better form, because of its clearness in doing the work aimed at. We objected to this bill, and do now feel it is very seriously objectionable—the chairman of the committee admits that to some extent—by reason of its complication, and I might perhaps say its obscurity. But I do not deny that the Treasury Department, by detailing three men, the one with the old law before him, the other with the new bill before him, and the third with a slate and pencil, might in the course of a day find out what is appropriated; and I think the Government can live under it.

The bill provides, I suppose, substantially for the necessities of the Government in these branches of the service. But I am bound to say that I doubt whether there are three men in this House or in this city who have gone over it all from beginning to end—certainly not since it was entirely completed. A great deal has been rightly intrusted to the gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the committee, and the Committee on Appropriations have consented unanimously to support it, or at least to waive any objections to it. It contains, as has been stated sufficiently, no political matters of the kind ordinarily described as such, and we finally rather consented to its passage than approved of it. It also contains, I am bound to say, some general legislation, and I object to that, on principle, in appropriation bills.

Mr. ATKINS. There is no general legislation in this bill that was not in the vetoed bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is true. There is some in the vetoed bill, and I object to it. Now, then, I have intimated or suggested, but not detailed, the various serious objections made against the bill in the committee, and with these general observations I am willing that the bill shall pass that we may put an end to the expense and anxiety attending this prolonged extra session.

Mr. FINLEY. Have you any objections to referring this bill to the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have not.

Mr. FINLEY. I am not opposed to the bill, but I am opposed to suspending the rules and passing a bill of this magnitude in this manner—a bill that no one knows anything about.

Mr. ATKINS. I now move that the rules be suspended and the bill passed.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. [Loud cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" from all parts of the House.]

Mr. ATKINS. I do not know that I am at liberty to answer a question now.

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] will give us a right to discuss the bill. [Loud cries of "Vote!" and "Regular order!"]

The question was put; and the Speaker announced, that two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the bill was passed.

Mr. McMAHON. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations for the purpose of having it recommitted to the committee.

Mr. CABELL. I intended to ask the yeas and nays upon the other bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the gentleman make such demand. Does he say that he did?

Mr. CABELL. No; I did not rise from my seat, but it was my intention to have done so.

Mr. COX. I called for a division.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the gentleman. Does the gentleman say that he rose from his seat and demanded a division? [Loud cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. ATKINS. I trust that if the gentleman from New York states that he demanded a division he will have it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not in haste to proclaim the bill passed; he was very careful not to shut out any demand for the yeas and nays, or for a division, but the Chair is willing now to withdraw his decision.

Mr. ACKLEN. I object; the bill is passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so declared without any apparent objection.

Mr. COX. I do not now insist upon a division.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] does not insist upon it now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not see the gentleman rise in his seat nor did he hear him call for a division. The Chair will, however, retrace. Is there a division demanded?

Mr. FINLEY. There is; I demand one.

The question was taken upon Mr. ATKINS's motion; and on a division there were—ayes 170, noes 20.

Mr. NICHOLLS called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 187, nays 22, not voting 77; as follows:

APPROPRIATIONS FOR JUDICIAL EXPENSES.

Mr. MCMAHON, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 2252) making appropriations for judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CONGER. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The motion of Mr. MCMAHON was agreed to.

MARINE HOSPITAL AT MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.

Mr. REAGAN. By authority of the Committee on Commerce and on behalf of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. THOMAS TURNER,] who was directed to make this report, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk—a substitute for House bill No. 1607, to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee. There is a report accompanying the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to procure a proper site in or near the city of Memphis, Tennessee, and cause to be erected thereon a building suitable for a marine hospital, after plans and specifications which shall be furnished under his direction by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money now in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the Secretary of the Treasury in the purchase of said site and the erection of the aforesaid building thereon.

Mr. CONGER. Is this bill subject to a point of order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas, by instruction of the Committee on Commerce, moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Is it in order to ask that the report accompanying the bill be read? That report explains the necessity for this building, which is recommended by the National Board of Health, by the Secretary of the Treasury, and by the Supervising Surgeon of the Marine-Hospital Service.

The SPEAKER. The reading of the report would be in the nature of debate. Is there objection to the reading?

Mr. SPARKS. There is.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. REAGAN to suspend the rules and pass the bill, there were—ayes 103, noes 25.

Mr. SPARKS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

DEPUTY COLLECTOR AT LAKE CHARLES, LOUISIANA.

Mr. ACKLEN. By instruction of the Committee on Commerce, I move to suspend the rules and pass a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a deputy collector at Lake Charles, Louisiana.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a deputy collector at Lake Charles, Calcasieu Parish, State of Louisiana, who shall have power to enter and clear vessels coming to that port.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. ACKLEN, there were—ayes 46, noes 49.

Mr. ACKLEN called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So (two-thirds not voting in the affirmative) the motion was not agreed to.

VENTILATION OF THE HALL.

Mr. CARLISLE. I am instructed by the Committee on the Ventilation of the Hall of the House of Representatives to move to suspend the rules so as to adopt the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Ventilation of the Hall of the House of Representatives, or any sub-committee thereof, be authorized to sit during the recess, with like power and authority as when Congress is in session.

Resolved, That said committee shall have the control and direction of the lighting, heating, and ventilation of the Hall of the House of Representatives at all times when the House is not in session: Provided, That nothing herein shall be so construed as to authorize said committee to interfere with any alteration or improvement heretofore directed by law.

The resolutions were adopted, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. No. 1846) relating to the public lands of the United States, which is reported by instruction of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CONGER. Inasmuch as no gentleman on this side can be recognized under the present method of proceeding, I suggest that the Chair should sometimes follow the list in making these recognitions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will in a few moments get to the individual recognitions, and will recognize the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] who sought recognition on Monday last. These motions made on behalf of committees are generally made in pursuance of unanimous instructions from respective committees. Both sides are represented on all these questions through committees. The bill which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT] moves to pass under a suspension of the rules will be read.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That when any lands of the United States shall have been entered, and the Government price paid therefor in full, no suit or proceeding, civil or criminal, by or in the name of the United States, shall thereafter be had or further maintained for any trespasses upon, or for or on account of any material taken from, said lands, or on account of any alleged conspiracy in relation thereto, prior to the approval of this act: Provided, The defendants in such suits or proceedings begun before such full payment shall exhibit to the proper court or officer the evidence of such entry and payment, and shall pay all costs accrued up to the time of such payment.

SEC. 2. That persons who have heretofore under any of the homestead laws entered lands properly subject to such entry, or persons to whom the rights of those having so entered for homesteads may have been attempted to be transferred by bona fide instrument in writing, may entitle themselves to said lands by paying therefor $1.25 per acre, and the amount heretofore paid the Government upon said lands shall be taken as part payment of said price: Provided, This shall in no wise interfere with the rights or claims of others who may have subsequently entered such lands under the homestead laws.

SEC. 3. That the price of lands now subject to entry which were raised to $2.50 per acre more than twenty years prior to the passage of this act by reason of the grant of alternate sections for railroad purposes is hereby reduced to $1.25.

SEC. 4. This act shall not apply to any of the mineral lands of the United States; and no person who shall be prosecuted for or proceeded against on account of any trespasses committed or material taken from any of the public lands after the passage of this act shall be entitled to the benefit thereof.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to ask a question.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask unanimous consent to occupy five minutes in explaining the nature and character of this bill.

Mr. DUNNELL. I object.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether the Committee on Public Lands have instructed the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make this motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been so advised.

Mr. WRIGHT. The bill has the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. That may be true; but I ask whether the committee have instructed the gentleman to put the bill on its passage under a suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been so advised.

Mr. WRIGHT. They have.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I understand from some members of the committee that such is not the fact; and I wish to ask the gentleman whether it is the fact.

Mr. WRIGHT. The bill, as the gentleman is aware, has been ordered to be reported by the unanimous vote of the committee.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. That is not the point. I want to know whether the Committee on Public Lands instructed the gentleman to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. I was directed to report the bill. I was not instructed by the committee to make the motion to pass it at this time under a suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair does not recognize the gentleman.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have the consent of the committee to this motion, but not their instructions.

CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

Mr. SPRINGER. By instruction of the Committee of Elections, I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution which I send to the Clerk.

Mr. CONGER. I again suggest that ordinary comity requires that these recognitions for motions to suspend the rules should alternate between the two sides of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is responsible for the recognitions. He has always exercised the utmost fairness as between the two sides of the House; but he claims the right to recognize members acting under instructions of a committee in preference to individual members. The Chair has never yet bound himself absolutely in all cases to adhere to the names upon the individual list.

Mr. CONGER. That precludes this side from ever having an opportunity.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is always fair to both sides. Recognition of members under the rules rests with the Chair, and not with any member.

Mr. CONGER. I only wished to know what the rule was. It effectually precludes this side from ever having an opportunity.

The SPEAKER. The Chair believes neither side has any just right to complain of the Chair in this respect.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is a unanimous report from the Committee of Elections.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee of Elections, is recognized, under the unanimous instruction of his committee, to move to suspend the rules and pass the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the printing of the contested-election cases and the preparation of such cases for argument before the committee shall be continued during the ensuing vacation of Congress, under the rules and orders of the committee, and that the committee be authorized to retain their clerk during said time at the same rate of compensation allowed during the session, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. CONGER. I ask whether that is reported by instruction of the committee?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois stated that it was the unanimous instruction of the Committee of Elections, of which he is chairman.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; I have been instructed by the committee to move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution as I have proposed. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] on the other side will inform gentlemen over there that such is the fact.

Mr. KEIFER. That is the instruction of the Committee of Elections.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 92, noes 40.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. No quorum has voted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 104, noes 44.

So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the resolution was adopted.

TREATY WITH MEXICO.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report the following bill——

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman make in reference to the matter?

Mr. WILSON. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which looks toward a further treaty between the United States and Mexico. I ask that the report of the committee be read.

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of argument and debate, and not in order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Has that Committee on Foreign Affairs authorized the gentleman to suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia so states.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to make that report.

The SPEAKER. That is not equivalent to the committee instructing the gentleman to move to suspend the rules and put the bill upon its passage on Monday.

Mr. WILSON. At the last session of Congress I was instructed to move to suspend the rules and put the bill upon its passage. The Committee on Foreign Affairs during the present Congress have adopted that report. There has been no formal authority given to me to move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The authority given to the gentleman probably was to report the bill when committees were called regularly for reports, but that authority would not give the gentleman the right to move to suspend the rules and put the bill upon its passage at this time. The committee demands for suspensions being concluded, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I move that the rules be suspended, and the bill (H. R. No. 2175) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes—the bill reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] the other day—be put upon its passage at this time.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does that come from the Committee on Appropriations?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I think we had better pass the bill which does come from the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. As far as the Chair is advised the committees which have asked for suspension of the rules have now had that opportunity and the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Kansas who is next entitled to be recognized.

Mr. ATKINS. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. The bill which I have moved to be passed under a suspension of the rules is the bill reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER] a few days ago, word for word.

The SPEAKER. Does it contain everything in the bill reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, word for word as reported from that committee, restrictions and all?

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Everything, word for word, as printed.

Mr. ATKINS. I move the House do now adjourn. [Laughter on the republican side.]

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. That is equivalent to voting against the bill.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 92, noes 99.

Mr. ATKINS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 105, nays 100, not voting 81; as follows:

A bill (S. No. 516) to extend the time of special postal service until service can be obtained by advertisement; and

A bill (S. No. 572) to amend an act approved February 24, 1879, entitled "An act to create the northern judicial district of the State of Texas, and to change the eastern and western judicial districts of said State, and to fix the time and places of holding courts in said districts."

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. EVINS] asks leave to withdraw from the files of the House certain vouchers in the contested-election case of Tillman vs. Smalls. When the request was originally made the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIGGS] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] objected; the Chair is advised that they withdraw their objection.

There being no further objection, the leave was granted.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

And accordingly (at three o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 10, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 435) to correct an error in "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1879; which had previously received the signature of the Speaker of the House.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 2002) making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 66) legalizing the action of the President and the Secretary of War in sending rations and tents to the yellow-fever sufferers was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. On the 28th day of April last, when the repeal of the provision in the sundry civil bill of the last Congress, relating to the Moline Water-Power Company, was under consideration, I said:

> The Moline Water-Power Company had nothing to do with the insertion of this provision. It came from the hands of a member of the other House, who was on the conference committee, and who has uniformly and persistently opposed making any appropriations for the benefit of the water-power there and to carry out the contract.

I am satisfied now that this statement contained two errors of fact, and I cheerfully make the correction.

The provision in question did not originate with Mr. Hewitt, the member of the conference committee to whom I referred. On the contrary, it was drawn by the attorney or agent of the company, and after modification inserted in the bill by Mr. Hewitt to oblige the company, and for no other reason. He neither approved nor disapproved it, but was willing to place the responsibility on the Secretary of War, who has in his opinion decided the matter correctly.

It is proper to state that this correction would have been made at an earlier day had not the letter of Mr. Hewitt calling my attention to the subject been mislaid.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator is aware, I take it, that in a bill before the two Houses the provision has been repealed?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Oh, yes; I am aware of it.

VINEGAR FACTORIES.

Mr. BAYARD. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to report a bill relating to vinegar factories established and operated prior to March 1, 1879, and I ask the Senate to proceed to its consideration now. I will give my reasons for the request.

The bill (S. No. 678) relating to vinegar factories established and operated prior to March 1, 1879, was read the first time by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That any vinegar factory for the manufacture of vinegar, established and operated as a vinegar factory prior to March 1, 1879, may be operated for the manufacture of vinegar by the use of alcoholic vapor within such distance less than six hundred feet of any distillery or rectifying house, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. We should like to hear some reason why we should take the bill up and consider it at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is hardly a debatable question. By unanimous consent the Senator from Delaware can be allowed to make an explanation of the bill. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BAYARD. I think if my friend from Missouri will allow me to make a statement he will not object to the consideration of this bill. In an act which was approved on the 1st of March last a new provision of law was inserted which prohibited the distillation or the rectification of vinegar at any point within six hundred feet of an established distillery. Such a provision of law had never before existed, and several important vinegar factories had been theretofore erected and were in operation, employing a number of hands and engaged in a laudable industry. By this provision of the law, which was passed, I may say, almost inadvertently, legitimate business paying revenue to the Government was suddenly arrested; and before us to-day come citizens of the United States to say that their business was by the insertion of this prohibition, contained for the first time in the law of 1879, suddenly put an end to.

The Department have been requested to give us their information and opinion upon this subject, and there is no reason suggested why this bill should not become a law. Indeed it was drafted by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. In one case I may mention, the case of Mr. Prussing, of Chicago, his business, employing two hundred men, giving food and support to eight hundred mouths, was suddenly by this provision of law put an end to peremptorily. It was one of those cases of accidental injury not intended by the law, and the present bill is intended to remedy it.

As this bill has received the approval of the Department, as it has received the unanimous approval of the committee, as it is open to no objection that I can imagine, and does tend to remove a manifest hardship to an honorable and worthy class of our citizens engaged in manufacturing under the laws of the country, and tax-payers, I ask that there may be no objection at this time to its passing the Senate. I do not know that it will become a law at the present session, but it ought to become a law, for it is intended to remedy an unintended injustice. Therefore I ask that there may be no objection to its consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL VESSELS FOR QUARANTINE PURPOSES.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report back the joint resolution (H. R. No. 72) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to place vessels and hulks at the disposal of commissioners of quarantine or other proper persons at the ports of the United States; and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, at the request of the National Board of Health, to place gratuitously at the disposal of the commissioners of quarantine, or the proper authorities at any of the ports of the United States, to be used by them temporarily for quarantine purposes, such vessels or hulks belonging to the United States as are not required for other uses of the National Government, subject to such restrictions and regulations as the said Secretary may deem necessary to impose for the preservation thereof.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 2253) to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. No. 2006) to amend sections 2493 and 2494 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to the importation of neat cattle into the United States for breeding purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2251) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing that the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die at twelve o'clock noon on Tuesday the 17th of June, instant; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask that the appropriation bill just received from the House be read and referred.

The bill (H. R. No. 2251) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. No. 2253) to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die at twelve o'clock noon on Tuesday the 17th June instant.

JAMES G. HARRISON.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am authorized by the Committee on Finance to report back the bill (S. No. 1) for the relief of James G. Harrison, and I ask its immediate consideration by the Senate.

The bill was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill. Is there objection?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to James G. Harrison, late assistant assessor in the second internal-revenue district of Indiana, the compensation payable to assessors in that district, from the 4th of March, 1867, to the 14th of April, 1869, during which time he acted as assessor, first deducting from the amount which would be due him as assessor the sums paid him as assistant assessor during the same period.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish the Senator from Indiana would state what the bill is. We are legislating very rapidly here this morning.

Mr. VOORHEES. I expected to explain it. During the last session of Congress the House passed this bill just as it is now before the Senate. It came here from the House, was referred to the Finance Committee, by that committee considered favorably, reported back to this body and placed upon the Calendar; and it failed to pass because it was not reached on the Calendar. I introduced the bill again the first day of the present session. I can better explain the exact nature of the bill by reading the report which was made to accompany the bill in the House:

The petitioner, James G. Harrison, was assistant assessor of internal revenue for the second collection district of Indiana from the 1st day of September, 1862, to the 13th day of April, 1869; that during two years one month and nine days of that period, to wit, from the 4th day of March, 1867, to April 13, 1869, there being no assessor in and for said district, he, by the direction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and while assistant assessor of said district, performed all the duties pertaining to the office of assessor of said district; that during the time he was acting assessor of said district he received only the compensation allowed by law to assistant assessors, to wit, $5 per day. He now asks the payment of such balance as will realize to him the full pay of an assessor for the period during which he discharged the duties of that office. A letter from the Fifth Auditor to a previous committee of this House, dated March 19, 1874, states that such balance is $1,555.90.

Your committee believe that the petitioner, having performed the duties of the office of assessor, should receive the full pay provided by law for the services he has rendered, and therefore report to the House the accompanying bill, and recommend that it do pass.

The bill involves a very simple proposition, and that is that the assistant assessor, having performed the duties of assessor for two years one month and nine days, shall be paid for his work according to the rate that he would have been paid if he had been an actual assessor.

The objection to this measure is the danger of setting a precedent whereby when the head of an office is absent for short intervals and his assistant acts in his place that assistant will claim his pay. The Committee on Finance thought unanimously, however, that the length of time during which this officer acted in the principal capacity made it a safe bill to pass. They thought it would not establish a precedent, because it is not likely that in many, if any, cases such a thing would occur again, or if it did this relief ought to be granted in any case. Here was a man assistant assessor; the assessor's office became vacant, I think by death; at any rate there was no assessor; nobody has been paid as assessor at all.

Mr. COCKRELL. The office became vacant by the refusal of the Senate to confirm the person nominated.

Mr. VOORHEES. Perhaps it became vacant by the refusal of the Senate to confirm. Under the direction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue this man took charge of that office for over two years, and faithfully and acceptably performed its duties, and the committee is of the opinion that he ought to be paid for his work.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. Does he happen to know how many instances there are which arose, during the administration of Andrew Johnson alone, of assistant assessors and assistant collectors who discharged the duties of their chief, the office being vacant owing as in this case it seems, to a difference of opinion between the Executive and the Senate?

Mr. VOORHEES. I can only answer that I know of no other instance where an assistant was left, under the direction of the Department here, to perform the duties of the office of collector or assessor for two years or for one year. There are doubtless instances where for a brief space such a state of facts took place; but if the Senator from New York or anybody else can show me where any man honestly and acceptably, under the direction of the Department, performed the duties of assessor or collector one year or two years, I stand here to say that I will vote to pay him for his work. I think this is meritorious and right, and I am not much prone to take alarm at precedents where I think the case in point stands on its own merits. If another case like it comes forward, I will deal with it as I would with this case.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I feel no inclination to make opposition to any wish of the Senator from Indiana, nor do I feel the least disposition to question the merits of Mr. Harrison, the person named in the bill; but I do venture to question very seriously whether at this day the Senate should do what the Senate on many previous days refused to do in respect of this very class of officers in this very predicament, as I understand it.

Let me see whether I do understand it. In the assessment district referred to, a nomination was made by Mr. Johnson to the Senate of an assessor. The Senate refused to confirm that nomination, and he, with a persistence to which he was not unaccustomed, refused to nominate somebody else. Therefore and thereby the assessorship stood vacant, and it continued to stand vacant for two years. During those two years, not by any delegation of authority or direction from the Department, because that would have been a work of supererogation, but by operation of law, of general law applicable to that and to all other districts as well, this senior assistant, for such he must have been, (perhaps that is not the term employed in the statute but it is a term equivalent to that,) became the locum tenens of that office. He discharged its duties, and discharged its duties under a law—I speak from recollection, I have had no time to refer to it—which expressly stated that the measure of his compensation should be that which he was receiving as assistant, and which I think added that it should be no more and no greater compensation.

Now, if the Senator from Indiana will allow the bill to lie over until I have the opportunity to look up the records, I think I can show him in official form what perhaps he will be content for the moment to accept upon my recollection, that this is one of a very considerable number of cases. It is not peculiar in its character because two years elapsed; not that I mean to say there are other cases where the term was exactly two years or more than two years; but I do mean to say that there were repeated cases where the term was so long that there would be no practical distinction between this case and those cases. There was, as all Senators will remember, a deep-seated difference of opinion in that day between the nominating power and this portion of the appointing power. It was said that no man could eat the bread and butter of the Administration without supporting the Administration. That became a somewhat famous phrase; and the then Executive proceeded honestly and openly upon that idea, as other administrations have sometimes proceeded upon it denying that they so proceeded and canting about their proceeding. Andrew Johnson did not cant. He was a resolute man, and he avowed what he meant; and that was what he meant and that was what he did. The Senate being opposed to Mr. Johnson upon that point and upon others, said, "Very well, the man who eats the bread and butter of the Administration shall not be turned out because he does not support it, nor shall offices be filled upon that principle." Accordingly, a great many rejections took place. In my own State offices stood vacant for more than two years, the duties being performed by the subordinates, and stood vacant because the President would nominate no one whom the Senate would appoint, and the Senate would confirm no one whom the President would nominate.

Therefore these cases were quite numerous all over the country. Now, it seems to me, we are about, if this bill be passed, to say at this late day that all men whose cases stand on all-fours with this no doubt meritorious man, may come in and receive all this compensation. The law under which they served said they should not. The two Houses of Congress, by the omission to act in this case and in others, have said they should not. Now it is proposed that we shall reverse all that and say they shall.

For one, I did not understand the request the Senator from Indiana made in reference to this bill. I understood him to move to take up a bill. I learn now, seeing a print which does not show the bill reported from any committee, that the Senator reported the bill back this morning, and asked that the report made this morning be taken up.

Mr. VOORHEES. The report I made was by the unanimous instruction of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, but it was made to-day.

Mr. VOORHEES. It was made to-day.

Mr. CONKLING. I only say that I did not understand that. I supposed it was a bill on the table or on the Calendar until I learned otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that he twice asked, after a very considerable interval each time, if there was objection to proceeding to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not doubt it. It was my own fault that I did not understand it; but it so happens I did not. When I inquired of the Clerk, seeing that the print showed no report of the committee, he said the bill had been reported to-day, and the bill as reported had not been printed. I did not understand that when the Senator made his request. I do not believe we ought at this session and hastily to take up any one of these cases which is to be the entering-wedge of all the others. How many there are I do not know.

As I have the floor, I will hold it but one moment, I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] a question if I can get his attention, who, if I remember aright, as a member of the Committee on Claims made a report against some of these cases, perhaps against this very case. Did he?

Mr. COCKRELL. There was a report made unanimously by the Committee on Claims, June 7, 1876, against this very claim.

Mr. CONKLING. Against this very case. Now, may I inquire of the Senator from Missouri how many, according to his recollection, there were or are of cases of revenue officers, collectors and assessors in this same general predicament?

Mr. COCKRELL. I made the report myself, but I did not at the time make a compilation of the number. However, it was supposed there were a large number of assistant assessors in the same situation as this one throughout the length and breadth of the United States. I knew a number to exist in Missouri at the same time of the very same character.

Mr. CONKLING. I observe, from seeing this report for the first time at the moment, that it begins by setting forth the report which the honorable Senator from Indiana has read, that is, the report made by Mr. BRIGHT from the Committee of Claims in the House to accompany House bill No. 1034. Is that the report the Senator read?

Mr. VOORHEES. I read the report made by the House committee.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator read, if I understood him, a report from the House committee?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, sir; I read the report of the House committee. The Senator holds in his hand the report made by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CONKLING. So I do, and if the Senator will observe, this report from the Senate committee begins by reciting a report then recently made by a committee of the House, which report was made by Mr. BRIGHT to accompany House bill No. 1034. My inquiry is whether that is the report read by the Senator?

Mr. VOORHEES. It is not the report that I read to the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. When was that report made, if the Senator will be kind enough to inform me?

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Missouri stated that the report which the Senator from New York holds in his hand was made in 1876.

Mr. COCKRELL. June 7, 1876.

Mr. VOORHEES. The report which I read, made by the Committee of Claims in the House, was made on the 24th day of January, 1879.

Mr. CONKLING. I thought the report was the same, because of the singular similarity of statement throughout. I listened to the Senator's reading, and, if I mistake not, everything he read is here in this report set out, and in very much the same phraseology.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think that is quite likely.

Mr. CONKLING. For example, to show the Senate how striking the coincidence is, I will read:

> That during two years, one month, and nine days of that period, to wit, from March 4, 1867, to April 13, 1869, there being no assessor for said district, he served, by direction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as acting assessor of said district, performing all the duties pertaining to the office of assessor.

Those words sound strangely like those read by the Senator.

Mr. VOORHEES. It would be most remarkable if they sounded any differently, being the statement of a mere fact which was just that way, and it could hardly be stated in any other way.

Mr. CONKLING. That I agree to. The report concludes exactly, as I remember, like the other report.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think it quite likely.

Mr. CONKLING. The long and short of it is this: the House committee in 1876 made this report; the committee at a later day made it over again; and I rather think from listening that it is verbatim and literatim the same report. However, that is not very important, except to show that the honorable Senator from Missouri and the other members of the Committee on Claims (which committee if I understood him aright unanimously made this adverse report) had before them when they made that report the very evidence and the whole of it on which it is proposed that the Senate this morning shall adopt and sanction this bill. That is all. It is somewhat important in that particular.

Here is a report which, of course, I cannot speak of, never having seen it before and not having the presumption to detain the Senate while I read it either aloud or otherwise; but I see it contains a review of the facts and circumstances of this case set forth with some particularity, including a letter from D. D. Pratt, once a Senator here and then Commissioner of Internal Revenue, addressed to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and written on the 3d of June, 1876, preceding this report. Then the report says:

Mr. Harrison was appointed assistant assessor in the fourth assessment district April 4, 1863, long prior to the appointment of Mr. Davis, September 1, 1866, and continued in this office of assistant assessor for the fourth division long after the vacancy caused by the non-confirmation of Mr. Davis, March 4, 1867, was filled on April 14, 1869, to wit, from April 14, 1869, to May, 1873, when the offices of assessor and assistant assessor were abolished.

The office of assistant assessor was, therefore, wholly independent of the actions of the assessor; was not filled by him, but by the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and an assistant assessor continued in office regardless of the person or persons who might be the assessor.

When the assistant assessor was appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, he had to take and subscribe an oath of office to diligently and faithfully perform the duties of assistant assessor for his assessment district. The same law prescribed his salary and the duties to be so diligently and faithfully performed by him, and he accepted the office and took this oath with full and legal notice of these duties.

The committee say:

One of these legally prescribed duties was that in case of a vacancy occurring in the office of assessor, by reason of death or any other cause, he, if residing in the assessment district in which the assessor resided at the time of the vacancy occurring, should act as assessor until an appointment filling the vacancy should be made. Mr. Harrison happened to reside in the assessment district wherein Mr. Davis resided at the time the vacancy occurred by the reason of the non-confirmation of Davis, and obeyed his oath and diligently and faithfully performed this legal duty, to act as assessor until an appointment filling the vacancy was made.

The act of July 1, 1862, providing internal revenue for the support of the Government, &c., sections 2 and 3, provided an assessor for each collection district, and that each assessor could divide his district into a convenient number of assessment districts, within each of which he (the assessor) could appoint one assistant assessor, but did not impose upon an assistant assessor the duty to act as assessor in case of vacancy in that office.

Now I call the attention of the honorable Senator from Indiana to this:

The act of June 30, 1864, gave the appointment of assistant assessors to the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and imposed this additional legal duty, to act as assessor in case of vacancy. The act of March 3, 1865, restored this appointment of assistant assessors to the assessor, with the approval of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The act of January 15, 1866, restored to the Secretary of the Treasury the power to appoint assistant assessors provided by law, without any approval or recommendation from any one; and was in force during the time Mr. Harrison acted. The act of March 2, 1867, (see volume 14, United States Statutes at Large, page 473,) prescribed the salary and fees of assistant assessor, amending the act of June 30, 1864, by changing the compensation to $5 per day and cutting off all other allowances.

The committee conclude:

What, then, is the ground for the relief sought by this bill? Simply and alone, that Mr. Harrison performed his sworn duty, diligently and faithfully, it is true, and yet only his duty according to his oath and the law, and has received the full compensation prescribed for such performance of duty by the law.

I have been looking along here in the hope of finding some statement of the principle of the case, but I do not find it, and I have detained the Senate already longer than I should have done. However, we may all rely on it that there are a considerable number of other cases not only of revenue officers but of other officers.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think if this case was on trial in a court before a jury, as it is before the Senate, the Senator from New York would not be regarded as happy or fortunate in the evidence which he has brought forward here. Let us analyze and see for a moment what it amounts to. He has furnished one adverse report on this claim. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] furnishes him with an adverse report made in this body in 1876. In that report is contained another report in favor of the claim made by the House committee. Now, let us balance the weight of opinion on this claim. The Senator from New York lays great weight and seems to felicitate himself on the fact that he has found one report against it. One report, however, it is disclosed now, was made in 1876 by the House committee in favor of the justice and the merit of this claim. In 1879 the same committee of the House, but composed of different members, and consequently not the mere individual opinion of the same persons, again reported a second time in its favor. The Senator from New York thinks it something remarkable because the same language is adopted in certain sentences. The fact being a plain and simple one as to how long this man served as assessor, it hardly could be stated in other terms by any two committees of intelligent, reasonable human beings. He says the conclusion arrived at is in the same phraseology. Doubtless so, because there is but one conclusion to be reached. Therefore, confronting the one report adverse to it by the committee of the Senate in 1876, stand two reports made in the House by the same committee, but of different composition.

Then let us see how it stands in the Senate. It seems the Senator from New York thought we were to be overborne by a report made in 1876 by the Committee on Claims of this body. That seems to have some conclusiveness about it. I have great respect for that committee, although I do not know who composed it; I have great respect for any committee constituted by this high and honorable body; I have respect for their opinion; but when it is brought forward here to control our action, let us see what has been done on the other side.

During the last session of Congress the Finance Committee made a report to this body in favor of the payment of this claim, and authorized me to report the bill to the Senate, which I did, and it was placed upon the Calendar, and only lost because it was not reached upon the Calendar. Therefore up to this point there are three reports, two in the House and one in the Senate, before the present session, in favor of the payment of this man's just claim; and now comes the fourth. This morning I am instructed by the Finance Committee to make the fourth finding in its favor which has been made by committees of Congress; and yet the Senator from New York seems to pride himself upon having found one committee as against four—I say four committees; and the weight of them is great when you consider that they represent the voice of every person on each committee. Why that one report was brought here cannot be explained except that it should outweigh the findings of the Senate Committee on Finance. What I have said about the two committees that passed on this claim in the House, I will say of the Senate reports. The Finance Committee of this body at the present session of Congress is not the same as that of last session. So that two Committees on Finance, composed of different individuals, have unanimously reported this claim for favorable action by this body. I repeat, therefore, in this case, if it were tried in a court of justice before a jury, the Senator from New York would not be thought very happy in bringing forward the evidence he did.

Now, sir, in regard to its being a precedent I am perhaps less bound by precedents than most men. When I know and believe that a matter is right in itself I embrace it regardless of consequences. If there are other men who did laborious service and earned what the law set aside as payment for such service as this man did, the Senator from New York when he sees a bill for that person's relief, if there is one or a dozen, can be assured that I will vote for all. I do not believe in this penny-wise and pound-foolish policy of economizing upon the little things and being profligate upon the million. I believe in being just with our own citizens, and if the Senator from New York can show any subordinate like this man who for any considerable time, not a mere casual slip of a week or a few weeks or a month, was in the steady discharge of the duties of an office for a considerable period, I say that he ought to be paid.

The question presented is simply this, and none other: from whatever cause, there was a vacancy in that office; this man was called on by the Department to perform the duties for over two years, earned the money that the Government had agreed was due for the discharge of such duties, and four committees of Congress have reported that he ought to have it. One House of Congress has passed this bill at a prior session.

The Senator from New York indulged in some reminiscences in regard to Andrew Johnson and his administration; and as he talked I thought I could hear the surging of the billows that rolled around this Capitol during that contest. I agree with him that there is something admirable in Andrew Johnson's character; that is, he was a firm and resolute man, a man who did not lie; he stood by his guns and fought it out. He did not flinch or quiver. But I do protest that it will be a great hardship and a great wrong if an humble individual like my constituent, Mr. Harrison, should at this late day be ground to dust and powder because of a contest that raged between the stalwart republican party and its rebellious member, Andrew Johnson, during that memorable period of four years. Let us not revive that contest for the purpose of destroying humble applicants for just relief. Whether Mr. Johnson was at fault then or the republican party that he rebelled against is not a matter for discussion now. Those who waged that contest most prominently are in the dust, and he with them; silence has settled on that period and on many of the actors in it; and it seems to me it is a most unjust thing to invoke the spirit of that great and troublous period to strike down a claim which a man presents here for work done for the Government.

The Departments placed the responsibility of this office on this man and he settled every account and every item to the satisfaction of the Department. We can say we will not pay him. We often do that in this Government; we often refuse to pay just debts simply because we can. You can refuse to pay this man, but when you do I want it known that the Government has accepted his work; it was well done to its satisfaction, and the sum which the law contemplated should be paid for the service is the amount provided in this bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator let me ask one other question? The Senator said—and I find no fault certainly with the principle he lays down—that if one case is meritorious, it is no answer to it to say that there might be other meritorious cases, that he should adjudge them upon their merits when they arose; and he said he would pay the sum set apart for the doing of the service; if I understood him.

Mr. VOORHEES. I did not mean to say set apart, perhaps, but contemplated by law.

Mr. CONKLING. That is what I mean, contemplated by law. I was about to draw the attention of the honorable Senator to this class of cases, not an imaginary class, because I have been recalling some of the vacancies and some of them fall within the class of which I am going to speak. At the time that this very case arose there existed statutes, moiety laws, under which various revenue officers were entitled to a certain aliquot part of recoveries. There were vacancies in those offices. Seizures were made and penalties inflicted, and they were divided between the officers holding the offices which were actually filled at that time. Does not the Senator see that it would be almost an impossible sum in arithmetic to award all that it was contemplated should go to the office had the office been filled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired and the further consideration of this bill cannot be continued without unanimous consent.

Mr. VOORHEES. I hope objection will not be made, but that we shall dispose of it. I will not consume any further time in discussion. The Senate is in full possession of the facts, and I should be very glad to have a vote. I can only say in reply to what the Senator from New York said ——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the further consideration of this bill at this time? The Chair hears none, and the bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. VOORHEES. I was only going to observe in reply to the elaborate question propounded by the Senator from New York in which he supposed other cases ——

Mr. CONKLING. I did not suppose them. They exist.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think I shall reply in the language I heard used once by a very eminent man upon a very profound subject. He said that he was in favor of considering one world at a time. I am not in favor of that. I propose to consider two worlds so far as I am concerned; but in regard to this matter I will consider one case at a time; and whenever the Senator brings up any one of those cases, it shall stand on its merits, so far as I am concerned, and I will consider it according to the rules of justice and equity, as I am now seeking to have them applied to this.

Mr. CONKLING. I will bring them up at this moment if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. VOORHEES. I believe my bill is before the Senate, I mean for legislation.

Mr. CONKLING. I bring them up at this moment, only as an humble contribution to this bill of the Senator's and the question which arises upon that. In 1867, the then President, Mr. Johnson, saw fit to nominate a gentleman from Maine to be naval officer of the port of New York. My colleague in this body then was Governor Edwin D. Morgan, who was largely informed touching the commercial interests of that much abused port; and he thought—and I agreed with him and a majority of the Senate agreed with us—that it was not worth while or expedient to take the particular citizen from Maine thus nominated and place him in the naval office. Accordingly the Senate refused to confirm that nomination. That place staid vacant, according to my recollection, for more than two years. During all that time was a law which, had the office been filled, would have made the incumbent of the office a participant in such emoluments as I before referred to. There is, not a supposed case, but an actual case, a case which would involve probably a large sum of money, for during that time attempts upon the revenue and retaliatory measures were very prevalent.

Now I ask the Senator, in respect of that actual case, whether the principle he has laid down would not require us to go to the Treasury and take that sum of money contemplated, to use his word, as emolument and recompense of the incumbent, had there been one, and give it to whom? We could not recover it from those to whom it was paid. There was at that time a locum tenens, a deputy naval officer, which deputy signed the warrants and the checks, as did this assistant assessor, and pro forma he was the naval officer; and the law said, as it said in this case, that the measure of his compensation should be different, that he should receive exactly the pay that he would if, in place of sitting in the chair of the naval officer and signing his name as acting naval officer, he had continued to sit in his own chair and proceeded in his own province.

I humbly submit to the Senator from Indiana that I have stated a case which is pertinent, which is fair, which is not one of those hard extreme cases which are said to make shipwreck of principle, but one which fairly tests the proposition the Senator lays down.

As I am on my feet I will venture one other word. The Senator from Indiana said that I read this report, glad that I had found one report of a Senate committee, and then he talked about the weight of authority. I have only to say that when I find a written report and a report made not by a committee of some other house, but a report made by a committee of this House, I submit to the Senate it is not unnatural to read it. And again when I find a report made by the appropriate committee, that is the Committee on Claims—for this is a private claim—I am justified in quoting it. The case went then, as I trust I shall give no offense in saying, properly and rightly to that committee; I will not venture to say it went improperly to the Committee on Finance at a later date; I only say that was a regular and proper reference, and that committee taking jurisdiction of it made this written report, and made it in the presence of the only written report we have heard of made anywhere in favor of this claim, and reviewing that report disapproved it.

Now I have a word to say about the weight of authority. This report was made by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL.] When that Senator came into this body he was a total stranger to me, and he will indulge me in saying that he came here I having no prejudices in his favor. The first thing that I learned to respect in that Senator was the intrepid integrity which he evinced on all occasions, as far as I know, touching the claims referred to his committee. There went to the Committee on Claims at that time and there have gone since a good many claims coming from the South, coming from men who appeared as very loyal men, as the phrase was, and coming from other men; and having watched the Senator from Missouri with a good deal of interest and attention I have never been able to discover that he evinced any partiality for sections or for claimants, and if he will accept as a compliment if it is one—and I do not intend it as a compliment but as the mere rendition of justice simply—I am glad to say that that Senator has gained my respect by the impartial fairness and firmness with which he has stood on every occasion that I know anything about, in passing upon a claim submitted to him as a Senator or as a member of a committee; and I am very frank to add that when I take up a report made by the Senator from Missouri on a claim, it has quite as much weight of authority—using the Senator's word—as it would if it were made by any other member of this body. I do not think that the Senator to whom I refer would have been likely to be prejudiced against this claim; his political inclinations would probably have run with it; but, as I said before, I have never discovered that those inclinations made any difference with him in the findings he has presented to the Senate; and, therefore, for all these reasons, I did rely, and I do much rely, upon this report and especially upon that part of it which affirms that if we are to go into the payment of one of these claims we ought to take them all up together or one after another as they are presented and then we should stand in the attitude of disregarding a law which fixes a given rate of compensation, and paying this man who continued to hold his office for four years after this time going back and taking the break when the office above him was vacant and paying him a rate of compensation which the law all the time said he should not receive.

Mr. VOORHEES. Rather a remarkable episode in the discussion of this bill is the eulogy pronounced upon the Senator from Missouri because he happened to report against this claim some two or three years ago. As a question of taste, I pass it by. So far as concerns every kind thing which the Senator from New York may say of the Senator from Missouri, or anybody else can say of him, I cordially concur in it.

Mr. CONKLING. I knew you would.

Mr. VOORHEES. I claim nothing for myself. The Senator from New York was seeking to run a comparison between the weight that should be given to a report made by the Senator from Missouri on a claim and a report made by myself. I concede everything that can be claimed. I concede all the superiority which the Senator from New York may attribute to the Senator from Missouri or anybody else, but I humbly submit that two reports made unanimously by the Committee on Finance of this body—one last session and one this, after the committee had been changed—might at an humble distance perhaps be able to hold their own with any one report made by any one Senator or any one committee of this body.

I submit, however, that this is an extraordinary and a very unfair way of disposing of a bill. I desire this matter disposed of upon its merits; nor will I be tempted to follow the versatile Senator from New York into untrodden themes, for his imagination is so strong and fearless that he would invade realms of discussion so remote from this bill that in an hour or so from now not only the Senate Committee on Finance, and every member of it, but likewise even the vigilant and active Senator from Missouri, would be entirely in a state of profound bewilderment as to what we were talking about. Therefore, the Senator from New York will excuse me from discussing supposed cases, when I have a case which recommends itself upon its own merits.

I shall not detain the Senate longer upon this matter unless something further may call for reply.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I think there is no controversy at all in regard to the facts of this case. James G. Harrison, of Indiana, was appointed an assistant assessor September 1, 1862, and served to April 13, 1869. During two years one month and nine days, or from the 4th of March, 1867, to the 13th of April, 1869, there was no assessor in that district, and James G. Harrison, being the assistant assessor in the district in which Mr. Davis, the assessor, had lived whose appointment had not been confirmed by the Senate, under the law performed the duties and services of the assessor, and it is for those services that this claim is made. That is, from the 4th of March, 1867, to the 13th of April, 1869, he claims the difference between his $5 per diem allowed by law to an assistant assessor and the $1,500 per year and the per centum allowed the assessor. The committee in this case report, I believe, that it amounts to $1,550.90. I investigated the case thoroughly, and had a report from the Commissioner, General Pratt, of Indiana, and it only amounted to $1,510.90. Now the question is, shall Mr. Harrison be paid $1,550.90 or $1,510.90 for supposed services performed from the 4th of March, 1867, to the 13th of April, 1869, when he was an assistant assessor and drawing his $5 per diem and executing his receipts to the Government, and making no additional claim? Mr. Harrison never asserted a shadow of claim to this compensation until 1874. Five years after the expiration of his term of service he first made his claim; and how did this claim happen to be made?

In 1872, one Booth, an assistant assessor in a division in Pennsylvania, got a bill through Congress to give him additional compensation. As soon as that bill slipped through Congress, then in comes this claim, and doubtless others have come. That was the first.

This claim in 1876 went to the Committee of Claims. It went to the Committee of Claims in the House in 1876 and was reported favorably. In 1876 it was reported adversely by the Committee on Claims of the Senate and indefinitely postponed by this body. In 1879 it goes to the Committee of Claims in the House, and when it comes to the Senate it goes to the Committee on Finance. It passed the House in 1876, and the report made in 1876 and copied in my report is verbatim the report which was made by the House committee at its last session. That report which was made by Mr. BRIGHT and this report by Mr. WARNER are the same. I compared them.

Now, why has there been a question of jurisdiction in regard to this claim? Is it a claim? I appeal to the Senate, is it a claim? If it is a claim, under every rule and precedent of the Senate it should go to the Committee on Claims. Aside from that question whether this bill should go to the Committee on Claims or not, is this gentleman—a very worthy gentleman he is too—entitled to this pay? I desire to call the attention of the Senate to section 1764 of the Revised Statutes, enacted by a democratic administration, I believe, in 1842, and re-enacted and kept in force ever since:

> No allowance or compensation shall be made to any officer or clerk, by reason of the discharge of duties which belong to any other officer or clerk in the same or any other department; and no allowance or compensation shall be made for any extra services whatever, which any officer or clerk may be required to perform, unless expressly authorized by law.

That was the law when Mr. Harrison accepted this appointment. It was an appointment as assistant assessor, and that appointment was wholly independent of the office of assessor. The office of assistant assessor was wholly independent of the actions of the assessor, was not filled by him, but by the Secretary of the Treasury with the approval of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and as assistant assessor he continued in office regardless of the person or persons that might be assessor. When this assistant assessor was appointed by the Secretary, with the approval of the Commissioner, he took and subscribed an oath to diligently and faithfully perform the duties of assistant assessor for the assessment district. The same law prescribed the salary and his duties. He accepted the office and took the oath and performed the duties and drew the salary allowed by law, and made no claim until five years after the expiration of his service.

Now, I desire Senators to pay particular attention to this point; it is a statutory point: what was the duty of the assistant assessor? One duty of the assistant assessor was that, in case of a vacancy occurring in the office of the assessor by reason of death or any other cause, the assistant assessor residing in the assessment district in which the assessor resided at the time of the vacancy should act as the assessor until an appointment filling the vacancy should be made. That was one of the statutory duties enjoined upon Mr. Harrison. The statutes said that he should perform that duty. It is a statutory duty.

Mr. MAXEY. Allow me to inquire of the Senator from Missouri if it is a fact that the assessor at that time was removed by the President and the Senate refused to confirm his successor, and this man Harrison performed the duties of assessor?

Mr. COCKRELL. William P. Davis was the assessor of the district from September 1, 1866, to March 3, 1867. The Senate refused to confirm him. There was no assessor then during the rest of the time.

Mr. MAXEY. And this man Harrison performed the service?

Mr. COCKRELL. Of the five assistant assessors in the district this one lived in Mr. Davis's subdivision of the district, and performed the duties.

Mr. MAXEY. What he claims is the difference between the pay of assistant assessor and assessor.

Mr. COCKRELL. Exactly.

Mr. MAXEY. I understand it.

Mr. COCKRELL. He claims the difference between the two. His pay as assistant assessor was $5 a day. The assessor's pay was $1,500 a year and a percentum of the assessments.

Mr. MAXEY. What I am after is, that he was actually assistant assessor and actually did perform the duties of assessor, and he now asks that he get the difference between the pay he received as assistant assessor and that which he would have received had he been assessor and done the same duties which he did do as acting assessor.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes. Now, Mr. President, as I say, this was one of his statutory duties which he had to perform. When there was a vacancy in the office of assessor, then if he lived in the district in which the assessor lived he had to perform the duties. He swore that he would perform those duties when he took the office, and he gave his obligation, not a bond, for the performance of his duties. Now is he entitled to this pay? What is this precedent? Suppose we pass this bill, what do we say? We say to every chief clerk in every Department of this Government, we say to every lieutenant-colonel in the Army, to every major, to every captain, to every lieutenant, "for every day that you perform the duties of an office or grade higher than that you actually hold, for every such day you shall receive the pay of the higher office."

Will the Senate establish the precedent that a lieutenant-colonel serving and performing the duties of colonel in the absence of the colonel, shall be allowed the compensation of the colonel? And will they establish this precedent throughout the length and breadth of the Army and Navy? Will you go into the Departments here and say that in the absence of General Tyner, First Assistant Postmaster-General, Mr. James H. Marr shall draw his pay? Shall the chief clerks in the different Departments acting temporarily in the absence of their heads, draw the pay of the heads of the Departments? This is a question that may involve not this case simply but thousands of other cases and thousands of dollars. In this one branch alone there were one hundred and thirty-four assistant assessors throughout the length and breadth of the United States who performed the duties of assessors for a greater or less length of time. Some of them performed the duty for but a short period; others for a longer period. Mr. Booth, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. Harrison, of Indiana, performed the longest term of service of any two, running up to two years and six months.

Sir, I have felt that it was my duty to say this much in view of the action which had been taken by the committee and the Senate in 1876 and the unanimous sanction of the committee at that time. There is only one other point, and that is to show that the law in force from 1867 to 1869 did not give the assistant assessor any emolument at all; it gave him $5 per day. His per diem would have amounted to $3,310, excluding Sundays. He received $3,345, and he made no claim for more, expressed no dissatisfaction until 1874. While Mr. Harrison is a gentleman of very high character and standing, I cannot think that he is entitled to the compensation which he asks in this bill. It is against the statute; it is in direct opposition to the plain requirements of the statutes which have been in force ever since 1842; it is in direct conflict with the practice in every branch and department of the Government; and I hope, Mr. President, that this bill will not pass.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, this bill came under my notice in the Committee on Finance, and for reasons given generally by the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] I considered then, and consider now that the allowance is an equitable, fair, and just one.

The statute read by the honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] is a general statute of 1842 providing that where clerks and others in the various Departments shall be called upon to perform duties in a different capacity they shall not receive any compensation for such extra performance unless expressly authorized by law. It is just that expression which includes the idea that it may be authorized by law where proper cases shall occur for the allowance.

The law of the United States created the office of assistant assessor and it created the office of assessor. They both were necessary and requisite to carry on the business of the Government at this point. The assistant assessor was called upon to fill the office and perform the duties of assessor, and he did so. The pay by law of the assessor for the two years and some weeks during which this man performed the duties was $4,855.40. The pay by law for the assistant assessor, whose duties I presume to have been less onerous and less responsible, was $3,345. The man claims in equity from his Government the difference between those two sums, which is $1,510. Why should he not receive it? Did he not perform the duties of assessor faithfully and well? There is no question of that. Then why, if he performed the duties of an office to which a certain compensation was affixed by law, should he not receive the whole of that compensation? The answer is because the existing statute of 1842, passed under a very sensible general policy, prohibited the payment of any extra allowance unless expressly authorized by law.

Mr. CONKLING. Does that make any difference?

Mr. BAYARD. It makes this difference, that he cannot get his pay unless we pass this act.

Mr. CONKLING. But it does not give it any more or less authority that it is allowed by special law, because the statute says it must be "expressly authorized."

Mr. BAYARD. I consider it has as much a specification as the Constitution of the United States does when it provides that an officer of the United States shall receive no insignia or medal or present from any foreign power unless authorized by Congress; yet we every day allow men to receive little gifts and mementoes from foreign governments under that very exception; and it occurs to me that if a man be called on for years, as this officer was—for it was not a mere casualty; it was not for a month; he was not what you may call a stop-gap, but he was employed there for two years and several weeks performing the duties of an office to which a salary was affixed by law; it seems to me that if a general statute prevented him—unless a special exception be made to remedy injustice—from receiving that, it is clearly proper, resting in a sense of the equity and justice of Congress, considering all the circumstances, whether he ought or ought not to have the pay of an assessor. I think he ought.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator will allow me a moment?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. On the point whether anything arises of substance from the words of the statute "unless expressly authorized by law," my belief being that those words make no difference whatever,

I venture to remind the Senator from Delaware of this: After the tribunal was organized for passing on the Alabama claims, it happened that a gentleman who was a member of Congress was employed in that connection. The act of 1825, I believe that is the date, declares that no member of Congress shall have any contract with the Government or any Department of it. There is no exception there. There the Senator has a case of a sweeping statute. Nevertheless, the Senate and the House passed an act permitting the person I now refer to, to be employed and to receive compensation. The logic of the Senator's argument would be that we could not do that, because there was no exception made in the statute. The statute said absolutely no member of Congress could have any contract with the Government; here was a member of Congress; and we passed a law authorizing him to do that service and to be paid for it, just as, I respectfully submit, we might pass this law as well without those exceptive words as with them; because when a statute says no officer shall receive compensation, if afterward the law-making authority passes a law authorizing him to do it, they abrogate that previous law pro tanto. That is all there is about it.

Mr. BAYARD. I cannot give that construction of this act. Let me read it:

No allowance or compensation shall be made to any officer or clerk, by reason of the discharge of duties which belong to any other officer or clerk in the same or any other Department; and no allowance or compensation shall be made for any extra services whatever, which any officer or clerk may be required to perform, unless expressly authorized by law.

Under that the Department has said that while this gentleman has performed the duties of a distinct office, it is a distinct office; to wit, assessor of internal revenue,—and he cannot be paid for it as long as the law stands so, unless he shall be expressly authorized to be paid by law.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. CARPENTER. Does not that mean this, that he shall not receive it unless he is at the time authorized by law to receive it?

Mr. BAYARD. I must say that I look upon the general law as founded on a policy——

Mr. CARPENTER. In other words, if the Senator will permit me to call his attention, there are cases in which the law did provide some years ago that in the absence of the superior the inferior should receive additional compensation. For instance, that was the provision in regard to secretaries of legation to ministers abroad. Does not that act mean that no clerk shall receive any additional pay unless by law he is authorized to receive it at the time he does the work, at the time that act speaks of?

Mr. BAYARD. I do not know, because there was no exception whatever stated in the law. It was a general one, the policy being that a man employed in clerical duty in the Departments called upon suddenly to do the work that ought to be done by somebody else should not be paid for such extra service. Under that rule they have sent men over from the Departments here to the custom-house at New York or elsewhere where they were temporarily needed, and it was said that it was a fair inference from their contract that they should perform such duties, if needed; but I do not hold that this case comes within that policy. Here were two officers, one assistant assessor, the other assessor. A vacancy occurred in the office of assessor, and there was no officer whose duty it was to do those duties. It was a distinct office which this man was then called upon to fill. The salary by law attached to that office would have amounted to so much money. The salary he was receiving in another office amounted to so much less. He was ordered, and for two years, not merely casually, but for two years and over he performed the duties and fulfilled the powers of the office. Now the question is, is it competent for Congress, and ought they in equity in a case of this sort, to pay that man who fairly and fully and faithfully performed the duties of the more onerous and responsible office that which the law assigned to it? It is not to pay to him as extra pay for assistant assessor, but it is the pay of assessor that you are asked to allow him.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me to ask this question for information?

Mr. BAYARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARPENTER. In this very case did the man who asks this extra compensation give the bond required by law for the other office?

Mr. BAYARD. That is a detail that I cannot answer.

Mr. CARPENTER. I take it he did not.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not think the office of assessor requires a bond.

Mr. CARPENTER. Yes, a very large bond.

Mr. BAYARD. The office of collector did. I cannot answer positively, but I apprehend the law required this man to qualify himself for the office of assessor.

Mr. CARPENTER. Not at all, as I understand; he was simply assistant assessor all the time, but in the absence of his chief he had to do that duty; but in that he was doing a duty which by law was cast upon the assistant all the while.

Mr. BAYARD. Here is the answer I find:

Neither assessors nor their assistants were bonded officers.

That is the statement of the Department on that fact. So that fact is eliminated. There was no bond required. I read these words from the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of the 3d of June, 1876. He says:

Neither assessors nor their assistants were bonded officers, no law having required them to furnish bonds, nor were they intrusted with public moneys.

Now to illustrate this question of construction: the Constitution of the United States provides that—

No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States; and no person holding any office of profit or trust under them shall, without the consent of the Congress, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title, of any kind whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign state.

That being the Constitution and there being no other law, no officer can take a gift, but that does not prohibit Congress every day from giving its permission to our officers who distinguish themselves by acts of heroism and valor toward foreigners, to receive presents from foreign governments as tokens of recognition. I therefore think there is nothing that renders it improper or impolitic where there has been the faithful performance of an official duty, not casually but for a period of two years and upward, to allow the payment of the full salary. The man furnishes the Government with all he receives from the salary of the subordinate office, and he only asks the difference. It seems to me it is equitable, and I see in it no violation of any principle of legislation. I think the man ought to be paid. He did his work fairly and honestly for a long time. Where a man is called in for a week or month to stop the gap and fulfill the duty of a brother officer who is temporarily disabled, there he should not be paid. This statute would forbid it.

Mr. CARPENTER. What is the difference in principle except that one is a longer time than the other? What is the difference whether the time be two months or two years?

Mr. BAYARD. Only the question of convenience to the Government.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, this bill presents a very serious question of public policy. The same question in principle which arises here will arise in almost every Executive Department and in regard to almost every executive office. The law authorizes in regard to the heads of Departments the President of the United States to assign any officer, without the consent of the Senate, to perform the duties during a temporary disability or absence of the head of the Department; and it was formerly the custom to allow clerks, for instance, to perform the duty temporarily of Secretary of State and subordinates to perform the duties of superior officers, as this bill proposes to allow; and without legislation compensation was allowed at the Treasury as a matter of course, and very large sums were paid. On full consideration Congress undertook to cut up that policy by the root and passed a law intending to put an end to the practice of paying an officer who performed the duties of any other office to which he had not been regularly appointed and confirmed; and the phrase in that statute—I had occasion to examine it in the somewhat celebrated Asbury Dickins case, which presented this precise question—was put in not to provide for the possibility of a legal enactment after the duties were performed, but to confine the compensation to cases where the existing law at the time of the performance of the duties provided for compensation.

The answer to the reasoning upon which this bill is supported is simply this: that as a matter of fact we cannot find a subordinate officer who would not more cheerfully accept the subordinate office from the fact that he may sometimes be called upon to perform duties of more dignity and responsibility at the same compensation than he would if this liability did not exist. The office of Assistant Secretary of State is more desirable, more dignified, and persons would for that reason be much more willing to accept it from the knowledge of the fact that occasionally the duty, the responsibility, and the respectability of the more dignified office may be imposed. I have no doubt that you would get a better class of men; men are fond of performing important and responsible public duties; there is a respect and a dignity that accompanies the holding of public office; and you would always get men to accept the office of deputy assessor or collector or of assistant deputy marshal, assistant in any Executive Department, to perform the duty at the same salary, because of the knowledge that they might sometimes be called upon to perform the duty of their superiors. It is the increase of dignity which the increased labor is not a set-off against. That is the policy upon which legislation has been for nearly thirty years now established; and if this bill passes it is a departure, and a very expensive and costly departure, from that policy which is now to be inaugurated.

Mr. BAYARD. May I read the statute again?

No allowance or compensation shall be made to any officer or clerk, by reason of the discharge of duties which belong to any other officer or clerk in the same or any other department.

"Any other officer or clerk" not "any other office." It is not the question as to whether there is an officer the locum tenens who is not doing his duties and this man is called upon because of his temporary disability to do it for him; but this man was discharging the duties of a distinct office.

Mr. CARPENTER. And which he had no right to perform the duties of except ex officio to his own office.

Mr. BAYARD. You say he had no right to perform them; he did it.

Mr. CONKLING. He did it ex officio.

Mr. BAYARD. It is not the question of an assessor being sick or disabled and his assistant pro tempore doing the work the assessor ought to have done, but it was the fact of there being no assessor at all and this man being made assessor de facto—if you choose, as sometimes we read of those appointments—and he performs the duties of that office. Is this law in conflict with that? Was this act meant for that? Was it not meant for the class of cases I have just suggested, where from temporary disability the officer, the locum tenens, is disabled, by absence, by sickness, by other occupations, if you please, and some one else in the Department or another Department is deputed to help him out, he shall not be paid for that. But where there is no officer, where the office itself is vacant, and its duties have to be filled by law, ought not the salary fixed by law to go with it? I only suggest that. I think the great matter for us in dealing with the employés of the Government is to do so in such a spirit and such a way as shall indicate fairness and equity, and I do not say liberality, but justice.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, I have been thoroughly crucified in my political life for my devotion to the theory of paying public servants; but this is an instance in which I think the payment asked is absolutely denied by law. This man, as I understand, this assistant assessor, in virtue of his office as assistant assessor, on the 4th of March, 1867, had to discharge the duties of the office of assessor, which was vacant. Two days before he commenced the discharge of the duty Congress passed an act in which they provided—14 Statutes at Large, page 445—as follows:

That no assessor or collector shall be entitled to any portion of the salary pertaining to the office unless such assessor shall have been confirmed by the Senate, except in cases of commissions to fill vacancies which may have happened by death or resignation during the recess of the Senate.

Therefore, if the President had actually appointed this assistant to be the assessor for the district he could not have received any compensation whatever for the office until he had been confirmed by the Senate. Now, can it be possible that this man stands any better off than he would have stood if he had been appointed by the President? But back of that is the general principle that if payment is to be made in one case like this it should be made in all such cases, and there is not money enough in the Treasury, perhaps, to pay all the deficiencies of salaries due since the Government was established if this principle now contended for was to be adopted by Congress. It has been repudiated everywhere. It is rejected in practice. It is denied by the positive statute which the Senator has alluded to. And it seems to me to be an act of injustice in the particular case to make the allowance without passing a general law which should apply to all similar cases.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. Having waited for some other Senator to make the motion, I will venture to move that this bill be committed to the Committee on Claims where it belongs by the rules of the Senate, where it was once, and where it was the subject of an elaborate written report, and where I submit it should go again. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 23, noes 7; no quorum voting.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to introduce a resolution.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I will withdraw the motion for morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Several Senators rise for morning business. If there is no objection, the Chair will receive morning business. The Chair hears none.

Mr. EATON. The Committee on Foreign Relations have directed me to report back the joint resolution (S. R. No. 30) for the relief of D. C. W. Brink, bearer of dispatches from the United States minister at Mexico in 1869, without amendment. I give notice that I shall ask for its consideration to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. EATON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Adela Conard, widow of Henry Conard, late consular agent of the United States at Port au Prince, Hayti, praying for reimbursement for expenditures incurred in protecting Haytien refugees, reported a bill (S. No. 681) for the relief of the estate of Henry Conard; which was read twice by its title.

RAILROAD FREIGHT DISCRIMINATIONS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer a resolution and I ask for its present consideration. It is only to refer a report made by the Secretary of War to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the letter of the Secretary of War in answer to the Senate resolution of April 7, 1879, in relation to discriminations by the Union Pacific Railroad Company in the rates of freight to private shippers as against the United States, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions that the Committee on the Judiciary inquire, ascertain, and report which railroads are discriminating against the United States in favor of private shippers, how long such discriminations have been made by each company, the extent of such discriminations, and report what further legislation, if any, is necessary to protect the United States in reference to the same; and that said Committee on the Judiciary have power to send for persons and papers.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FERRY (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 679) to provide for submitting improved methods of conveyance for the mails to governmental inspection and adoption in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 680) granting an increase of pension to H. Binnamon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CALL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 682) to establish a branch of the United States Land Office at Freeport, in Walton County, Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 683) to establish a life-saving and life-boat service at or near Cape San Blas, Calhoun County, Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PAY OF CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. WALLACE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a small appropriation bill, joint resolution of the House No. 85. I ask that it be taken up and considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 85.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 85) fixing the date on which the pay of the committee clerks, pages, and laborers of the House of Representatives, who are paid during the session only, shall begin for this session, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Appropriations reported the joint resolution with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 8, after the word "be," to strike out the words "day of the organization of the House, the 18th day of March, 1879," and in lieu thereof to insert:

Days on which they respectively entered upon the discharge of their duties: Provided, That such of them as received pay for thirty days, as provided for by the resolution of March 3, 1879, shall not be entitled to receive pay under this resolution during any portion of said thirty days except to the extent of the excess they each may be entitled to above the allowance made them under the resolution of March 3, 1879, aforesaid.

So as to read:

That the pay of the thirty-five clerks to committees of the House of Representatives heretofore authorized by resolutions of the House, and of the twenty-nine pages, and of the laborers of the House, heretofore authorized by law or by resolution of the House, who are paid during the session only, shall begin for this session on the days on which they respectively entered upon the discharge of their duties: Provided, That such of them as received pay for thirty days, as provided for by the resolution of March 3, 1879, shall not be entitled to receive pay under this resolution during any portion of said thirty days except to the extent of the excess they each may be entitled to above the allowance made them under the resolution of March 3, 1879, aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 19, after the word "from," to strike out the words "that date" and to insert "these dates;" so as to read:

And the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay them from these dates without regard to the date of their respective oaths of office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as an additional section:

SEC. 2. That the officers and employés of the Senate, including the Capitol police, who were employed previous to the 4th day of March, 1879, and who continued in said employment to and including that day, who have since ceased to be so employed, or who may cease to be so employed prior to December 1, 1879, shall be paid a sum equal to one month's pay at the rate per annum they were paid when their employment ceased: Provided, That no person employed by the United States for the time for which he would receive pay under this joint resolution shall receive such pay except so far as to equalize such payment with the compensation he might receive hereunder: and a sum sufficient to carry this joint resolution into effect is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WALLACE. I move to amend the amendment in the third line, after "seventy-nine," by inserting "and who were not paid under joint resolution of March 3, 1879."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE. I move to amend, on behalf of the committee, by adding the following as a third section:

SEC. 3. To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay Lord Harleston as special messenger assisting on the floor of the Senate from April 4, 1879, to June 30, 1879, inclusive, at the usual salary of messenger, and S. B. Pennebaker, as a page for the same period to the Senate, such sum as may be necessary is hereby appropriated, but they shall not be paid any moneys under this joint resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, who I see reported the joint resolution, whether in section 2 the phrase "officers and employés of the Senate" includes committee clerks? Does that wording include committee clerks?

Mr. WALLACE. The Committee on Appropriations so understand it. They are employés of the Senate. That was the understanding of the committee. There certainly was no intention to discriminate against them.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say that according to my understanding if they received the thirty days' pay which was voted at the end of the last session, then they will not receive double pay.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution fixing the date on which the pay of the committee clerks, pages, and laborers of the House of Representatives, who are paid during the session only, shall begin for this session, and for other purposes."

THE COINAGE.

Mr. COKE. I move that the resolution introduced by myself a few days ago be taken up and proceeded with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas moves to proceed to the consideration of the resolution which will be read.

The Secretary read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. COKE on the 6th instant:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. No. 564) "to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to coinage and coin and bullion certificates, and for other purposes," is hereby discharged from further consideration of the same, and that said bill be considered before the Senate for action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of this resolution.

Mr. FERRY and Mr. COKE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BELL, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIAMS.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BLAINE, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. JONES.] If he were present, I should vote "nay;" he would vote "yea."

Mr. HEREFORD, (when Mr. BUTLER'S name was called.) The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] and his colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] are paired upon this question. If they were present, the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] would vote "yea" and the junior Senator [Mr. HAMPTON] would vote "nay." The junior Senator is absent on account of illness in his family.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] who is not present, and I decline to vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, (when the name of Mr. EDMUNDS was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] on all political questions, the question in relation to this coinage bill being excepted; but he is paired on this question with some Senator; I do not know who it is.

Mr. MORRILL. My colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] is paired on this question with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL.]

Mr. MCDONALD, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FERRY, (when Mr. MCMILLAN'S name was called.) The Senator from Minnesota whose name has just been called [Mr. MCMILLAN] is paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.] If the Senator from Minnesota were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BECK, (when the name of Mr. WILLIAMS was called.) My colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS] is paired upon this and similar questions with the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. BELL.] If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. WALLACE, (when Mr. WITHERS'S name was called.) The Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN] on this question.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] on this question. If the Senator from Colorado were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BURNSIDE. My colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BLAINE. My colleague [Mr. HAMLIN] is paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay" on the pending question.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose I am paired on this question with the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. RANSOM.] I should vote "nay," if I were not paired.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] was called away by reason of sickness in his family, and I paired with him yesterday on this question, with the right of substituting any one else on the pair. I have observed the pair to-day as there was no one else to be substituted. Were he present, I should vote "yea" with a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. INGALLS. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE.]

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 22; as follows:

USE OF TROOPS.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. If the Senator will withdraw the motion I wish to call up Senate bill No. 621, so as to leave it the unfinished business for to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island withdraw the motion?

Mr. BURNSIDE. Yes, sir; to enable the Senator from Georgia to get the bill before the Senate.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I simply want to call it up so as to have it the unfinished business for the purpose of addressing a few remarks to the Senate to-morrow upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island has withdrawn his motion to proceed to executive business.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 621) authorizing the employment of the militia and the land and naval forces of the United States in certain cases, and for other purposes. I will state to the Senate that my only object in doing so is to have it as the unfinished business for to-morrow.

Mr. CONKLING. Not to act upon it, but to speak to it?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. That is all. I desire simply to submit some remarks to the Senate upon the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I now move that it go over informally until to-morrow, as the unfinished business.

Mr. CONKLING. That it does without any motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the understanding.

Mr. BAYARD. I understood the honorable Senator from Rhode Island to withdraw his motion temporarily. I should like to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill to remove the political disabilities of James F. Harrison, of Virginia, reported by me yesterday.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I yield for that purpose.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 94) directing a monument to be erected to mark the birthplace of George Washington; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 516) to extend the time of special postal service until service can be obtained by advertisement; and

A bill (S. No. 572) to amend an act approved February 24, 1879, entitled "An act to create the northern judicial district of the State of Texas, and to change the eastern and western judicial districts of said State, and to fix the time and places of holding courts in said districts."

MONUMENT AT WASHINGTON'S BIRTHPLACE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the joint resolution just received from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 94) directing a monument to be erected to mark the birthplace of George Washington was read twice by its title.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator from Delaware yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. VOORHEES. I understand that this afternoon, but a few minutes ago, the House of Representatives unanimously, both parties concurring, moved by a patriotic impulse, passed the joint resolution which has just been read, making a small appropriation of $3,000 to build a monument to mark the place where George Washington was born. I understand that it not only met with no opposition whatever in the House from any source, but that each side of that Chamber vied with the other in putting it upon its passage and sending it to us.

I think it would be a graceful thing to mark the conclusion of a somewhat acrimonious session of Congress for the Senate to take up the joint resolution and pass it in a similar spirit and in a similar way. I am told there is not one thing, except the remains of an old house, which will soon pass away, to indicate where Washington first saw the light of this world. In after years it would be a source of satisfaction to future generations to find something that will indicate where he was born, and it will need this evidence of the spot to give future generations that knowledge. Soon there will be nothing at all to tell the place unless this joint resolution is passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It appropriates $3,000 for the purpose of erecting a monument at and to mark the birthplace of George Washington, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. GROOME. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the joint resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAYARD, (when Mr. HAMPTON'S name was called.) I am requested by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] to state that he is detained from his seat in the Senate by the illness of a member of his family.

Mr. KERNAN, (when Mr. RANDOLPH'S name was called.) I wish to say in reference to this vote that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. RANDOLPH] was called away unexpectedly Saturday, and therefore is not here to vote upon the passage of the joint resolution.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BURNSIDE. My colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is away on duty at the Naval Academy at Annapolis. If he were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SLATER. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. GROVER] is absent on duty at the Naval Academy at Annapolis.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS] was called home on important business that could not be postponed. If he were here, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 52, nays 0; as follows:

YEAS—52.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Garland,	Kellogg,
Bailey,	Carpenter,	Groome,	Kernan,
Bayard,	Cockrell,	Harris,	Kirkwood,
Beck,	Coke,	Hereford,	Lamar,

Farley,	Johnston,	Ransom,	Withers.

So the joint resolution was passed.

JAMES F. HARRISON.

Mr. BAYARD. I have already submitted a motion to the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a bill reported yesterday from the Committee on the Judiciary to remove the political disabilities of James F. Harrison, of Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. Has the gentleman named in the bill asked to have his disabilities removed?

Mr. BAYARD. Oh, yes. It has been passed upon by the Committee on the Judiciary, and I believe unanimously reported.

Mr. BLAINE. I have no objection to it at all.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 669) to remove the political disabilities of James F. Harrison, of Virginia.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, when the Senator from Maine asked his question, I rose to ask him one, but was too late. I should now like to know why at this late day men should be required to come here as beggars asking for the removal of their disabilities when a general amnesty bill surely ought to have been passed long ago, and when I know that five years ago the Senator from Maine as well as myself was very urgent that such a bill should be passed, and we did pass one through the House of Representatives at the beginning of the Forty-third Congress. In the Forty-second Congress the Senate had done the same thing, attaching, however, I believe, the civil rights bill to it, which afterward became a law. Therefore the Senate and the House five years ago agreed that all disabilities should be removed, and now we are peddling out these relief bills with as much care as though there was some very important matter connected with the subject. I refer to the Senator from Maine particularly in asking a question of that sort, when the committee of which he was chairman, the Committee on Rules of the Forty-third Congress, reported a bill to the House of Representatives removing all disabilities, removing all test oaths, and then the name of Mr. Davis was suggested as a man who would come in under that bill. The Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] then a Representative from Massachusetts, another Representative from Massachusetts, Mr. Butler, and others all agreed that the farce had been played out long ago; that a general bill ought to be passsed, and it was passed. I happen to have that discussion in my hand and in order to make it part of the RECORD I desire to read it.

On the 8th day of December, 1873, Mr. Maynard, of Tennessee, then a member of the Committee on Rules, the Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] being chairman of that committee and Speaker of the House, reported as the unanimous report of the committee a bill for the general removal of all disabilities and for the repeal of all test oaths, so that men should come together as Representatives and Senators regardless of what had happened eight or nine years before.

The RECORD reads as follows:

Mr. MAYNARD. I am instructed by the Committee on the Rules, acting upon a resolution submitted to them the other day, to report the bill which I send to the desk. It has met the unanimous approval of the Committee—

The Senator from Maine being, as I said, then the chairman of that committee—and when it has been read, I will, unless some gentleman wishes to ask questions or to make opposition to it, move the previous question.

The bill granting general amnesty and prescribing an oath of office was then read. The first section removes all disabilities imposed and remaining upon any person by virtue of section 3 of article 14 of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States. The second section repeals the act of July 2, 1862, entitled "An act to prescribe an oath of office, and for other purposes," and provides that hereafter any person elected or appointed to any office of honor or profit under the Government of the United States, either in the civil, military, or naval departments of the public service, shall, before entering upon the duties of such office and being entitled to any of the salary or other emoluments thereof, take and subscribe the oath prescribed by the act of July 11, 1868, entitled "An act prescribing an oath of office to be taken by persons from whom legal disabilities shall have been removed."

Mr. MAYNARD. I move the previous question.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Would not that admit Jeff. Davis to a seat on this floor.

Several MEMBERS. Certainly.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Then I object to it.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I will inquire of the Speaker whether, under the rule applied by him in the last Congress to the Committee on Printing, the Committee on Rules are authorized to report general legislation at any time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks they are authorized to report merely on the rules at any time; and the Chair doubts very much whether this report would be in order except under a call of the committee. This is legislation, and does not pertain to the rules. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] desires to make the point of order, now is the time to make it.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I desire simply to have the point of order decided, and then I will waive objection to the consideration of the bill; but I make the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I must insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MAYNARD. Then I move to suspend the rules, so as to allow the committee to report this bill and to pass it. And in answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Lawrence,] I tell him frankly that this bill will, if enacted, admit the president of the southern confederacy just as the vice-president has been already admitted to a seat in either House of Congress, provided the people where he lives shall think proper to send him here. It is general amnesty as recommended by the President; and it also repeals what is called the test oath, substituting for it the modified oath that we have all heard so often.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do not object to the bill if it has been considered and reported by a committee.

Mr. MAYNARD. It is reported by the Committee on Rules unanimously.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. All right.

The SPEAKER. The bill would require a two-thirds vote to pass it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move that the rules be suspended and the bill passed.

Mr. COX. Is there any objection to passing it unanimously? The President recommends amnesty; and let us unanimously wind up this foolish business of taking the test oath.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Lawrence] objects, and that is sufficient.

The question was taken on Mr. Maynard's motion; and on a division there were—ayes 141, noes 29.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill (H. R. No. 472) was passed.

Mr. President, that was the 8th day of December, 1873. Then President Grant and everybody, with the exception perhaps of Mr. Lawrence, of Ohio, and a few other fanatics, believed that these laws ought to be passed, when the Senate at the session before had agreed to it; yet Senators are now asking whether men have filed petitions, whether Mr. Davis will be admitted to representative rights if his people see fit to elect him; we are peddling out relief from disabilities in June, 1879. I vote for them all; if I cannot get all, I take what I can get; but it is, I repeat, disgraceful to an American Congress, after all that has taken place, to be peddling out those things and standing upon petitions being presented and referred before these disability bills can be passed.

A word on another subject. I introduced some time ago, and have endeavored to get the Senate to consider, a bill to repeal section 1218 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that "no person who has served in any capacity in the military, naval, or civil service of the so-called Confederate States, or of either of the States in insurrection during the late rebellion, shall be appointed to any position in the Army of the United States." I had the case before me of a boy who was a page in the Legislature of Tennessee, his family being too poor to educate and support him without procuring for him the occupation of a page. He sought, being a gallant young man now, to enter the Army of the United States, but he was met by this statute, saying that because he had held a civil office, that of a page in the Legislature of Tennessee, when it was important for him to work or starve, he could not even now enter the Army, while the sons of gentlemen here, Senators who were themselves generals in the confederate army, and who were not compelled to have their sons occupy the humble position of pages, can all hold positions in the Army and the Navy of the United States. The poor boy, whose father had to secure him employment in a menial capacity, cannot enter the Army or Navy of the United States, while the son of any Senator can hold that position to-day.

Why, gentlemen, it is a farce, an outrage on common sense and common decency. These acts ought all to be repealed, and the people of this country ought to be restored to equal rights and equal privileges. I know the Senator from Maine has always believed in that whenever he had a fair chance to act according to his own convictions. He may not thank me for saying so, but no man in the lower House during all the years I served there was more liberal to these people than he. Therefore I was astonished to hear him rise now and ask if a petition accompanied this case.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative.

WILLIAM N. R. BEALL.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President——

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to call up for consideration a similar bill for the relief of Mr. Beall.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is just what I rose for the purpose of calling up.

Mr. BAYARD. It was reported yesterday at the same time with the bill that has just passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BAYARD. This is the second bill and the only one that I believe I desire now to have passed.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island withdraw his motion?

Mr. BURNSIDE. I yield for this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 670) to remove the political disabilities of William N. R. Beale, of Missouri.

Mr. BAYARD. The name of the party is inaccurately spelled in the bill. It should be "Beall." I move that it be amended in accordance with that suggestion.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. As the Senator from Kentucky is now out of his seat, I will venture to repeat the question I asked before.

Mr. BAYARD. There was a petition filed in this case, and it was considered by the Judiciary Committee, and I believe the bill was unanimously reported.

Mr. MAXEY. I will state to the Senator from Maine that the petition is in the handwriting, from beginning to end, of William N. R. Beall, whom I know perfectly well. I have the petition here.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I will state for the information of the Senate that none of these cases that come before the Senate from the Judiciary Committee are lacking in a petition. The petition is always presented, and the bill is not reported until the petition is filed.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask that the name in the title be amended so as to correspond with the text.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection that amendment to the title will be made. The Chair hears no objection, and the title will stand as amended.

J. C. PEMBERTON.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1842, a similar bill to the one that has just been passed, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, all the due formalities having been gone through with.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1842) to remove the political disabilities of J. C. Pemberton, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not want to be hypercritical about this case, but I think in justice to the gentleman, the officer, the citizen now, who is to receive the benefit of the act, it ought to state the place of his residence at the time the disabilities were incurred. It says J. C. Pemberton, of Philadelphia. He was not of Pennsylvania.

Mr. GARLAND. Of Philadelphia.

Mr. BLAINE. He was not of that place when he incurred the disabilities?

Mr. GARLAND. His petition shows where he lived and what he did.

Mr. BLAINE. What was his State at the time he incurred disabilities?

Mr. GARLAND. His petition shows that.

Mr. BLAINE. Does not the Senator think the bill ought to show it?

Mr. GARLAND. I do not think so. I never have known of that being shown in one of these disability bills.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not remember; there may have been, but I do not now recall a case in which the act relieving any person of disabilities located him in a State which adhered to the Union.

Mr. GARLAND. In answer to the question of the Senator from Maine I will state that none of the acts specify where the party lived when the acts were committed against which the party wants relief, but specify his present residence when he asks for the relief.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not propose any amendment.

Mr. BURNSIDE. At the breaking out of the war General Pemberton was an officer in the Army, and passed from the North to the South. His original residence before he went to West Point was Philadelphia, and I believe it is his residence now; but he had no residence when the war broke out, and he had no residence during the rebellion in all likelihood.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative

ARTHUR P. BAGBY.

Mr. GARLAND. The next bill on the Calendar is one of a similar character for the relief of Arthur P. Bagby, of Texas. I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 650) to remove the political disabilities of Arthur P. Bagby, of Texas.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 2006) to amend sections 2493 and 2494 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to the importation of neat cattle into the United States for breeding purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at three o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 10, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. ALFRED H. AMES, McKendree Methodist Episcopal church, Washington, District of Columbia.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal, so far as relates to the introduction of bills, be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The remainder of the Journal having been read, it was approved.

JOINT RULES.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask that by unanimous consent the concurrent resolution of the Senate relating to the joint rules of the two Houses be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution of the Senate, as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
April 1, 1879.

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules of the Senate be authorized to take into consideration the whole subject-matter of joint rules between the two Houses, also to take into consideration the expediency of excepting appropriation bills from the operation of the sixteenth and seventeenth of the former joint rules, and to confer with the Committee on Rules of the House of Representatives with a view to joint action thereon.

Resolved, That this resolution be communicated to the House of Representatives.

There being no objection, the resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Rules.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MORRISON, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die at 12 o'clock noon, on Tuesday the 17th of June instant.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BIRTHPLACE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent to introduce at this time for consideration and passage a joint resolution directing a monument to be erected to mark the birthplace of George Washington.

The joint resolution provides that the sum of $3,000 shall be appropriated for the purpose of erecting a monument at and to mark the birthplace of George Washington, said sum to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, who shall have the management and control of the erection of said monument.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am informed that nothing now remains to mark the birthplace of the Father of his Country except a part of a stone chimney; even the house in which he was born has been swept away by time. There is nothing now to indicate to posterity, to generations unborn, the spot where the father of our country first saw the light. I hope, therefore, that not a single member will object to the appropriation of this small sum to be expended in a monument to mark his birthplace.

Mr. GARFIELD. No one on this side will object.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 94) was received, read three several times, and passed unanimously.

HENRY Z. EATON.

Mr. MONROE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2254) for the relief of Lieutenant Henry Z. Eaton; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

HENRY H. BIXLER.

Mr. McKINLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2255) granting a pension to Henry H. Bixler, of Company B, Twenty-fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CHARLES W. CROUK.

Mr. BLAKE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2256) for the relief of Charles W. Crouk; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JAMES JAMES.

Mr. BLAKE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2257) to correct the military record of James James; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ELIZABETH J. SIMPSON.

Mr. McCOID, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2258) for the relief of Elizabeth J. Simpson; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

PENSIONS FOR MEXICAN WAR.

Mr. COFFROTH. I ask unanimous consent to report at this time from the Committee on Invalid Pensions a bill granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican and other wars therein named, and for other purposes, and that it be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JOYCE. I object.

EULOGIES OF J. E. LEONARD.

Mr. ACKLEN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the usual number of the eulogies delivered on the late J. E. Leonard, a member of the Forty-fifth Congress, be printed for the use of the members of this House and the Senate.

OWNERS OF BRIG GENERAL ARMSTRONG.

Mr. WILSON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the memorials in the case of the owners, officers, and crew of the United States private armed brig General Armstrong, destroyed by a British fleet in the neutral port of Fayal, which has been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, be printed for the use of said committee and the information of the House.

STEAMER B. P. CHENY.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report a bill to amend section 1, page 234, of the twentieth volume of the United States Statutes at Large of the Forty-fifth Congress.

The bill repeals so much of section 1, page 234, of the twentieth volume of the United States Statutes at Large, passed at the Forty-fifth Congress and approved June 20, 1878, as relates to the steamer B. P. Cheny.

Mr. CONGER. What does the gentleman desire to do with that bill?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I want to put it upon its passage.

Mr. CONGER. That is not a privileged report.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. It is from the Committee on Appropriations, and I think it is a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. That committee has the right to report at any time general appropriation bills for commitment only. This is not a general appropriation bill.

Mr. CONGER. I will withhold my objection until I can hear some explanation of the bill.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I ask to have a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury read.

The letter was read, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., March 25, 1879.

SIR: In the estimates of appropriations required by the various Departments to complete the service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and prior years, (House Executive Document No. 45, Forty-fifth Congress, second session, page 57,) was an item of $28,370.72 for the payment of the claim of Charles Latimer for the value of the steamer B. P. Cheney.

On representations of fraud, a clause was inserted in the sundry civil act of June 20, 1878, (20 Statutes, 234,) as follows: That the appropriation of $75,666.50 to pay for horses, mules, harness, oxen, wagons, carts, sleighs, steamboats and other vessels, railroad engines, and railroad cars, killed, lost, captured or destroyed, or abandoned while in the military service, contained in the act "making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and prior years, and for those heretofore treated as permanent, for reappropriations, and for other purposes, be not construed to authorize the payment of the claim for the steamer B. P. Cheney without further legislation."

Since that time the case has been resubmitted to the accounting officers, and all the additional evidence tending to show the case was not a valid claim against the Government has been considered by the Third Auditor and Second Comptroller of the Treasury, who have reported that the new evidence does not change the facts upon which the original settlement and allowance were made.

I have therefore to transmit herewith all the papers in the case, and renew my estimate for the amount found due; namely, $28,370.72.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

Hon. S. J. RANDALL, Speaker House of Representatives.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I will give a word of explanation to the House in reference to this matter.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let the bill be read again, before the gentleman makes his explanation; it was not heard distinctly when read before.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Is the bill still open to objection?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that objection was reserved until the letter was read. If the gentleman from Tennessee desires, objection will be reserved until the bill is again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I hope I may be allowed one word of explanation.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I object to the reporting of the bill. I am perfectly willing to hear the gentleman from Mississippi if I can reserve my right to object.

The SPEAKER. The right of objection will be reserved.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. At the last session of Congress an appropriation was made to pay Mr. Latimer for the steamer B. P. Cheney, lost in the military service. I need not go into the particulars of the case. After the passage of the law making the appropriation, it was suggested to the Secretary of the Treasury that perhaps there was some fraud in the case, and he therefore asked that there be inserted in the sundry civil appropriation bill a clause withholding payment of this claim until further investigation could be made. The case was referred to the Second Auditor, with instructions to inquire into it. After the report of the Second Auditor it was re-referred to the same party and again reported upon favorably.

It then went to the First Comptroller of the Treasury. Each of these officers made a full investigation of the matter, and the report in each case was that the claim was just and ought to be paid.

All that is now proposed is that the clause suspending payment of the claim be repealed, so that the money may be paid in accordance with the original intention of Congress.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I object to the bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask unanimous consent to enable the Committee of Claims to make several reports relating to allowance for claims of messengers, clerks, &c., for services rendered during the Forty-fifth Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the reporting of certain resolutions providing for pay of employés of the Forty-fifth Congress. Is there objection?

Mr. CONGER. We do not know what these cases are. Let each case be reported separately, subject to objection.

Mr. BRIGHT. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. O'CONNOR] will make one of these reports in behalf of the committee.

PAYMENT FOR SERVICES OF EXPERTS.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I ask consent to report from the Committee of Claims a bill to pay for expert services, relating to the metric system, rendered the Forty-fifth Congress.

The bill was read. It appropriates $350 to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the bills of June 18 and June 28, 1878, for expert services rendered by William Wheeler Hubbell to the Forty-fifth Congress, respecting the application of the system of metric weights and measures.

Mr. CONGER. I object to that. I object to the whole metric system and to any payment for the introduction of it.

Mr. BRIGHT. Does the gentleman object to the other reports from the committee?

Mr. CONGER. No, sir; I object to any appropriation to introduce this foreign system into our weights and measures. If it must come in, let it come without expense.

Mr. BRIGHT. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. SAMFORD,] has another report.

Mr. SAMFORD. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee of Claims a joint resolution to pay Patrick Doran for services as messenger, House of Representatives.

The joint resolution was read. It directs the Clerk of the House to pay to Patrick Doran, for services as messenger to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department during the last session of the Forty-fifth Congress, $291.60, in full and final settlement for such services; and an appropriation for that amount is made.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 95) was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAMFORD moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLAIM OF CHOCTAW NATION.

Mr. HOOKER, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 440) for the ascertainment of the amount due the Choctaw Nation; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOOKER. I am directed by the committee to submit a resolution making this bill a special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. No. 440) for the ascertainment of the amount due the Choctaw Nation, herewith reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, be made the special order for consideration in Committee of the Whole on Wednesday, the 10th day of December next, immediately after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, not to interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman had better fix the 10th of January. That will be after the holidays.

Mr. HOOKER. I will modify the resolution by striking out "Wednesday, the 10th day of December" and inserting "the second Tuesday in January, 1880."

The resolution, as modified, was adopted.

DISEASES OF DOMESTICATED ANIMALS.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Printing, reported back the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein,) That there be printed 100,000 copies of Special Report No. 12 of the Commissioner of Agriculture, containing the reports of the examiners appointed to investigate the diseases of swine and contagious and infectious diseases incident to other classes of domesticated animals, of which 70,000 copies shall be printed for the use of members of the House, 25,000 for the use of members of the Senate, and 5,000 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMERICAN ISRAELITES IN RUSSIA.

Mr. COX. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back with an amendment joint resolution (H. R. No. 77) in relation to treaty negotiations with Russia as to American Israelites, and I now ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to submit that report and put the joint resolution on its passage.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, and the Chair will then ask for objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that by the laws of the Russian government no Hebrew can hold real estate, which unjust discrimination is enforced against Hebrew citizens of the United States resident in Russia; and

Whereas the Russian government has discriminated against one H. Rosenstraus, a naturalized citizen of the United States, by prohibiting him from holding real estate after his purchasing and paying for the same, because of his being an Israelite; and

Whereas such disabilities are antagonistic to the enlightened spirit of our institutions and age which demand free exercise of religious belief, and no disabilities therefor; and

Whereas the Secretary of State, under date of April 28, 1879, expresses doubt of his ability to grant the relief required, under existing treaty stipulations: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the rights of the citizens of the United States should not be impaired, at home or abroad, because of religious belief; and that, if the existing treaties between the United States and Russia be found, as is alleged, to discriminate in this particular, the President be requested to take immediate action to have the treaties so amended as to remedy the grievance.

Mr. COX. The amendment of the committee is in the eighth line, between the words "same" and "because," to insert the word "and."

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is only intended to place the American Israelite as to holding property in Russia upon the same basis with the British Israelite under treaty between England and Russia to-day. I hope there will be no objection to the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. CONGER. How much of a village lot is in question?

Mr. COX. A gentleman went there as an agent for some business in sewing-machines and bought a large establishment, and after paying for it found he could not get a title to it and wrote to our minister, and our minister said there was no treaty between the two countries as yet, although there was between Great Britain and Russia. We propose to put our Israelites in Russia on the same basis precisely with the English Israelites. Our agents are now going all through Russia if possible to increase our commerce and trade with that country. This seems to be an impediment and discrimination as to which the committee think there should be some diplomacy.

Mr. CONGER. Would not the gentleman from New York be better satisfied if those machines were made here and sold in Russia?

Mr. COX. They are made here and sent there, all sorts of machines, agricultural and otherwise.

Mr. MORTON. I ask my colleague on the committee to yield to me.

Mr. COX. I yield to my colleague on the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. Speaker, I hope this bill will pass. It appears that Russia has a treaty with Great Britain which allows Hebrew subjects of Great Britain to hold real estate in Russia, while a Hebrew citizen of the United States who has purchased and paid for real estate is not allowed to take a deed of the property purchased and paid for, showing discrimination in favor of Hebrew citizens of Great Britain and against Hebrew citizens of the United States.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask whether American citizens other than Israelites can hold real estate in Russia now?

Mr. COX. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAGAN. It may be so, but some time ago when I investigated this subject I did not find that American citizens could hold real estate in any other country than our own.

Mr. COX. There has been a great reform in that regard, I will say to my friend from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. It has been a recent thing, then, for recently I examined this subject and found it to be otherwise.

Mr. COX. Certainly if we begin negotiations in this direction it may lead to better and larger reform. My friend would not object to that.

Mr. REAGAN. I would not object to that, but we have treaties which will enable citizens of the several countries named in those treaties to hold land in this country if their governments permit citizens of the United States to hold lands in those countries. We have such treaties with Prussia, Great Britain, and Mexico, and some others. But our citizens at this day cannot hold real estate in Russia or Prussia, Great Britain or France or Mexico.

Mr. COX. I know they do in France and Great Britain.

Mr. REAGAN. I dislike to see discrimination made on account of race or religion, and should prefer this privilege should be accorded not only to Israelites but all classes of American citizens.

I have no objection to what is proposed in this joint resolution; but I do not want to discriminate between American citizens, and I do not understand why the bill should not say "American citizens" instead of "Israelites." I do not understand why that distinction should be made in view of the fact that our citizens cannot hold land in any country except our own.

Mr. COX. This is the only proscribed class so far as I know. I will say this, that it is the interest of our Government, as far as possible, to open our real-estate resources to immigration; and, with that view, we ought to deal liberally with the people of all nations and induce other nations to deal liberally with our people. Certainly our citizens of whatever persuasion should not be subjected to any disadvantage as compared with citizens of other nations in the countries with which we have treaties. I think, therefore, no one can object to this resolution, except perhaps that it may not go far enough. But if we enter into diplomatic relations with Russia upon this subject, we may in the end go further.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York what would be the objection to inserting the words "American citizens" instead of "Israelites?" Why should we ask that a particular race should have privileges in Russia which we do not ask for American citizens generally? It is the fact that no American citizen can hold real estate in Russia. Why, then, do we ask that some persons of a particular religion or race shall be permitted to hold property there in lieu of asking that that privilege shall be extended to all our citizens.

Mr. COX. I do not understand the fact to be as my friend from Texas states, that Americans cannot hold real estate in Russia. I know that at Odessa and other places American citizens have been building elevators requiring the investment of a large capital. They may possibly have got special firmans, but I am not aware that that is the fact. I think there can be no objection to passing this particular measure, and it is the only one I am instructed by the committee to present.

Mr. REAGAN. A short time ago I went over carefully the provisions of all our treaties to ascertain what was provided on that subject, and I found that our citizens cannot hold real estate in Russia, in Prussia, in Great Britain, or in France, or even in Mexico.

Mr. WILSON. I beg to say to the gentleman from Texas that he is mistaken in regard to Mexico. A case has been before this House during the last two years in which citizens of the United States (a corporation) went to Mexico and acquired land there.

Mr. REAGAN. They may have been permitted to do so under some special legislation or permission. I assure the gentleman that an American citizen, as an American citizen, is forbidden to hold real estate in Mexico. I ask the gentleman why we should discriminate in favor of a particular religion or race instead of providing that the negotiation shall extend to all American citizens?

Mr. COX. If the gentleman from Texas will send such a measure as he suggests to our committee, we will examine all the treaties faithfully and endeavor to carry out his idea.

Mr. REAGAN. I think the resolution should be recommitted to the committee that they may examine what are the provisions of the treaties on this subject. Meanwhile I object to limiting the benefits of this negotiation to a particular race, when the proper thing to do would be to open a negotiation for the benefit of American citizens generally.

Mr. COX. I insist on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. DUNNELL. I think the point urged by the gentleman from Texas is well made; and I do not see why the Committee on Foreign Affairs should not be willing to accept the amendment which he has suggested. The term "American citizens" will cover the class for whose benefit especially it is proposed to make provision here, and will at the same time make the negotiation more general in its objects.

Mr. COX. I will amend the resolution by inserting the words "or any other" before the word "particular;" so that it will read:

That if the existing treaties between the United States and Russia be found, as is alleged, to discriminate in this or any other particular, &c.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not think that is sufficient.

Mr. COX. I offer that amendment in good faith. I think it meets the idea suggested by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to make a further remark. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] says that no citizen of the United States can hold land in Mexico. I beg to call his attention to the report which was made to this House in the last Congress, which showed that a New York company, known as the La Abra Mining Company, acquired large property in Mexico. That property was taken from them, and an arbitration, in which Sir Edward Thornton, the British minister, acted as umpire, gave a large award against the Mexican government of four or five hundred thousand dollars for the violation of the right of property of American citizens in Mexico. And my friend from Texas voted to confirm that award.

Mr. REAGAN. That property may have been acquired under some special law. But under no treaty with Mexico, and under no general law of Mexico, is an American citizen authorized to hold real estate in that country.

Mr. COX. I propose further to amend the resolution by inserting after the word "particular," the words, "and as to any other class of our citizens;" so that it will read:

Resolved, &c., That the rights of the citizens of the United States should not be impaired, at home or abroad, because of religious belief; and that, if the existing treaties between the United States and Russia be found, as is alleged, to discriminate in this or any other particular and as to any other classes of our citizens, the President be requested to take immediate action to have the treaties so amended as to remedy the grievance.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman from New York admit the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] to insert "American citizens" instead of "Israelites?"

Mr. COX. That would spoil the unity of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I think the negotiations should extend to all American citizens.

The SPEAKER. The question is on seconding the demand for the previous question on the bill and the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

The question being put, there were—ayes 28, noes 21.

Mr. DUNNELL. I think the question is not well understood by the House.

The SPEAKER. That is not the fault of the Chair.

Mr. ELAM. A quorum has not voted.

Mr. COX. Does my friend from Louisiana oppose this amendment?

Mr. ELAM. I am in favor of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. COX. I have it just as the gentleman suggested.

Mr. REAGAN. My amendment has not yet been put in. I asked permission, but I have not yet had that permission.

Mr. BRIGHT. I call for the reading of the whole bill; I think it is not understood by the House.

The bill, as amended, was read.

Mr. COX. That seems to cover the whole ground.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is made by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELAM] that no quorum voted.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw my proposed amendment.

Mr. ELAM. Then I withdraw the demand for a quorum.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ELAM. I suggest that the title needs amendment.

Mr. COX. I move to amend the title of the bill, so as to make it read "American citizens," &c.

The title of the joint resolution was amended.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to introduce a bill for reference, as I was not here yesterday.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I call for the regular order of business, which is the morning hour.

Mr. McMAHON. I move to dispense with the morning hour for to-day.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the motion to dispense with the morning hour was agreed to.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. PHELPS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2259) donating condemned bronze cannon to the Soldier's Monument Association of Birmingham, Connecticut; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HAYES. I call for the regular order.

JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McMAHON. I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations. I report back the bill (H. R. No. 2252) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses and I ask for its consideration now.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CALKINS. Have all points of order been reserved on the bill?

The SPEAKER. They have all been reserved.

Mr. CONGER. They were reserved when the bill was ordered to be printed.

Mr. McMAHON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering this bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. Has the bill been printed?

Mr. McMAHON. I will state that it has been printed, and we had twenty copies sent us, with notice that the remainder would be here in a short time.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is it in the RECORD?

Mr. McMAHON. It is not in the RECORD; and pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I move that all general debate be closed in thirty minutes.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the gentleman will not ask that; we do not want much time, but we may want more than that.

Mr. McMAHON. I consulted with gentlemen on the other side of the House before making the motion.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman will move to allow twenty minutes on each side.

Mr. GARFIELD. We shall not object to that.

Mr. McMAHON. I accept that modification.

The motion to close debate was agreed to.

The question was taken on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair,) and proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2252) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses.

Mr. McMAHON. I move to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

There was no objection, and the reading was dispensed with.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a short statement to the committee in regard to this bill. The bill which we now present for consideration has heretofore been a part of the sundry civil bill. The amount appropriated by this bill has generally been appropriated in one sum, the sum of $2,500,000 some years, $2,600,000, $2,700,000, and $2,800,000 in other years, and sometimes $3,000,000, but always in one sum and undivided as to its uses. The committee have thought it proper to have this large sum itemized.

We have required the Department of Justice to estimate to the committee the appropriations needed for the several different purposes, and we have followed the estimates sent to us except as to three different items. We have reduced the appropriation for the pay of district attorneys and their assistants $50,000 below the estimates. We have also reduced the pay of United States marshals and their deputies $50,000. We have reduced the pay of jurors $190,000, because we have incorporated into the bill a provision reducing their compensation from three to two dollars a day, and we have the authority of the Attorney-General himself that such a reduction will enable us to dispense with $200,000 of the appropriation. The fees of witnesses we have left according to the estimate of the Department of Justice; so also for the support of United States prisoners; so also for the rent of United States court-rooms, and for certain miscellaneous purposes, such as fuel, lights, stationery, furniture, sweepers, &c., a total appropriation of $280,000, which amount may seem very large, but it covers a very large and uncertain contingent ground. The entire amount appropriated for all purposes is $2,690,000 for the next fiscal year.

Mr. O'NEILL. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. McMAHON. If it does not come out of my time I am willing to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot prevent it coming out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. McMAHON. Well, I am willing to yield for a question alone.

Mr. O'NEILL. I simply want to ask whether the committee propose to reduce the pay or fees of the United States marshals, the marshals of the different districts?

Mr. McMAHON. That will be for the Department of Justice to determine. We have not reduced the regular annual salary of the United States marshals; but we have appropriated only $600,000 for the pay of United States marshals and their deputies, arising from fees, costs, &c.

Mr. O'NEILL. Do I understand that it is discretionary with the Attorney-General how much the marshal of each district of the United States shall be paid?

Mr. McMAHON. In part; yes, sir. I am only sorry that we could not see our way clear at present to reduce the fees of marshals and their deputies a great deal more. I am satisfied that one of the greatest abuses existing in this country is the enormous cost to which the Government is unnecessarily put by the great number of commissioners of the United States, backed up by the district attorneys and helped along by the marshals. They are all paid chiefly by fees; and their chief effort is to increase business in the courts.

Mr. O'NEILL. The marshals of the different districts are not very largely paid now; neither are the clerks of the courts nor the district attorneys, whose duties are constant and unremitting from the beginning to the end of the year.

Mr. McMAHON. I must decline to yield any further. I think the appropriations will be found amply sufficient for the purpose. In answer to numerous inquiries I desire to call attention to one clause of this bill, and to state that no money is appropriated for the payment of deputy marshals, "special" deputy marshals as they are sometimes called, for services on the day of election. The last clause of the first section of the bill provides that "no part of the money hereby appropriated is appropriated to pay any salaries, compensation, fees, or expenses under or in virtue of title 26 of the Revised Statutes or of any provision of said title."

Now, if gentlemen will look at that title of the Revised Statutes they will see that it covers the appointment of deputy marshals, their duties, pay, &c., the subpœnaing of witnesses in certain cases before the supervisors of elections, &c. I will say that the clause in the bill which I have quoted is a very sweeping one, and is intended to prevent the enforcement of the supervisors and deputy-marshals clauses of the Revised Statutes during the next fiscal year, so far as a failure to appropriate money for their compensation will effect the purpose.

In the second section is a provision that all sums appropriated in this bill shall be in full for the persons and purposes designated for the next fiscal year. And to that we have added a clause by which we slightly modify the existing law, to the effect that "no department or officer of the Government shall, during said fiscal year, make any contract or incur any liability for the future payment of money, until an appropriation to meet such contract or pay such liability shall have first been made by law." The present law is that no department of the Government shall involve the Government in any liability for the future payment of money or make any contract until the money shall have been first appropriated. We have added the words "no officer of the Government," and have also added the words "or incur any liability."

In section 3 of this bill we have included what is generally known as the jury clause, repealing the juror's test oath, and providing a new method of drawing jurors. In that we have only followed out the frequent recommendations of the Attorneys-General of the United States, and particularly of Mr. Pierrepont in a letter to the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress that some uniform system was necessary. There is no Department of our Government that ought to be purer in its administration, but I am sorry to say that there is none where, in proportion to the amount of money appropriated, greater scandals are involved. I think I can say that upon the authority of some of the Attorneys-General of the United States.

We have also added a proviso which will not be found in any of the previous bills passed by this House upon the subject, providing "that no citizen possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

The purpose of that amendment will be apparent to every one. It is intended only to demonstrate what was already the fact, that we did not in any way intend to abridge the rights of our colored citizens as jurors, and that we intended to guarantee them all their rights everywhere, whatever may be the State law upon the subject.

We have added another clause, section 4. In looking over the reports of the Attorneys-General we discovered a very extraordinary fact. We discovered that the report which the Attorney-General makes to the House of Representatives of his annual expenditures in any one year covers only the amount expended during that fiscal year out of the funds appropriated for that particular year. To illustrate, if at the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, there was left an unexpended balance of $500,000, and that amount should be expended for obligations incurred during the year ending June 30, 1880, it would not be found in the next annual report made to this Congress for the expenditures of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, nor would it be found in the expenditures for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1880. Therefore a very large amount of money is and may be expended by the Department in that way which is never accounted for to Congress anywhere. Your committee therefore have never been able to ascertain what was annually expended by the Department in any one fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, there is one thing I desire to announce to this House in connection with this bill, and it is that under any and all circumstances it means a deficiency. It means the bringing in of a deficiency bill and the making of appropriations at some time in the future for the purpose of administering the courts of the United States.

This bill appropriates less sums than the estimates furnished—a good deal less I might say than those furnished by the Attorney-General, and his estimates have been predicated upon the expenses of his Department for the last four years. In the administering of the courts of the United States that Department has not had sufficient money during the past year to enable the courts to be held for the length of time necessary for transacting their business. They have been compelled in almost all of the courts, North and South, of only making delivery of the jail prisoners, and ordering the remainder of the jury business of the term over to a future court. In my State of New York I understand at the circuit court, which is soon to be in session, there is to be no jury in attendance for the reason the appropriation is exhausted; there is insufficient money for the purpose of having a jury in attendance; and yet in the face and eyes of this experience and of these facts the Appropriation Committee has seen fit to bring in a bill here which cuts down last year's appropriation, the only effect of which must be a denial of justice to suitors, postponing the trial of cases, putting it in the power of all criminals, wherever they are capable of procuring bail, to postpone the trial of their cases indefinitely.

I shall, at the proper time, propose amendments to the proper sections of this bill for the purpose of increasing appropriations. I suppose it will be a waste of time, yet I shall deem it a duty to be discharged in reference to the matter. So far as the political measures are concerned, at the proper time in the progress of the consideration of the bill I shall move certain amendments to them. Having given this notice, I will yield the balance of my time to my friend from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, those provisions of this bill which itemize the expenses of the courts are in the right direction, the direction of economy and a prudent regard for the safe disbursement of the public funds. I welcome them in this respect as in pursuance of a policy which we ought always to approve.

In so far as the bill creates unnecessary deficiencies, as has been stated by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK,] it is objectionable. The fair and manly course for the House to pursue is to appropriate what it believes is fully adequate, and no more, to meet the expenses of the current fiscal year. The opposite course has been frequently pursued by political parties; but, in the long run, it has never proved to be wise to make an apparent reduction of expenditures knowing that the supplies withheld must be made up by subsequent deficiency bills. There is no real gain to anybody in the long run, and it is a bad way to manage the fiscal affairs of the Government. I hope, therefore, whatever amendment this bill may need in that respect will be made, and that the full amount required for the actual service of the year will be added.

In reference to the two clauses which have been referred to by the gentleman from New York, and which are found on pages 2 and 3 of the bill, (which I have a copy of only by borrowing it from a member of the committee,) I will make a few observations. It is not a valid objection against the passage of an appropriation bill that it does not embrace all the objects for which appropriations should be made. We cannot justly vote against appropriations which are proper in themselves merely because the amounts are not large enough. But there is a clause at the end of the first section which is something more than a mere omission to make a necessary appropriation; I read it:

No part of the money hereby appropriated is appropriated to pay any salaries, compensations, fees, expenses, under or in virtue of title 26 of the Revised Statutes.

It is fair to inquire whether those statutes do not command the executive officers of the Government to execute them, perform some positive duty, and whether by this clause we are not merely neglecting to appropriate, but are virtually nullifying the law by preventing its enforcement. If the clause which I have read stood alone it would be less objectionable; but taken in connection with the second section which I will read presently, it amounts to a legislative prohibition for one year to enforce the statutes in title 26. The sections of that title are the laws which this House and the Senate have vainly tried to repeal, but have found they have not the constitutional power to do so. We were told in the outset that these laws should be repealed or no appropriations would be made. But it has been demonstrated to the most unobservant that the present Congress is powerless to repeal these laws, and the attempt has been wisely abandoned. The chief amounts needed for the support of the civil departments were appropriated in the bill which we passed yesterday with no provisions for repealing or modifying the law, but now the Committee on Appropriations propose a bill by which, for the coming year, these laws shall be not repealed, but not enforced—nullified.

Now, gentlemen, that is only an indirect way of doing temporarily and for one year what you have no constitutional authority to do absolutely and permanently. This provision ought to be stricken out. As I have already intimated, the clause which I have just read draws its evil inspiration from the provisions of the second section, which I will now read:

That the sums appropriated in this act for the persons and public service embraced in its provisions are in full for such persons and public service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880; and no Department or officer of the Government shall, during said fiscal year, make any contract or incur any liability for the future payment of money until an appropriation sufficient to meet such contract or pay such liability shall have first been made by law.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us consider the effect of this section upon existing law.

Mr. COX. I desire to ask the gentleman whether what he has just read is not substantially the law now?

Mr. GARFIELD. My remarks will soon answer the gentleman. In 1870, in order to prevent the extravagant use of the public money, Congress passed a law restricting the expenditures for any one year to the appropriations made for that year. That is, if the appropriations made for the year were not sufficient, a deficiency must be asked for. Unexpended balances remaining from previous years could not be applied to meet deficiencies. This was a wise provision. Then it was found that there was a tendency to incur obligations by making contracts, such as for the rent of buildings, the lease extending over a series of years ahead. Thus obligations were incurred for which no appropriations of money had been made. To check that tendency, section 3679 of the Revised Statutes was enacted in these words:

No Department of the Government shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations.

Now, in pari materia, as part of the same general prohibition, gentlemen will find, in section 3732, this enactment:

No contract or purchase on behalf of the United States shall be made, unless the same is authorized by law or is under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment, except—except in the War and Navy Departments, for clothing, subsistence, forage, fuel, quarters, or transportation, which, however, shall not exceed the necessities of the current year.

But here is an important exception that gentlemen appear to have overlooked, and it answers the question of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,]—

Perhaps this section may throw a little side-light on another bill which is shortly to be before us in regard to feeding, clothing, and transporting the Army. Under the laws as they now stand, if Congress neglects to pass the regular appropriation bills, or if the appropriations run out, still the Army is to be fed and not starved, clothed and not left naked, transported to points of danger and not left idle and useless. So also with the Navy. But here is a section which for one year nullifies section 3732, for it makes no exception.

Mr. CARLISLE. Did not the act of 1870 repeal all that?

Mr. GARFIELD. No, sir.

Mr. CARLISLE. Why not.

Mr. GARFIELD. Because of the exception which I have just read with reference to the Army and the Navy which has never been construed as repealed.

Mr. CARLISLE. You have read the exceptions in the act of 1861, but the act of 1870, a later statute, contained no exceptions whatever.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have read to the gentleman from the Revised Statutes now in force two exceptions which must be construed together; one does not repeal the other.

Mr. CARLISLE. How did that provision get there?

Mr. GARFIELD. It is enough for me to know that this is the law, for both sections have been adopted by Congress in the revision of 1874. But this is not all. Besides nullifying the exceptions of that section for the coming year, there is imported into this second section of the bill a new term. Before this, outside of these exceptions, a Department could not make a contract, a written contract, binding the Government to pay money for an object for which no appropriation had been made.

That was wise and judicious, for it prevented the Departments from entering into large schemes that bound the Government in advance of the action of Congress. But here is another expression not known in our existing statutes:

No department or officer of the Government shall * * * make any contract or incur any liability.

Here is a provision which is much broader than any that has been found in the statutes hitherto, as every lawyer will concede. "Incur liability." What does that mean? Suppose the President of the United States should think it important to send a minister extraordinary to some foreign court, being authorized thereto by the Constitution, and in an emergency should send him. Would that incur liability? Certainly. Suppose he had been ordered by Congress to do it. Suppose it was made mandatory under the law, but there happened to be no special appropriation for it, and he should make the appointment. Would that "incur liability" for which an appropriation had not first been made? Suppose it should so happen that a new judicial district had been created by act of Congress, and the President should be ordered by the law to appoint a judge, but there happens to be no appropriation for the salary of the judge. The President in appointing that judge according to law incurs a liability for the Government to pay the salary. In short, any executive act of his which by law he is commanded to perform he is here forbidden to perform during the coming year because in doing so he incurs a liability for which an appropriation has not specially been made in advance.

The object of this legislation is plain. During the coming year there is to be an election for members of Congress in the State of California, and one in the Westchester district of New York to fill a vacancy; and the purpose of this legislation is leveled at these elections, so that neither the courts nor the United States marshals shall appoint supervisors or deputy marshals to act as official witnesses or to keep the peace at those elections, so that the United States may be properly and lawfully present at the creation of its own legislators. This legislation is an attempt to defeat and cripple the power of the United States to be present at those two elections which are to be held durjng the coming summer. It is an attempt to accomplish by indirection what cannot be done by an open and plain repeal.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as we have successfully resisted the repeal of righteous laws in spite of the threat that the appropriations would be refused, none the less will we resist their nullification. The chapter of forced repeal seems to have been closed. Gentlemen have abandoned it. But the chapter of nullifying laws is now opened. Again we stand upon the unassailable proposition that not only shall these just laws remain upon the statute-book, but that they shall be executed.

Mr. SPRINGER rose.

Mr. GARFIELD. In a moment. If you do not appropriate the money we cannot help ourselves. We are powerless to appropriate it without your aid. You are the majority; but not by our consent shall you nullify a law which the Constitution does not permit you to repeal. I will now hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rose to ask the gentleman the question whether it was not within the province of a majority of this House and of the Senate to withhold appropriations for any purpose that they might desire.

Mr. GARFIELD. Oh, yes.

Mr. SPRINGER. What complaint, then, have you to make against the majority of this House and of the other House for refusing appropriations for objects which they deem subversive of the rights and liberties of the people?

Mr. GARFIELD. I answer the gentleman from Illinois by a quotation from the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER,] who is not now here. He defined right to be equal to power plus duty. Now you have the power to withhold appropriations for executing the laws, but have you the right? Your power and your duty put together constitute your right in the best sense of the word. Of course you are your own judges of duty. But we are all here, Mr. Chairman, under the solemn obligation of an oath. We are all sworn before the Searcher of all hearts that we will well and faithfully perform the duties of Representatives under the Constitution. And the Constitution makes it our duty to appropriate the necessary means to enforce the laws. The Constitution provides that the judges, the President, and other officers shall receive a fixed compensation at stated times, and this can only be done by our being faithful to our oaths.

Will the gentleman deny that we are under a solemn obligation to make all the appropriations necessary to carry on the Government and execute the laws of the United States? If any gentlemen here see fit to neglect that high duty and violate that great obligation, they must answer to their own constituents, to their consciences, and to God. But, as for me, I hold that to appropriate the money required by the law is my duty, and my vote shall be for the appropriation under the laws as they are, and not coupled with acts which nullify or obstruct the laws.

There have come into our Treasury during the last year $235,000,000. Every dollar of that money came from the people under the sanction of a law or laws which were passed for the express purpose of raising money for the support of the Government. That money is in the Treasury, and for that purpose; and we are the trustees of that fund under the law and the Constitution. The people paid it without imposing any conditions; they paid it under the laws as they now exist to support the Government.

Now, therefore, if we, the trustees of that great fund, step in between those for whom they hold the trust and the execution of the trust and say we will not apply this money according to the laws under which we received it, but we will impose conditions of our own different from that under which they paid it, are we not betrayers of a trust and violators of the Constitution?

Mr. McMAHON. No gentleman is more delighted than myself to find my colleague and his associates returning to a proper appreciation of their duties under the Constitution and the laws. He gives us a good lesson on the duty of appropriating money for the purposes of government, which duty we have been steadily performing on this side of the House. I am sorry that my colleague has been uniformly voting against all appropriations. It is his right to do so, of course, if he sees fit. It is every gentleman's right and duty to vote according to the dictates of his own conscience. We, following the dictates of our conscience on this side, have uniformly voted for every appropriation bill that was reported to the House. The gentlemen on the other side, following the dictates of their consciences, have uniformly voted against every appropriation bill until yesterday, when they advanced in a solid column to vote for a bill on the old-fashioned republican way—without debate, without discussion, without really an understanding of its contents.

There is another proposition which is fundamental in our Government, and that is the right of the majority of the people of the country, in a constitutional way, to rule the country. We on this side are sent here as exponents of the people of the country. We come here as representatives fresh from the people by election; and we hold both Houses. We are responsible for our legislation. But it is our right and duty to shape that legislation. And he who prevents the majority from ruling violates and defeats the will of the people. We come here not upon a mere tidal wave, but as exponents of an organized revolt against the republican party which has lasted so long that we have been able to get possession of the State Legislatures and of both Houses, and now when we come here and vote according to the will of the people and desire to have free and fair elections and to deprive the gentlemen on the other side of the right to place partisans at the polls and defeat the will of the people, they say: Let this power remain in the hands of the President and his subordinates that we may achieve partisan success; and if you do not we will not vote for a single dollar of the appropriations. We prefer our partisan advantages to our sworn duty to support the Government. If we cannot have deputy marshals (which the majority of both Houses wish to dispense with) we want no appropriations at all.

Sir, if that commends itself to the fair mindedness of the American people I have mixed with them in vain.

So when we presented the Army bill with the fundamental proposition in it that troops should not be allowed at the polls to disturb the voters, what did the gentlemen on the other side of the House do? You, as a party, voted "no" on the appropriation bill; you preferred to have no appropriation for the Government rather than surrender this improper privilege, which in the past you have used so wrongfully; and with my friend from the State of Ohio at your head you forget the Constitution and your duty under it so piously spoken of by my colleague just now, and you refuse to vote for that measure. The amount of the appropriation was all right, the purposes were all right; but your party would lose its advantages and was stripped of its chance to resort to violence, by which it had kept itself in power against the vote of the people.

Sir, that provision was put in in accordance with the old republican doctrine that no troops should be allowed at the polls; and you gentlemen rather than give up that, in your judgment, sacred right, as you seemed to deem it, voted against the appropriation bill. How can my honorable colleague reconcile his practice with his preaching?

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to a fact?

Mr. McMAHON. I cannot yield; my time is too short.

Gentlemen, where was your constitutional duty then? In whose keeping did you place your political consciences? What committee had charge of it? When you were called upon to discharge your duty in this House as expounded by my colleague you refused to vote for the appropriation bill; you surrendered to party dictation in caucus. What right had you to say that the democratic party met in caucus in order to bind the action of its members on this floor? [Laughter.]

The gentlemen laugh about something they do not understand. We have heard about democratic caucuses and their dictation. I ask my associates around me whether I do not state the truth when I say that in every caucus we have held the understanding has always been that in legislative action every member may vote upon his conscience. In the caucuses held by the democratic party in the Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, and Forty-sixth Congresses it has always been so understood.

I know that our republican friends say that they do not hold caucuses. Oh, no; but when they want to meet together and get up some devilment to starve the Government by refusing appropriations they "confer;" nice, pious gentlemen that you are, you confer together. Oh, keep behind me, caucus; keep behind me, Satan; "we confer!" Yet the fact is that something more binding seems to have become necessary for gentlemen on the other side, because there are one or two breachy men over there who will insist on leading your party into the very jaws of death and destruction; and would do so if it were not for the wiser heads of the party who meet together and "confer."

Now my friend from Ohio has got up a new catch-word. Catch-words are republican weapons; they do not deal in solid arguments. Now, as to whether it is right or not to have deputy marshals at the polls, my colleague from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] great man that he is, has developed his talent solely into catch-words. A few months ago we on this side were "revolutionists." But the people having swallowed that term and finding that it sits lightly on their stomachs, our friends on the other side have discovered a new startling phrase and now we are to be called "nullifiers." Nullifiers, because being in the majority in both Houses we attempt to express in our legislation the will of the people in a constitutional way. There is not power enough on the part of that gentleman to deceive the American people upon this question. They understand these things just as well as you or I do, Mr. Chairman. They understand that the republican programme means retaining the same methods by which the present occupant of the presidential office was cheated into his position. When they come to understand and pass upon this proposition, whether we are nullifiers because we do not propose to allow you to steal into the Presidency another time, I will risk their judgment, I will risk their common sense, notwithstanding all the eloquence and power and ingenuity of my colleague from the State of Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] There are some things entirely beyond his reach. He cannot persuade the people that it is right to have troops at the polls. Nor will any fair-minded citizen claim that it is honest or fair to have deputy marshals at the polls, all of one party and doing the bid of their masters and corrupting elections.

Now, one word in reply to my colleague upon the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK.] He said that the courts in his State would have to stop for want of jurors. I do not think that he can have informed himself upon that subject. We have given for the support of juries $10,000 more than the Department of Justice requested us to do, if we decreased the pay of jurors from $3 to $2 per day. We have allowed all that was asked for the compensation of witnesses, and we have allowed the same pay for all officers except the assistant district attorneys of the United States and the marshals and deputy marshals. We do not propose to appropriate anything to pay for the expenses of officers at the polls. If that makes us nullifiers, then I admit that we are nullifiers; there we are and there we will stand. We will vote for this appropriation bill, and I hope that our friends on the other side will take to heart the lesson which my colleague gave them, and when the final vote on this bill comes to be taken by yeas and nays, that they will rue their action in the past, and give us a solid vote for a bill without which we can have no witnesses, no jurors, no marshals, nor anything else to keep the wheels of justice in motion.

I believe my time has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has half a minute remaining.

Mr. McMAHON. I do not care for that.

Mr. HAYES. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAYES. Is there any way in which we can obtain printed copies of this bill before we are called upon to act upon it?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a matter for the Chair. General debate has been exhausted upon this bill, and the Clerk will now read the bill by sections for amendments.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will amendments be in order to each paragraph as read, or must they be reserved until the section is read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the usual practice is to read the section, after which amendments to any portion of it will be in order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think it would be better to have amendments offered to each paragraph of the section when read.

Mr. McMAHON. I do not object to that.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think it would be preferable to treat each clause of the first section, for instance, as a paragraph for amendment, for in that case the amendment will be more readily understood.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the bill will be read by clauses for amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES] made a very pertinent inquiry a moment since in regard to printed copies of this bill. There are only about twenty copies here at this time, and I think it wrong to compel the House to proceed to the consideration of this bill without members having printed copies of it before them. Perhaps the copies are here; if not, why not?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no information upon that subject.

Mr. ATKINS. I think the fault is with the Government Printing Office.

Mr. McMAHON. That is where it is.

Mr. ATKINS. The clerk of the Committee on Appropriations stated to me an hour ago that the printed copies of this bill should have been here before that time. They have not reached here yet, and I think the fault is with the Government Printing Office.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope that by some arrangement we can temporarily postpone the consideration of this bill until the printed copies of the bill are brought here. It is hardly fair that three hundred gentlemen should be called upon to act upon a bill of such great importance as this, and making so many radical changes in existing law, without having printed copies of the bill before them. I hope that something else may be taken up by consent for a little while.

Mr. HAYES. Why do not the Committee on Appropriations call up the Army appropriation bill, which is printed?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. There is on the calendar of the Committee of the Whole a bill providing for printing the reports of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. I think we might occupy a few minutes to advantage in taking up and passing that bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. Very well; let that bill be taken up and considered until the printed copies of the appropriation bill come.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Virginia that the House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the pending bill.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. By unanimous consent the bill I have indicated might be taken up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that it is within the power of the Committee of the Whole to take any such action.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Then I move that the committee rise.

Mr. McMAHON. I hope that will not be done. Twenty copies of this bill were handed to me in print this morning at half past eleven o'clock, and at the same time word was brought me that the other copies were being struck off as rapidly as possible and would follow almost immediately. Now, what is the matter I am unable to say. I have had the Public Printer telegraphed to twice. Perhaps he does not want this appropriation bill passed; I do not know.

Mr. CALKINS. I hope this bill will be laid aside until we can receive printed copies of it.

Mr. McMAHON. I think there will be no trouble in understanding the bill as read by clauses.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia withdraw his motion that the committee rise?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Oh, yes, sir; I do not wish to antagonize the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. Is it understood that this bill is to be read by paragraphs for amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole has determined to consider the bill by clauses, not by sections.

Mr. CONGER. That is better.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the first clause of the bill.

Mr. CALKINS. Before that is done, I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] whether there is not some way by which this measure may be laid aside until we get the bill in print. Cannot some arrangement be made by which this bill can be passed over until the House can be put in possession of the printed bills? It is certainly a great injustice to all of us to undertake to force through a bill of this kind when we have not the printed bill before us so that we can understand what is being done. Cannot the gentleman from Ohio suggest some arrangement by which the bill can be laid aside for a time?

Mr. McMAHON. A messenger might go to the Public Printing Office and return in thirty minutes.

Mr. CALKINS. Very well; let us take up something else meanwhile.

Mr. BAYNE. Let us take up the bill of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HARRIS.] It is a very important bill—one that concerns almost every member of the House.

A MEMBER. Take up the Army bill.

Mr. CALKINS. I appeal to the gentleman from Ohio to suggest some means by which the consideration of this bill can be deferred until we have the bill in print.

Mr. McMAHON. I think that if order be restored and the Clerk will read the bill by clauses in a loud, distinct voice, the bill being subject to amendment by clauses and to discussion under the five-minute rule, every gentleman will get not only all the enlightenment he wants, but a great deal more. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON. I move that the committee rise; and I propose to keep on making that motion till we have this bill in print.

The motion of Mr. ANDERSON was not agreed to; there being—ayes 51, noes 95.

Mr. McMAHON. I desire to state that a special messenger was sent to the Government Printing Office about twenty minutes ago, and will probably be here in a few minutes. I think that in the mean while we might go on with the reading of the bill. Yesterday some gentleman on the other side moved to pass the Army bill under a suspension of the rules; and gentlemen on that side wanted to vote for the motion.

Mr. BAKER. We had seen the Army bill.

Mr. McMAHON. You voted for the legislative bill; you had never seen that.

Mr. BAKER. Oh, yes, we had.

The CHAIRMAN. The first clause of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That for the purpose of providing for certain judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, the following sums are hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated:

For payment of district attorneys and their assistants, $300,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to amend by inserting, in line 9, after the word "thousand," the words "and fifty;" so as to read:

For payment of district attorneys and their assistants, $350,000.

The appropriation for this purpose, as contained in the bill, is $300,000. My reason for making this motion has been stated substantially in remarks which I addressed to the committee before we commenced the consideration of the bill by clauses. Now, under this bill as it is prepared the Government cannot use this fund indiscriminately for different purposes; under the bill it will be impossible to transfer appropriations intended for one purpose to another purpose. The result must be that the very moment there is a lack of funds for the employment of assistant district attorneys, that very moment the machinery of the courts must stop. The lowest estimate for this item, an estimate based upon the actual expenditures of the Department for the last four years, was $350,000. Hence I have made the motion to increase the appropriation to this sum.

Mr. McMAHON. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. One of the great abuses in the Department of Justice is the large expenditure for assistant and associate United States attorneys. One hundred and three thousand dollars of this estimate of $350,000 of which the gentleman speaks was asked for assistant and special United States attorneys. The Attorney-General himself says this is wrong; that there are too many assistants; and I think we ought to know from experience in our own localities there are too many. And I wish to tell gentlemen that, according to the four reports I have before me, analyzed, we expended in June, 1875, only $260,000 altogether for attorneys, $297,000 in 1876, $306,000 in 1877, and $259,000 in 1878; and in the report of 1878 the Attorney-General tells us he had diminished the fees for associate counsel $46,000. I think $300,000 is ample. I expect if it were investigated it would be found to be too much.

Mr. BAKER. Will my colleague on the committee yield to me?

Mr. McMAHON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAKER. I ask the gentleman from Ohio whether or not the sums he has just been reading are not made up on the basis of the statement made by him in his opening, namely, that the reports of the amounts expended were confined to actual disbursements during the fiscal year, and consequently they can be no criterion of what is really needed for the service during the year?

Mr. McMAHON. I will answer the gentleman that a portion of this fund the Attorney-General can spend or not, as he sees fit. If he has not the money, he will not spend it in employing assistant counsel.

In further answer to the question the gentleman puts, I will say this: the committee has no official information from the Attorney-General by way of letter that these expenditures are not all that was expended in each fiscal year. When the question was first put to the Attorney-General himself he did not seem to understand it, and the information was conveyed by one of his subordinate officers.

Mr. HISCOCK. My colleague will say it was in the presence of the Attorney-General.

Mr. McMAHON. Yes, the Attorney-General was present.

Mr. HISCOCK. In reference to the information on this subject the statement was made by his subordinate officer of the manner in which these reports had been made.

Mr. McMAHON. The Attorney-General not seeming to know that his annual report was made as stated by the subordinate, but supposing it included all expenses for that fiscal year. We have provided against this, however, in the future.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 92.

So Mr. HISCOCK's amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fees of United States marshals and their deputies, $600,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to amend this clause by inserting the words "and fifty" before the word "thousands," in line 15.

Mr. McMAHON. I hope that amendment will not be made. I wish to read now three lines, and that is my only argument; three lines from the letter of Attorney-General Pierrepont to the Forty-fourth Congress:

The drafts of marshals through this department of the judiciary fund are enormous, and they seem to me in many instances unreasonably large.

So I think.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman whether that did not refer to one district in Arkansas?

Mr. McMAHON. No, sir.

Mr. CONGER. Was he not reviewing the Arkansas expenditures?

Mr. McMAHON. No, sir; he was sending us his annual letter.

Mr. CONGER. But in a review of the expenditures in one of the districts of the United States.

Mr. McMAHON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. We put the question to the Attorney-General whether these increased expenditures did not happen in the Southern States.

Mr. CONGER. I am not speaking of the Southern States.

Mr. McMAHON. I think you are.

Mr. CONGER. I am speaking of one district in one State which was the subject of congressional investigation.

Mr. McMAHON. I had the information from the Attorney-General's office that these abuses existed North as well as South.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman whether he does not refer to a statement made in considering the expenses in the district of Arkansas?

Mr. McMAHON. I say to the gentleman I will answer him in proper time.

Mr. CONGER. Oh! The courtesy of the gentleman in charge of this bill in his political speech against us leads me to presume he does not propose to answer the question.

Mr. McMAHON. Well, now, I believe the gentleman from Michigan is considered to be a pattern of courtesy.

Mr. CONGER. He intends to be so always; and it is generally admitted that he is.

Mr. McMAHON. I think the pattern had better be made over, for I should hate to see either this generation or the succeeding one cut out after it.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman, I understand, declines to answer my question.

Mr. McMAHON. Now, I desire to call attention to what was stated before the committee that visited the Department of Justice. The Attorney-General said that the large costs in part of the office of marshals of the United States consisted in the gross abuse, North as well as South, that every time a prisoner was taken before a court, even in the peaceful States of Michigan, Ohio, and Indiana, he had to be taken charge of by a deputy marshal and a guard who received ten cents mileage. Generally he was carried to the farthest place to be found. Thereby the Government gets poor, and loafers called "necessary guards" are supported at its expense. I will find the express language of the Attorney-General if the gentleman from Michigan wants it. And I will say to the gentleman that the Attorney-General was not referring to Arkansas or any particular State. I have his report to the Forty-fourth Congress at its first session, Executive Document No. 14. I will read the whole paragraph relating to this matter, as it has some bearing on what is to come hereafter before the committee. He said in this report:

There is no uniform system of obtaining jurors to serve in the courts of the United States, and great abuses have sprung up and much favoritism and corruption are complained of. It is easy to provide a uniform mode of selecting jurors for the courts of the United States, and I respectfully suggest that an act be passed to accomplish this result.

The drafts of marshals through this Department upon the judiciary fund are enormous, and they seem to me in many instances unreasonably large.

He did not say Arkansas, he did not say New York, and he did not mean Arkansas or New York. He meant the whole country, for human nature is the same everywhere; and if you have a weak law you will find your marshals breaking through it everywhere.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph:

For expenses of bailiffs, criers, stationery, fuel, lights, furniture, watchmen and janitors, cleaners and sweepers, extra meals for impaneled jurors, transportation of prisoners, moving of records, salaried officers of the Government summoned as witnesses, travel in collecting evidence in United States cases, for holding seizures, for fees of justices of the peace acting as United States commissioners, for stenographers, for post-mortem examinations, for expenses of judges holding extra terms of court outside their districts, of interpreters, fees to township officers in summoning jurors, extra pay to experts as witnesses, for storage, for surveys required as evidence, and for all other necessary miscellaneous expenditures, $280,000; making, in all, the sum of $2,690,000. And no part of the money hereby appropriated is appropriated to pay any salaries, compensation, fees, or expenses under or in virtue of title 26 of the Revised Statutes, or of any provision of said title.

Mr. HISCOCK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "and" in line 36, namely, these words:

No part of the money hereby appropriated is appropriated to pay any salaries, compensation, fees, or expenses under or in virtue of title 26 of the Revised Statutes or of any provision of said title.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

Twenty thousand dollars is appropriated to pay salaries, compensation, fees, and expenses under and in virtue of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to ask the construction given by my friend from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] of this clause. As I read the law upon the elective franchise, whenever there are ten citizens who may make known in writing to the judge of the circuit court their desire to have the registration of voters, or the election, or both, guarded and scrutinized—I do not read the whole section, but give the essential portion of it—the judge shall open the circuit court at the most convenient point on the circuit. The court then shall proceed to appoint and commission, under the hand of the judge, two citizens with certain qualifications, who shall be known as supervisors of election. Now, the direction to appoint there is imperative upon the application of the ten citizens; and that law is not repealed, and no repeal of it is proposed. I turn on further, to page 729 of the Revised Statutes, and I find it provided there, as follows:

There are appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes hereinafter specified, such sums as may be necessary for the same respectively; and such appropriations shall be deemed permanent annual appropriations.

Then there are four, five, or six pages of specifications of those things which shall be considered permanent annual appropriations. Among them, on page 734, are these supervisors of elections.

Now, as the direction to appoint supervisors upon proper application is mandatory, as the law is not repealed, and as among the permanent appropriations provision for supervisors of election is specifically mentioned, I wish to know how far the gentleman claims this proposed law will affect the appointment and payment of supervisors of election. The second section proceeds to say:

That the sums appropriated in this act for the persons and public service embraced in its provisions are in full for such persons and public service.

But there may be a query whether that applies to certain persons who are not specified here at all or only to the bailiffs, criers, janitors, cleaners and sweepers, &c., specifically mentioned in the first section. I wish to know whether the gentleman thinks this law will make it impossible to appoint supervisors and impossible to pay them.

Mr. McMAHON. I state to the gentleman that I understand this to be the situation. A permanent appropriation is an order to the Secretary of the Treasury or the Treasurer of the United States to pay out of any fund not otherwise appropriated in the United States Treasury. Am I not right in that definition? I think I am.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. McMAHON. If the gentleman asks a question he must be ready to answer.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman may easily ask a question about a volume of fifteen hundred pages.

Mr. McMAHON. An annual appropriation is an appropriation payable without further action by Congress out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and under warrants properly drawn under existing law.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is so.

Mr. McMAHON. Now if that be true, we have appropriated $2,700,000 for a specific purpose. The money which we appropriate in this bill cannot be expended for all purposes. I think the proviso is—

And no part of the money hereby appropriated is appropriated to pay any salaries, compensation, fees, or expenses under or in virtue of title 26 of the Revised Statutes, or of any provision of said title.

We would like very well to fix it so that you could not pay them. I do not disguise my opinion on that subject, but I think the gentleman will understand that as this does not repeal the supervisors law, but is only a specific annual appropriation, in contradistinction to the permanent annual appropriation, we only limit this particular fund and prevent its being used for a particular purpose.

Mr. HISCOCK. Your understanding is that this bill does not prevent the appointment of supervisors?

Mr. McMAHON. I do not care what the gentleman thinks my understanding is, I have given what light I can upon the subject.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman just reproached me for not being able to give an opinion on short notice.

Mr. McMAHON. I gave my opinion; the gentleman does not give his.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have given an answer upon all the questions the gentleman asked. I looked at the clause of the statute and found that he was correct. My desire was to get a construction from the gentleman of his own bill, and I thought it but reasonable that the gentleman in offering a bill in a matter so closely contested as this, should give an answer to my question, even if the answer were only yes or no.

Mr. McMAHON. Is it not the obligation of the gentleman to give the grounds of his objection?

Mr. HAWLEY. My objection will be very serious. I do not want to use an offensive term, but it seems to me that there was a necessity to use the vulgar term of "smoking out." I desire to know if the gentleman is trying to do by indirection what he can see plainly he did not do directly?

Mr. McMAHON. The answer to that is, that we tried to do all we could.

Mr. BAKER. We desired to know what you meant to do, and what you thought you had done.

The question was taken on Mr. HISCOCK's amendment; and on a division there were—ayes 71, noes 94.

Mr. WILBER asked for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILBER and Mr. McMAHON were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 100.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the second section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the sums appropriated in this act for the persons and public service embraced in its provisions are in full for such persons and public service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880; and no Department or officer of the Government shall, during said fiscal year, make any contract or incur any liability for the future payment of money until an appropriation sufficient to meet such contract or pay such liability shall have first been made by law.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to strike out that section, for the reason that the provisions of the Revised Statutes on the subject are ample, and which I now read:

Except in the War and Navy Departments, for clothing, subsistence, forage, fuel, quarters, or transportation, which, however, shall not exceed the necessities of the current year.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to say a word. If this bill is to become a law it seems to me very important that the last clause of section 2 shall not remain in the bill. Under the existing law, as it has just been read in the hearing of the committee, the Government and the public are amply protected against the expenditure of any money unless it has been expressly appropriated, and against the making of any contracts for the future expenditure of money until an appropriation shall first have been made.

The only addition that is made by the last clause of this section is in respect to the incurring of any liability on the part of the Government for future payments of money in any department of the public service.

I submit to the gentlemen on the other side, as a plain business proposition, that it is neither wise nor prudent, even for the period of a year, to forbid the Government in all its departments in any possible contingency from incurring a liability. The contingency may frequently and does arise that renders it important that the liability should be incurred.

I recollect, and it is not a very long period of time since, a liability of over $1,000,000 was incurred in the prosecution of an Indian war; and if this provision has the scope and effect my friend claims for it, it would be utterly impossible to have incurred those liabilities that occurred in the country a short time ago.

I submit that when there is a positive inhibition against the use of any money except where it has been expressly appropriated, and when there is an express inhibition against entering into any contract for the future expenditure of any money, the Congress of the United States has gone as far as in prudence it can go.

Now, to say that this Government shall be tied up so that it may even perish by reason of the fact that in no emergency, however supreme, can it incur any liability in the absence of an express appropriation for that purpose, is to say that we here in Congress have the sagacity to foresee for a year in advance all the perils and all the wants that may surround the administration of the public service. I submit that it is unwise. I submit that it is dangerous. I submit that there is nothing in the world to be in the interest of economy, in the interest of a fair administration of the Government, or even in the interest of the view which these gentlemen have, to thus place upon an appropriation bill this novel and unheard-of proposition.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to oppose the amendment. Article 1, section 9, of the Constitution of the United States provides as follows:

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

It is clear that under the Constitution of the United States no money can be drawn from the Treasury except in pursuance of appropriations made by law. But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] desires that the President and the various heads of Departments and all the officers of the Government may be allowed to incur liabilities beyond the appropriations. Now, if they can incur a liability which the Government is bound to pay, then we may as well authorize them to draw money from the Treasury before an appropriation has been made, because there is no difference between incurring a liability for which payment must be made and the taking of money out of the Treasury of the United States. It is only a question of time. The liability will take the money out of the Treasury in the end, and the loss to the Government is the same in either case. The one is as much in violation of the Constitution as the other.

What reason can be offered, what excuse can be given, for passing a law that the President or the head of any Department or any officer may incur a liability beyond the appropriation made by law? A subsequent Congress would be bound, if it were a liability, to appropriate the money to meet such liability. To pass such a law would be the breaking down of all restraint and the granting of an unlimited authority to the Departments of the Government to expend any sum of money they may choose.

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER. I would inquire of the gentleman whether in the history of this Government, from its foundation down to this time, under any administration, there was ever put on the statute-book any such inhibition as this?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will answer the gentleman. I understand that the section in question is the law now, but I think it well to have the language more clearly expressed, as it is in this bill. If gentlemen will turn to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Forty-fourth Congress——

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. SPRINGER. I am going to answer it by better authority with the gentleman than my own statement would be. I answer it by referring to a communication from the President of the United States, dated June 17, 1876, which I find in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Forty-fourth Congress. General Grant sent a communication to this House, which I have before me.

It will be remembered that at that time the House of Representatives was in what was called a dead-lock with the Senate in regard to passing appropriation bills. The end of the fiscal year was approaching, and there had been no appropriation bills passed for the ensuing fiscal year. The President at that time sent a communication to the House, which will be found printed on page 3854 of the RECORD of that session. In that communication the President sets forth all provisions of law prohibiting expenditures of money beyond appropriations, and including the provision of the Constitution which I have quoted. He concludes by saying:

Precluded from expending money not appropriated, the Department would have to suspend service everywhere, as appropriations for it have failed to be made.

He officially informed this House that every Department of the Government would be closed unless by the 1st day of July thereafter the necessary funds should be appropriated to run the Government. It was then the opinion of the President, and he doubtless acted under the advice of his Cabinet, that he was prohibited from incurring any liability beyond the sums appropriated, even though it should be necessary to suspend all public service. It was so regarded then and ought to have been so regarded by the officers of the Government ever since. I shall never vote to authorize any Department of the Government to incur any liability for any purpose whatever until an appropriation to meet that liability shall have first been expressly made by law. That is the only security the people have against the unlimited expenditure of their money.

I call the attention of gentlemen on the other side to the existing law, which will be found in section 3629 of the Revised Statutes:

No department of the Government shall expend in any one fiscal year a sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations.

The only change in that provision of law made by this bill is by inserting the words "or officer," and also the words "or liability." That does not change the spirit of the law, but simply its letter, in order that there may be no mistake hereafter in regard to its proper construction. It is carrying out the spirit of the law as understood by President Grant when he sent his message of June 17, 1876, to the House of Representatives. The law for the ensuing fiscal year, if amended in accordance with the pending provision, will prohibit any department or officer of the Government from incurring any liability whatever against the Government until an appropriation to meet the liability shall first have been made by law. There can be no agents, employés, or officials of any kind appointed to do or perform any public service until a sum sufficient to pay for the service has first been appropriated. And this is right. It is in accordance with the Constitution and is the only security the people have against unauthorized and unlimited expenditures of public funds.

One thing further. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] stated that by refusing appropriations for certain purposes we were nullifying an act of Congress. Sir, I never knew before that a provision of law authorizing the appointment of certain officers creates a liability on the part of Congress to appropriate money indefinitely to carry out that provision. If this were true all appropriations would be permanent, and there would be little use for Congress to meet and make appropriations from year to year. Many of us on this side of the House believe that the existing law for the appointment of supervisors and deputy marshals of elections is unconstitutional and void, and we will not appropriate money to carry it out or to pay officials appointed under its provisions; and we propose to make it unlawful to appoint such officials until appropriations to pay them shall have been made by law. If this be nullification let gentlemen on the other side make the most of it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I renew the amendment to strike out the second section. I wish to call the attention of the committee to a point which has been already made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD;] but it is one not to be overlooked by any means. Section 3732 of the Revised Statutes makes provision for meeting the expenses of the Army and Navy in spite of the failure of specific appropriations. There might be an accidental failure; it might arise from a great variety of causes, implying no hostility to the Army or the Navy. I do not suppose anybody would object to our having an Army or a Navy. But an inadequate appropriation might be made some year. There might be required a great deal more money to maintain the efficiency of the Army than had been appropriated. If when a specific appropriation is not made or proves insufficient, no liability can be incurred by the Government for sustaining the Army and the Navy, how are your soldiers to be fed or clothed or transported? Hence section 3732 has provided that—

No contract or purchase on behalf of the United States shall be made, unless the same is authorized by law or is under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment, except in the War and Navy Departments, for clothing, subsistence, forage, fuel, quarters, or transportation, which, however, shall not exceed the necessities of the current year.

Now, if the provision in this bill means anything, it means to nullify or repeal that section of the Revised Statutes. The gentleman on the other side does not like the word "nullify." I do not wonder at it. I will say, then, that this bill as reported means indirectly a repeal of that provision for the coming year. I doubt whether the gentleman in charge of this bill desires to do that; but such is the effect of the bill. I therefore suggest a modification in that respect by the insertion of the words "except as provided in section 3732 of the Revised Statutes."

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, there is one feature of this section to which I desire to call the attention of the committee having this bill in charge, believing that they will recognize the propriety of the suggestion. Under the provisions of this section, as I hold, and as I think members of this committee will hold, an unexecuted order of Congress cannot be carried into effect by any officer of any Department until some specific appropriation shall be made for that purpose. Now, during the Forty-fifth Congress several orders were made by Congress directing heads of Departments to do specific kinds of work, to discharge specific duties. Under the provisions of this bill it is clear they cannot execute those trusts or obey those orders until an appropriation specific in its character shall have been made providing for the expenditure necessary to be incurred.

I have in my mind now an order passed by the Forty-fifth Congress for the adjudication of a land case in my State. That order directs the Attorney-General to employ counsel in behalf of some Indians interested in the case. Now, I find that in the general provisions of this bill that case is not provided for; consequently, the order of the Forty-fifth Congress directing the Attorney-General——

Mr. McMAHON. Why is it not provided for?

Mr. HASKELL. I do not see any appropriation.

Mr. McMAHON. There is an appropriation for assistant attorneys.

Mr. HASKELL. This is not the employment of an assistant district attorney, but the employment of counsel by the Government to appear in the trial of that case in behalf of the Indians. Whether the counsel thus employed would be considered an assistant attorney under the provisions of the first clause of this bill I cannot say, but I think such would not be the construction.

Mr. McMAHON. I think it would be most unquestionably, because that is the way the estimate has been made to us. The bill uses the exact language of the Attorney-General—"for payment of district attorneys and their assistants."

Mr. HASKELL. I hope that is the correct construction, because the matter is of great importance to my people. The fact that there is uncertainty on this point illustrates the dangerous manner in which this bill is drawn. I think the gentleman in charge of the bill will recollect special orders made by the Forty-fifth Congress to Department officers to go on and do a specific thing and to report subsequently to Congress. I think that is a common form of order to heads of Departments. Now, how can they carry out any such orders of Congress under the provisions of this section?

Mr. ATKINS. I will ask the gentleman whether section 3679 of the Revised Statutes, now in force, is not in the way of the execution of such contracts?

Mr. HASKELL. I do not think so.

Mr. ATKINS. Why not?

Mr. HASKELL. Because I think that as against a special provision of a subsequent act of Congress that general direction of the statute would not prevail.

Mr. ATKINS. This is a general law; and the word "officer" is used in addition to the word "Department," although the word "Department," the major term, includes the minor.

Mr. HASKELL. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will see that a general statute must give way in its limitations to a specific order of Congress subsequently made. That general statute covers all the general disbursements of the Government, and directs the officers of the Departments in general terms concerning the payment of general appropriations for their work. But here is a specific order for which there is no appropriation.

Mr. HAYES. I suggest that gentlemen on the other side hold themselves in a little. Talk is not going to change anybody's vote. We have been talking for three months. It seems to me it is time now to have a little healthy voting.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HAWLEY to strike out the second section, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 73, noes 84.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend by striking out in line 6, section 2, the words "or incur any liability." I do that, Mr. Chairman, because it leaves the statutes on the subject plain and unambiguous. If these words are out, the remainder of the provision is not unlike what is now in the statutes, and I think there would be no ambiguity in the section; but if these words be retained, no man can know precisely what he may or may not do without violating the law.

I do not myself think that, strictly and properly construed, this section suspends a number of sections of the Revised Statutes which some gentlemen may think are temporarily repealed; but with these words here they leave an uncertainty hanging over many sections of the Revised Statutes as to what constitutes incurring liability.

I can conceive such a thing as this: The President may appoint a man and may say to him "You go and do this duty; the law authorizes me to appoint you. You may never receive any pay. You will never receive any unless Congress appropriates it hereafter." Possibly the President does not thereby incur any liability. I presume when election day comes the judges can appoint supervisors and the marshals can appoint assistant marshals in the same way. There is certainly nothing here which prevents them from doing their duty; and if they are told at the time of their appointment that they never can have any pay from the Government unless Congress should thereafter appropriate it, query, whether any liability has been incurred. I rather think not.

Mr. SPRINGER, I should think there had been.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think not. The liability spoken of here is certainly a pecuniary one. But if the gentleman thinks there is liability, it proves the necessity of making the language clear, which certainly will be done by striking out the words which render it doubtful. [Cries on the democratic side of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Not quite yet.

Now, if gentlemen have put these words in here to suit two views of this case, so that they can say to one class of their friends, "We have done it," and to others who do not think they ought to have done it, "We have not done it;" I say if they have had double purpose in view, these words are well chosen. But if you have a plain, frank, manly purpose in view, that everybody can understand, you should leave these words out. I think, therefore, for the honor of the House and for the clearness and definiteness of the statutes, these words ought to come out, and in the interest of good legislation I make the motion to strike them out.

Mr. COX. I understand my friend from Ohio to say that he believes United States supervisors and others will be appointed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I did not say they would be, but perhaps they can be——

Mr. COX. That the President and the judges would appoint them under this clause if passed—that they would be appointed.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will understand I am merely saying if it should be done and they were told they never could have any pay until Congress subsequently appropriated the money—I refer to deputy marshals—I ask whether that would constitute under this section an incurred liability?

Mr. COX. I presume it would.

Mr. GARFIELD. I was putting a case to the judicial mind of the House.

Mr. COX. I will only say one word to the House. I do not like to take up the time of the House on this subject. I do not believe in any letting down on this business at all, for I can see on the other side of the House a disposition to have these supervisors appointed, these officers of election anyhow, and I have not so much faith in the past as to believe when the appointments are made somehow, by hook or crook, they will so get around it as to get money for their officers.

Mr. BAKER. Does this bill prevent their being appointed?

Mr. COX. I say it does. Will it be carried out in good faith if it is passed?

Mr. BAKER. I ask you whether it does prevent their being appointed?

Mr. COX. If we can stop their appointments, which I believe we can, then we ought to stop it in the interest of good morals and good policy. This is not exactly like a rider on a bill; we have the right to direct how money shall be appropriated and how it shall not be appropriated. I am not very partial to bills of this nature. I should prefer "to wipe out," as the phrase is, the whole thing—to repeal the whole business. That would be a much better proceeding for all of us if we could get at it. But this is an extraordinary emergency. Gentlemen are preparing for the election of 1880.

Mr. GARFIELD. That's it.

Mr. COX. Ay, and I would not give them a chance, a single hair to hang on to in any effort to use the power of this Government to the undoing of the people at this election.

Mr. BAKER. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BARBER. I desire also to ask a question. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I want to know in case the yellow fever should break out at Memphis or elsewhere, and rage in Mississippi this season, whether this bill would interfere with proper action on the part of the Government?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will be seated. He is not in order.

The question being taken on Mr. GARFIELD'S amendment, it was not agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to offer as a further amendment to the section these words:

Except in the War and Navy Departments for clothing, subsistence, forage, fuel, quarters, or transportation, which, however, shall not exceed the necessities of the current year.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will please submit his amendment in writing.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have read from the Revised Statutes the provision as it stands to-day. I suppose my friends on the other side are not afraid, in view of the Army bill which is before the House, that the Army will be used either in the State of California or in New York in the Westchester district in the coming fall, so that they will insist on this restriction on the Army and Navy Departments to make the necessary contracts for the purposes which I have read.

Mr. ATKINS. We would have no objection to ingrafting the amendment on the bill so far as that is concerned; but when we take a text to read we do not read the whole Bible. We do not want to re-enact all the laws in this bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I want nothing of the kind. This amendment simply saves to the Navy and Army Departments the same power they have now; and the only possible reason there can be for limiting them in that power is the fear gentlemen may have of the Army and Navy being used in the State of California or in the Westchester district of New York.

Mr. McMAHON. I demand a vote.

The question being taken on Mr. HISCOCK'S amendment, there were—ayes 59, noes 81.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HASKELL. I offer the following amendment:

In line 7 of the section, after the word "money," insert the words "unless so directed by act of Congress;" so that it will read:

And no Department or officer of the Government shall during said fiscal year make any contract or incur any liability for the future payment of money, unless so directed by act of Congress, until an appropriation sufficient to meet such contract or pay such liability shall have first been made by law.

The object of the amendment is to provide that where a specific order has been given by Congress to do a thing the Department or officers of the Government may go on and execute the order.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is just what we do not want to do.

Mr. SIMONTON. I make the point of order that a motion having been made to strike out the section, and that motion having been voted down, the voting down of the motion to strike out is equivalent to an adoption of the section, and it is not open to any further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot sustain the point of order. It is competent for the committee to amend the section as it chooses.

The question being taken on Mr. HASKELL'S amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That the per diem pay of each juror, grand or petit, in any court of the United States shall be $2; and that the last clause of section 800 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which refers to the State of Pennsylvania, and sections 801, 820, and 821 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, are hereby repealed; and that all such jurors, grand and petit, including those summoned during the session of the court, shall be publicly drawn from a box containing, at the time of each drawing, the names of not less than three hundred persons, possessing the qualifications prescribed in section 800 of the Revised Statutes, which names shall have been placed therein by the clerk of such court and a commissioner, to be appointed by the judge thereof, which commissioner shall be a citizen residing in the district in which such court is held, of good standing and a well-known member of the principal political party opposing that to which the clerk may belong, the clerk and said commissioner each to place one name in said box alternately until the whole number required shall be placed therein. But nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any judge in a district in which such is now the practice from ordering the names of jurors to be drawn from the boxes used by the State authorities in selecting jurors in the highest courts of the State; and no person shall serve as a petit juror more than one term in any one year, and all juries to serve in courts after the passage of this act shall be drawn in conformity herewith: Provided, That no citizen possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Mr. WEAVER. I offer the following amendment:

In lines 17 and 18, strike out the words "the principal" and insert "a;" so that it will read:

Which commissioner shall be a citizen residing in the district in which such court is held, of good standing and a well-known member of a political party, &c.

If this bill is to pass, it ought to pass in a proper shape. I therefore offer this amendment.

The question being put on agreeing to Mr. WEAVER'S amendment, there were—ayes 81, noes 85.

Mr. WEAVER. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WEAVER and Mr. MCMAHON were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 89, noes 96.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER. I give notice that in the House I will ask for a vote on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not that right, the amendment not having been agreed to in committee.

Mr. HERBERT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the proviso to section 3, beginning on line 29 and ending with line 33, insert the following:

Provided, That in selecting names to be placed in the jury-box the clerk and commissioner shall in no wise have regard to political affiliations, but shall look solely to the qualifications prescribed by law. Citizens possessing all other qualifications, which are or may be prescribed by law, shall be competent to serve as grand or petit jurors without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude; but no officer or employé of the United States, or of any State, shall be competent to serve as such juror: Provided further, That this act shall in no way impair the force and effect of section 4 of the act of March 1, 1875, entitled "An act to protect all citizens in their civil rights."

Mr. McMAHON. I have no objection, I believe, to that amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order on the amendment that it is new legislation and not in the direction of economy. I make the same point of order on the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has lost the right to make the point of order on the section, other amendments having been received.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I make it on the amendment.

Mr. HERBERT. What is the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is that this is new legislation, which does not come under Rule 120. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HERBERT. I do not desire to be heard on the point of order. I submit it to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I offer the following amendment:

In line 16, after the word "citizen," insert the words "of good standing;" and strike out all after the word "held," in line 17, down to and including the word "belong," in line 19; so that it will read:

Which commissioner shall be a citizen of good standing residing in the district in which such court is held.

This will strike out the words:

And a well-known member of the principal political party opposed to that to which the clerk may belong.

I offer this amendment because I am unwilling, if I can prevent it, to allow a statute to pass this House which for the first time in the history of this Government injects party politics into our jury laws. The words "political parties" are unknown in our Constitution. There is not a word in the Constitution that indicates such a creation as a political party.

Political parties are probably necessary in all free governments; but there has been one place in the whole circle of our judicial system into which hitherto the word party has never found its place as a part of the law. Our goddess of justice, so far as persons are concerned, is painted blind; but so far as the objects and essence of jhstice are concerned, she sees the whole world.

Now it is proposed most unwisely, and I think for the first time in our history, and I beg the lawyers and judges who sit before me to think of this, to put into the jury-boxes a man recognized as a political partisan, and then another beside him recognized as belonging to another political party, to administer justice. One is to do democratic justice, another republican justice, another greenback justice, and so on to the end of the chapter.

If that phrase be planted in our law no man can tell the bitter, bad fruits that it will produce in the future of our jurisprudence.

Let us, gentlemen, have one place where, as lawyers and citizens seeking their rights, there shall be no such thing as politics recognized, but that equal and exact justice will be meted out to all men.

Now, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] proposed a little while ago what was entirely proper, that it should not be confined to two political parties. There may be two, three, four, or five parties—there are perhaps that many in the country—and if you let the idea of party politics get into the law of juries at all, you ought to go through the whole list of parties to be just or fair.

Let me ask particularly how many clerks of the courts there are whose politics you can really ascertain without an inquest? There are a great many of these clerks who have held their positions during the lives of half a dozen political parties, and who have no political partisanship in them, and who make it a part of their daily bread to keep out of politics. This especially is the case with the clerks of the national courts. Some of these clerks were in office before the republican party was born and do not know to which party they belong. Now, in order to execute this proposed law you must find out what their political opinions are; you must, in fact, make them partisan before you can appoint a commissioner or impanel a jury.

Now, I beg gentlemen to let this amendment of mine pass in the interest of law and justice. I hope that the fact that we have been looking into each other's faces and fighting a political battle has not put the majority into such an attitude that they will reject anything proposed by me or my associates. I should be glad for the sake of the cause of justice if we should vote at once and agree to this amendment.

Mr. McMAHON. I have no objection to the first amendment in line 16, that the commissioner shall be a citizen of good standing residing in the district, but I warn the gentleman that it will cut out his party in about half of the States of the Union.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope my colleague enjoys that remark.

Mr. McMAHON. As to the other amendment I do object to it because there is no use denying historic facts, to stand on stilts before the assembled wisdom of the American people and talk about no party in the jury-box, and the purity of our courts. We know that juries are packed; that they are packed in the interests of the dominant party. Now, if they are to be packed at all, I prefer that they be packed half and half. The gentleman who has just taken his seat, after a plea for no politics in the jury-box, objected to the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, offered but a moment ago, which provided that these commissioners to select a jury should have no reference to political affiliations in their choice, but should select honest men of good reputation. That met my approval; but the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, who is so nervous about politics in the courts, had it ruled out on a point of order made by himself. I do not comprehend such inconsistency. The other part of the gentleman's amendment only excluded Federal and State office-holders from sitting on juries; and this does not seem to have suited my colleague, who is so anxious for good juries that he prefers Federal office-holders as jurymen in Government prosecutions!

Now I do not care whether in the ordinary practice of the law there are nine republicans or twelve, or any number of republicans on a jury. In my own practice, in the portion of the country where I reside, and where I am known and regarded as a pretty strong democrat, I have won as many cases before juries a majority of whom were republicans as I have where the majority have been democrats. Politics rarely enters into the jury-box in our State courts. But the case is different in political trials in the Federal courts. Who institutes those political trials? Your district attorney, who is nothing in the world but a part of the party machinery of the party in power. Who are your United States commissioners? As a general rule they constitute a portion of the political machinery of the party in power. Who are your United States marshals? They are the fellows who pack conventions and then try to carry elections. We know that in the Southern States, and in many of the Northern States, the commissioners, district attorneys, and marshals constitute a formidable portion of the republican party, and under the present system juries are packed and organized to convict.

Now, when my colleague talks about there being no politics recognized in any law about courts or juries, does he remember the electoral-commission bill which we passed here by a very large vote, and which proposed that the commission should be of members of opposite political parties? My friend was upon that electoral commission, and I am very sure that he does not speak from any inner consciousness when he says that it is impossible for men selected as democrats or as republicans to return a just verdict.

We have the actual experience, and we know the fact, that juries are packed, and in the South in many places they are composed of officers of the United States Government. The juries are not packed because they are republicans, but because selected under the system for the purpose of conviction. We appeal here for something like a fair system. We take the clerk and a citizen of good standing, and then require them to select as jurors a large number of the citizens of the district, and to draw the jurors by ballot. When we have done that, I think we have provided something in favor of fair play and decency.

Mr. GARFIELD. Allow me a moment.

Mr. McMAHON. Certainly.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman has referred to the electoral commission. He will remember that there was not in that law a word which referred to one political party or the other. It was the sense of decency and fair play between the two parties which, after the law was passed, led them voluntarily to put men from both parties upon that commission. The republican Senate put upon it a fair share of democrats and the democratic House put upon it a proper share of republicans. But the law said not a word about selecting men from opposite political parties to serve upon the commission. The law was just as this law ought to be—free from the recognition of party politics.

Mr. McMAHON. Well, if I thought this law would operate as the electoral law did I certainly would not advocate it. [Laughter.] It is because I think it will operate better that I am in favor of it. But it was the express understanding, in advance, that each party was to have a certain representation; and the only chance was in the odd man.

Mr. GARFIELD. I voted against the electoral-commission law.

Mr. McMAHON. I know the gentleman did; and if he had kept on afterward voting in the right way it would have been a good deal better. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARFIELD. You cannot joke away the injustice of this bill.

Mr. McMAHON. I do not want to joke. I say in all seriousness to my friend that no greater joke has been perpetrated in this House than when he got up here and appealed for fair juries under the present system. That is the grandest joke of the century.

Mr. HERBERT. I move to strike out the last word. The objection made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to the bill as it now stands seems to me to be a captious one. That it is captious is proven conclusively by the point of order which he made upon the amendment which I submitted a few moments ago. One purpose of my amendment was to meet the very objection now made by the gentleman to this bill, and which we foresaw would be made, although we believe the bill is not fairly subject to it. This bill simply provides for the appointment of two commissioners, one to be of one party and another of the other party. That is the sense of fair play and decency, for which the gentleman spoke awhile ago. He says that a sense of fair play and decency ought to exist in the administration of the law. If it did, there would be no necessity for the enactment of this bill into a law; but it does not.

Mr. CALKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERBERT. I have not time to be interrupted.

Mr. CALKINS. Just for a question.

Mr. HERBERT. No; not even for a question. I have only five minutes. To show that under the present administration of the law a sense of fair play and decency does not exist, I would call attention to a dispatch and an answer to it which I have here, and that answer will furnish conclusive proof of the correctness of my statement. A United States court is now in session in the city of Montgomery, Alabama, my home. I recently telegraphed as follows:

Major F. C. RANDOLPH,
Montgomery, Alabama:.

How many democrats on the jury that tried Renfro? Answer.

The next morning I received the following answer:

No democrat on the Renfro jury, and none on the entire panel, most of whom are United States officers and employés.

F. C. RANDOLPH.

Here is a jury organized to try democrats, and not a democrat on it; a jury organized for political trials, and every man upon the jury a political enemy of the men to be tried. More, sir, and worse than that—a majority of the panel, the dispatch says, employés and officers of the United States, active partisans as officers generally are. This jury, sir, is a miniature court of star chamber. In the court of star chamber sat the lord high treasurer, the lord chamberlain, the lord of the privy seal, officers of the King's household, with others to try those charged with political offenses against the Crown. History tells us what was the invariable result—the King convicted whom he pleased. And common sense tells us that when republican officials pack a jury in this way, the republican party will convict whom it pleases. I appeal to every gentleman on this floor, I appeal to the country to know, how could such a jury have been fairly obtained? Is there here any of that sense of fair play and decency the gentleman from Ohio talks about?

We must stop this packing of juries; and is there any better way than that provided in the bill? The bill simply provides that a commissioner shall act with the clerk, which commissioner shall be appointed by the judge, shall be a citizen of good standing, and a well-known member of the principal political party opposing that to which the clerk belongs. Can it be that in any district in the United States the judge of the court would be unable to find a single man who is honest, belonging to the party opposite to that to which the clerk belongs?

If this appointment is to be in the hands of the United States judge, and he is in unison with the Government, what harm can come by providing by law that the person so appointed by him shall belong to the opposite political party to be a check upon the officer who would summon such juries as that now sitting in the United States court at Montgomery, Alabama?

There is no answer to this—no possible answer, unless you undertake to say that it is impossible in some districts for the judge to find an honest man belonging to a party different from that to which the clerk of the court belongs. I apprehend no gentleman on this floor will undertake to make such a statement as that. A law similar to this proposed provision has existed in Pennsylvania since 1867, as I have been informed by a distinguished lawyer, who is a member of this House from that State. While its provisions are not exactly identical with those under consideration, the result is the same: two commissioners of opposing parties are, as the result of an election, chosen to select juries. This law has been in operation in Pennsylvania for twelve years, and has been found to work well.

Mr. CALKINS. I rise to oppose the amendment. I desire to ask every lawyer in this House how you can make the eligibility of a man to an office depend upon his politics; and that is the purpose and scope of this bill. Unless a man is opposed in politics to the clerk of the court, he is disqualified to serve in the capacity of commissioner. I say it is unheard of in the annals of all legislation to make the eligibility of any officer depend upon his politics.

Mr. CLYMER. How about the supervisors?

Mr. CALKINS. The supervisors of election ought in justice be appointed from each political party. Yet there has never been a law passed perhaps that has not been abused. I desire to remind gentlemen on the other side that I can recollect when in my own State of Indiana their party packed a grand jury to indict men for concealing fugitive slaves.

Mr. SPARKS. Does the gentleman want similar abuses repeated?

Mr. CALKINS. The trouble is not in the law, but because men abuse the law.

Mr. FINLEY. The complaint made now is that the law is abused.

Mr. CALKINS. And you cannot remedy that abuse by putting into the statute a worse abuse—a more vicious system of legislation.

I appeal in fairness to all gentlemen to say whether at this day we should undertake to inject into the judicial system of the country partisan politics. If abuses have crept into our judicial administration, it is to be hoped that in this era of peace and reconciliation, when we are all drawn so near together, when we are "shaking hands over the bloody chasm," and all that kind of thing, when you see here confederate brigadiers and Union soldiers joining in the work of legislation—the "era of good feeling" will very soon enter the jury-box at the South. I will say in all fairness that I am in favor of any bill you may prepare for the purpose of weeding out any pernicious system that has grown up; but I will not vote for any measure that puts partisanship into the jury-box, which ought to be kept free from it.

Mr. CLYMER. Mr. Chairman, I think that the opposition to this proposed legislation is more sentimental than real. It is well known that as the law now stands, persons of but one political party in certain sections of the country ever get into the jury-box. I find in the legislation of my own State a precedent to guide me in this matter. Formerly it was a source of serious complaint that juries in the several counties of our Commonwealth were chosen according to the politics of the sheriff and commissioners of the county. In a largely democratic county like the one which I have the honor to represent, a republican scarcely ever appeared upon a jury, while in the adjoining county of Lancaster, where the republicans were in the ascendency, a democrat scarcely ever entered the jury-box. Here was an abuse which worked evil, which created dissatisfaction in the minds of the people just as the present jury system in the South does in the minds of the people there. In 1867, I think, the Legislature passed a law providing that two jury commissioners should be elected for the purpose of placing in the box the names of persons to be drawn as jurors. Two commissioners were to be elected, but each elector could vote for only one commissioner. Hence resulted the election of two commissioners representing the two political parties. This was the purpose of that legislation. The effects have been most beneficial all over our Commonwealth, and I do not think a single individual there to-day would have the system changed. It places in the jury-box of every county men of each party, a system conducive to the ends of justice, creating in the minds of the people confidence that the administration of justice is free from political prejudice or bias. In this legislation of my own State I find, as I have said, a precedent for my guidance upon the provision now pending in this House. As the objection to this section of the bill seems to be rather sentimental than real I hope the provision will be adopted as it stands.

Several members addressed the Chair. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MCMAHON. I make the point of order that debate is exhausted, and I object to the withdrawal of any pending amendment. Let us have a vote.

The question being taken on the pro forma amendment of Mr. HERBERT to strike out the last word, it was not agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. I move to strike out the last two words. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I do not desire, Mr. Chairman, to take up the time of the committee if gentlemen desire to vote on this extraordinary measure. I believe until near the close of the Forty-fifth Congress no such astounding proposition as is contained in this bill was ever made in the Congress of the United States, or so far as I can learn in any legislative body in any of the States of the United States. I believe, sir, that so infamous a proposition has never crept into any law of any State of this Union, and I beg gentlemen on the other side of the House, especially from the Southern States, to rise and say whether in any one of their States they have ever advocated the policy of legislating in this manner politics into the jury-box, or whether in any of their States now such a proposition in principle has ever been carried out or enacted into law? I hear no man respond to that inquiry. Then I may truthfully say, for one hundred years, for a whole century, we have gone along with no such proposition as this in any law of a State or in the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the object of this law in relation to jurors? The object is perfectly obvious. There have been violations of the United States laws in the South, the stealing of the timber belonging to the Government, the violation of the revenue laws throughout certain districts of the South, and when gentlemen found, after attempting legislation, that they could not get these matters determined in the State courts where they had juries, all of whom are democrats, then they say we will legislate into the jury-box in the United States courts enough partisan democrats to prevent the Government from ever convicting any person charged with such crimes or recovering a verdict for anything in any case. And there is the foundation for the whole of it. When this proposition was first made in the last Congress its real purpose was no secret. My colleague from Ohio [Mr. MCMAHON] says there is something to be learned from looking to the electoral commission. I think there is where we are to learn a very bad lesson. We found that gentlemen of the electoral commission voted according to their politics.

Nay, we have, Mr. Chairman, this extraordinary instance in relation to that commission: A gentleman who was appointed by the Forty-fourth Congress on a committee to investigate the elections in the State of South Carolina, to take testimony and report who carried that State in 1876, and whether the electors in favor of Tilden or Hayes carried that State, (I refer to Judge Abbott, of Massachusetts,) went there and after the testimony was taken, and he had it all before him, came back to the Forty-fourth Congress with other democratic members of the committee, reported that the Hayes electors had carried the State of South Carolina, and then he was put on the electoral commission; and when he had no testimony before him he voted in effect that the Tilden electors had carried the State of South Carolina and that the Hayes electors had not.

Now, do you want to carry that out as a precedent? You want to carry politics into the jury-box. In Ohio we have no such law and there is no complaint. We do not legislate men into the jury-box with a view of their voting for their own party in rendering verdicts. We have not had any trouble there and gentlemen from the South do not complain in their own States where the jurors are now all democrats.

My objections are numerous. I have stated them in a former speech I made on this floor, and I wish it distinctly understood I put my objection on the ground that men must not be told they are put in the jury-box expressly to stand by their party friends, for that is the effect of the proposition in this bill. We have had one hundred years' experience under our present law and it has worked well. It is because we have fallen on strange times in the history of our country and because we have peculiar ends to accomplish that this proposition is now brought forward.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, the proposition suggested by the gentleman from Ohio is not to be found in the bill reported from the committee. So far from containing a proposition by means of legislation to put a partisan jury on either side into the jury-box it is designed and intended by the very terms and language of the bill to avoid the very thing which the gentleman says is upon it. In other words, I have always thought there ought to have been a restraint upon the power of the Federal judges appointed by the Government to indicate either by their own action in court or by that of the clerk where the jury should be called from. The proposition of this bill is merely that two commissioners, one of whom is the clerk of the court and the other a commissioner holding opposite political views from him, whatever his may chance to be, shall be commissioners to draw the jury to pass upon questions to come up in litigation, whether civil or criminal, before that court. So far from being a proposition on the part of the committee which reported this bill to put into the jury-box a partisan jury, it has for its very object and purpose to free the jury-box from all partisan connection whatever.

And in answer to my friend from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] who deprecates so much that there should be by any legislation indicated a partisan action in constituting the jury, it has been well said to him by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] to all those on the opposite side of the Chamber who favored originally and are now in favor of retaining that most odious law upon the statute-book, which clothes the supervisors of the Government of the United States with a power to oversee elections of the States, that it is predicated upon the very idea that there is to be a request by the partisans of one party for the appointment of so many supervisors and by the partisans of the other for so many more. So that those who favored originally that law or favor its retention on the statute-book now, either to oversee a congressional or State election, must forget the fact that that very law itself was predicated upon the idea they are to be selected at the instance of the two parties, and of course that they are to be indicated to the clerk of the court as holding certain political views.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Mississippi one question.

Mr. HOOKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CALKINS. Does not the gentleman from Mississippi recognize the distinction between officers acting purely as political officers or as political agents, and officers acting where the eye of justice ought to be closed to all politics? Is there not a distinction between those two classes?

Mr. HOOKER. I think not. They are acting as quasi-judicial officers in making these appointments of supervisors and they make them at the indication and request of the respective parties. They are indicated in the request. Where ten men make the request to the clerk of the circuit court that such and such persons shall be appointed, he appoints them, and they are to be appointed first from one political party and then from another. So that the objection comes with an ill grace from those of all men holding the view that the original supervisor's law was a proper one and ought to be retained on the statute-book, and I am astonished it should come especially from my liberal-hearted friend from Indiana, [Mr. CALKINS,] who is generally found on the side of right, whether his party happens to stand on that platform or not. The argument, therefore, in opposition to the bill reported by the committee is not sustained by anything that has been said by the gentleman from Indiana or the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BAYNE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted. Does the gentleman from Ohio withdraw it?

Mr. KEIFER. I do.

Mr. MCMAHON. I object to the withdrawal of the amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point of order that I have a right to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. Not after it has been debated. It is then in the power of any gentleman in the House to object to its withdrawal.

The question being taken on Mr. KEIFER'S amendment, it was not agreed to.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out the last three words.

The only legislation I know of in the whole United States that goes in the direction of the proposition in this section has been referred to by gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber as certain laws enacted for certain counties in the State of Pennsylvania. Those laws apply, I believe, to a number of counties in the State. There are such laws, but they do not apply to all counties in the State.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. To all of them except Philadelphia.

Mr. BAYNE. I think not, but I may be mistaken as to that. I do not care, however, whether it is a mistake or not, so far as my argument is concerned. The principle I want to get at is this: the law of Pennsylvania has safeguards placed in it which do not exist in the provisions of this section at all. According to the Pennsylvania law the judges of the court of common pleas and their associates supervise the placing of the names in the box; and in the county of Allegheny, where jury commissioners were elected, I have known myself the judges under some former administrations of the office—I do not know how it is under the present—to take the entire supervision of that matter by reason of the abuse of this system by the jury commissioners.

Mr. WISE. The commissioners fail to agree; then the judge comes in.

Mr. BAYNE. No, sir; there is no necessity for an agreement on the part of the commissioners. The commissioners place on the wheels the names that are selected, and according to the method there the various sub-districts of the county of Allegheny were divided between the commissioners, in pursuance no doubt of an understanding. One commissioner would take the city of Pittsburgh, for instance; the other the city of Allegheny. Then the boroughs were divided, the townships were divided, and the consequence was the commissioner representing the democratic faith would select all democrats from his portions of the county, and the republicans would select all republicans from his portions; and it cannot be disputed that that law has opened up abuses in the administration of justice in Allegheny County to which it had never been subjected in the whole history of the administration of justice in that county before. It subjected the choosing of jurors to such abuses that the judges of the courts finally took the matter into their hands for the very purpose of preventing these abuses.

Now, this section contains no such provision as that which enables the judges to supervise and do the work in Pennsylvania. This section does not give the judges of the circuit courts or the district courts of the United States the power to supervise the selection of jurors, and consequently there will be nothing in the world to check this abuse of power, which will just as naturally creep into the adoption of this system by the United States courts as it crept into the county courts of Pennsylvania when the system was adopted there. I protest against this as a bad piece of legislation, shown to be bad by the only experience we have ever had of it in this country; and I protest against it, too, because it introduces political predilections as factors in the adjudication of cases. It will be next to impossible to convict persons guilty of crimes.

Under the laws of the United States in many States of the Union, if this bill shall become a law, the revenue laws, the laws relating to national elections, and the laws for the protection of the property of the United States must be administered by friendly agencies if they are to be enforced at all.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. I rise to oppose the amendment. I do so for the purpose of correcting my friend from Indiana. I understood him to say that Judge Abbott voted in favor of the democratic electors in South Carolina.

Mr. KEIFER. It was I who made that statement.

Mr. COX. It is not exactly a correct statement. Here is the RECORD:

Commissioner Frelinghuysen offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Theodore R. Parker and others named in certificate No. 2 were not the lawful electors," &c.

Those were the democratic electors. The vote was—yeas 15, nays none.

Those who voted in the affirmative were, Abbott, BAYARD, &c.

Mr. KEIFER. You have got the wrong book, that is all.

Mr. COX. The gentleman did not tell all the truth; I am going to tell the whole truth. Then there was another vote on the republican electors, perhaps the gentleman referred to that; and on that division of 7 to 8 Judge Abbott voted that the republican electors were not elected.

Mr. KEIFER. That is what I stated.

Mr. COX. The RECORD shows why he voted the other way on the republican electors. It was because Judge Field offered a resolution that the evidence should be admitted, that there was military interference at the polls, and that certain officers acting under orders from the Department of Justice, by their action at the polls, intimidated the qualified voters of the State and deprived them of the right of suffrage.

There was a vote upon that of 7 to 8, because that evidence was not submitted; because of this military interference at the polls; because of these outrages by the deputy marshals, which was in evidence but was not given in. Judge Abbott voted that the republican electors were not elected, but he did not vote for the Tilden electors.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not understand that the gentleman denies the statement I made, that after Judge Abbott went to the State and took all the testimony relating to the whole subject of the supervisors and everything relating to the election, he came back here and reported that the Hayes electors had been elected in the State of South Carolina.

Mr. COX. Did not the gentleman say that Judge Abbott voted for the Tilden electors? He stated that.

Mr. SPARKS. I think the gentleman stated that Judge Abbott voted that the Tilden electors were elected.

Mr. COX. Now you see the utter unfairness and unreliability of the statement.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman does not deny my statement, that he so reported after all the testimony was taken and it was before him.

Mr. COX. I do not propose to quibble about the matter.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not quibble about it; it is the fact.

Mr. COX. I charge on the gentleman that he stated that Judge Abbott voted for the Tilden electors, after having been in the State as a commissioner of this House and had found that the State had not gone for Tilden. Everybody knows that that was what he said. The RECORD will show it to-morrow.

Mr. KEIFER. Let me repeat what I said.

Mr. COX. The RECORD will show it to-morrow. Why not take it back like a man.

Mr. KEIFER. I have nothing to take back; the gentleman cannot get me to take back what is true.

The pending amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I move to add to section 3 the following:

Provided, That in the event the clerk of said court shall not belong to any political party, then the jurors shall be selected as provided by law prior to the passage of this act.

I desire to say a word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that several pro forma amendments have been offered, and after the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has been voted upon, the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will be in order.

Mr. McMAHON. We upon this side of the House agree that the words "of good standing," in line 16, should be inserted after the word "citizen," in that line. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GARFIELD. I believe there is no objection to inserting those words.

Mr. SAPP. Let it be read as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Which commissioner shall be a citizen of good standing residing in the district in which the said court is held, &c.

Mr. McMAHON. There is a little misunderstanding here. I observe the criticism of my colleague from Ohio. He thinks the words "of good standing," in the seventeenth line, might qualify only members of the principal political party. That is, he must be a member of good standing. I do not think there will be any trouble about it, as we can insert in the sixteenth line, after "a citizen of good standing," "and a well-known member of the principal political party."

The question was taken upon the first branch of Mr. GARFIELD'S amendment, and it was agreed to.

The Clerk read the second branch of the amendment, as follows:

Strike out all between the word "held," in line 17, down to and including the word "the," in line 19.

It proposes to strike out the following words:

Of good standing and a well-known member of the principal political party opposing that to which the clerk may belong.

Mr. SPARKS. Now what is proposed to be stricken out?

The Clerk again read the words proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment for the purpose of yielding my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to make an important correction as to the position of Judge Abbott.

Mr. COX. I do not desire to reopen this question, but will merely say that the report made on the South Carolina election, signed by Judge Abbott, Mr. Sayler, Mr. Eden, and others was not what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] has represented it to be; they reported simply that there was no election because of violence and fraud. I ask that the part which I have marked, and which I send to the Clerk's desk, may be inserted in the RECORD, so that the gentleman may read it to-morrow morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. KEIFER. Is it proposed to put in the whole report?

Mr. COX. Only a portion of it.

Mr. KEIFER. Then I object.

Mr. COX. I propose to put in that part where the report speaks of the facts of the returns.

Mr. KEIFER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late to object.

Mr. KEIFER. I was objecting all the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair called for objections, and none was heard.

Mr. KEIFER. I was objecting all the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman assure the Chair that he made the objection in time?

Mr. KEIFER. I was rising to make objection, when——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman state that prior to the announcement by the Chair that no objection was heard, he rose from his seat to offer an objection?

Mr. KEIFER. So far as that is concerned, I never heard that announcement by the Chair until now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman, then, does not claim that he objected before the announcement was made.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman says he rose to inquire what was to be included, and objected.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not the fault of the Chair that he did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. KEIFER. Nor is it my fault that the committee was in such disorder that the Chair did not hear me.

Mr. MILLS. That objection can be met by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] reading the portion he desires to have printed in the RECORD.

Mr. KEIFER. My objection is that the gentleman proposes to insert a portion of the report which does not meet the point which I made.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman objects to having it printed in the RECORD without being read, can I not read it in my five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can do so if he desires; but the Chair has already ruled that the objection of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] comes too late.

Mr. COX. Then it is not necessary to read it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York can have it read in his five minutes.

Mr. COX. Let it be read, then.

The Clerk read as follows:

It was proven that a large number of United States soldiers were stationed in many different places in South Carolina for some weeks previous to the election and remained until after it. The pretense of thus stationing troops in the State and keeping them there until after the election was to preserve the peace and prevent violence growing out of the political issues to be passed upon by the people at the election. The fact of troops being sent to the State was used to overawe the colored people and prevent them from voting the democratic ticket. They were told the troops had been sent there to compel the blacks to vote the republican ticket and to shoot all those who voted for the democrats. Their presence undoubtedly had its influence and effect on the election. One of two propositions is true beyond question: either the troops were sent to South Carolina without any legal and justifiable cause, for political purposes and to overawe a portion of the voters, or there was a state of violence and turbulence amounting to insurrection against the State, and which the State authorities could not deal with and restrain. If either proposition is taken as the true one, no election was held in that State, certainly for members of Congress and presidential electors, who are to participate in making laws for or choosing a Chief Magistrate for the rest of the country should be recognized as valid. If the troops were sent there without legal cause for political purposes, to control the election, to overawe the voters, clearly an election held under such circumstances should not stand for a moment. To uphold it would be at war with all sense of right and would shock every fair mind. An election to be valid must be free. No awe of military power at an election to interfere with or in any way to control or influence it should be tolerated for a moment. On the contrary, if there was such a state of turbulence and violence, amounting to insurrection against the State government, which the authorities could not put down and restrain except by calling in the aid of United States troops, your committee think it clear that an election held under such circumstances cannot be taken to be valid. In no sense is it a free election where an insurrection exists against the State government that can only be kept down by national troops. The people are not in a condition to take part in legislating for the whole country or in electing its Chief Magistrate. An election under such circumstances would be worse than a fraud: it would bring our institutions into disgrace and contempt.

Mr. COX. I hope that now the gentleman, who has always been frank, will take back both his charges.

Mr. KEIFER. I cannot take back either of them in the face of the record.

Mr. COX. Well, I cannot force the gentleman to do it. But that a member of Congress, a man of high integrity, a friend of many years, whom we all know to be a man of pure character, should be attacked here and charged with reporting one way and voting another, I think is not right. And when I have had a portion of the RECORD read, and now ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] to take back his statement that Mr. Abbott voted in favor of the election returns of South Carolina, he says he will not do it. He says this, too, when I have had read a portion of the report which says that there was no election whatever there by reason of force and fraud. If the gentleman will not take it back now, then he will get through perhaps the smallest hole for a large statesman that I ever heard of. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw my formal amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the second branch of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

The amendment was to strike out of section 3 the following words:

Of good standing and a well-known member of the principal political party opposing that to which the clerk may belong.

The amendment was not agreed to; upon a division—ayes 68, noes 92.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I move to amend by adding to the section the following:

Provided, That in the event the clerk of said court does not belong to any political party, then the jurors shall be selected as provided by law prior to the passage of this act.

I offer this amendment in good faith and desire to submit only a remark or two. I think that if the safeguards now cast about the selection of juries are not sufficient, it is owing to a condition of society that cannot be overcome by legislative enactment. You may place ever so many laws upon the statute-book, yet if it be not in the hearts of a majority of the people to enforce them they become dead letters.

The gentleman from Ohio having charge of this bill [Mr. MCMAHON] surprised me when he stated that it was a common thing for juries to be packed in the national courts or elsewhere. I do not understand that to be a common thing; and if it be so, the judge of the court is there for the purpose of punishing as for contempt everybody guilty of an offense of that kind. If it be perchance that the judge will not perform his duty, then under the Constitution we are here to impeach him and place him upon trial for such failure.

I apprehend that the adoption of the provision embraced in this bill will introduce into our jury system an element of disorder and confusion; but if Congress should be unwise enough to enact the provision into a law, I hope that in any event we may have juries. I apprehend it is a fact that a majority of clerks of the courts do not belong to any political party; and if this should prove to be the fact, you will under this bill be without juries. This is all I desire to say. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise to oppose the amendment?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir; I oppose the amendment. I desire to obtain some information in reference to this matter which cannot be gathered from the bill itself, and which doubtless some gentleman on the other side can furnish. The bill provides that at the time of each drawing the names of not less than three hundred persons possessing the qualifications prescribed in section 800 of the Revised Statutes shall be placed in the box. It further provides that no person shall serve as a petit juror more than one term in any one year. Now I observe that the State of Georgia is divided into two judicial districts, and the State of Mississippi also into two.

I observe further, accepting the Congressional Directory as my authority, that half of the counties in the State of Georgia have but 58 votes in opposition to the dominant party, and further, that one-third of the counties in the State of Mississippi have but 33 votes against the dominant party. In view of this condition of things, I desire to know how the provisions in this bill, if it be passed, can be carried out. These votes in half the counties of the State of Georgia and a third of the counties in the State of Mississippi are not assigned to any party; they are indicated as "scattering" votes.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BINGHAM]——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia propose an amendment?

Mr. STEPHENS. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania spoke in opposition to the amendment, and exhausted his time.

Mr. STEPHENS. He spoke on the same side as the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, in reply to the direct inquiry of the Chair, stated that he opposed the amendment.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I will withdraw my amendment if the gentleman from Georgia will renew it.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will renew it for the purpose of replying to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. That gentleman alluded specially to the district of Georgia which I represent in this House, and referred to the fact that but 58 votes were cast against me at the last election.

This matter has been alluded to elsewhere. I wish to state to him and to this House that I was put in nomination by conventions of both political parties. The republicans who went to the polls I think very generally voted for me. I do not know of a single one who voted against me. The fifty-eight persons who voted against me were I think scattering democrats. [Laughter.]

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman will allow me to say that I quoted as my authority the Congressional Directory without any detailed knowledge of the circumstances concerning the election.

Mr. STEPHENS. That is why I make this explanation.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Congressional Directory reads:

Re-elected to the Forty-sixth Congress as a democrat, receiving 3,355 votes against 58 votes scattering.

I simply wish to show that I was correct as to the record which I quoted.

Mr. STEPHENS. Certainly. And I am simply making the explanation. There are some seven or eight thousand republicans, counting the colored voters as republicans, in my district; and if a single one of them voted against me I do not know it. In my own county the proportion of colored voters for me was about equal to the whites. There is a considerable majority of the democratic party—the exact numbers I do not know. So with other districts. There was really no opposition.

Mr. SPRINGER. Was there any bulldozing of colored voters in your district, or did they vote?

Mr. STEPHENS. All voted who desired to vote; there was no bulldozing. They did not vote in larger numbers, white or colored, simply because there was no opposition. It was generally understood that I would be elected, and there was no other election at the time.

Mr. BINGHAM. My point is this: What is to be the basis of indicating the party division or party association? Is it to be—[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]—is it to be the State, or congressional, or presidential vote?

Mr. STEPHENS. I simply rose to make the explanation which I have made as to my own district, and my colleagues can make explanations, if they please, as to their districts.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and a message was received from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announcing the passage of the following bills; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. No. 650) to remove the political disabilities of Arthur P. Bagby, of Texas;

A bill (S. No. 669) to remove the political disabilities of James F. Harrison, of Virginia;

An act (S. No. 678) relating to vinegar factories established and operating prior to March 1, 1879.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 72) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to place vessels and hulks at the disposal of commissioners of quarantine or other persons at the ports of the United States.

It further announced the passage, without amendment, of a bill (H. R. No. 1842) to remove the political disabilities of J. C. Pemberton, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

It further announced the passage, without amendment, and unanimously, of a joint resolution (H. R. No. 94) directing a monument to be erected to mark the birthplace of George Washington.

JUDICIAL EXPENSES.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I did not desire to prolong this discussion, especially on the point which the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] seems to be so much agitated about, as neither he nor I were prepared to go fully into all these reports. I stated the result, I stated the fact, I stated the effect, and I reiterate it. The gentleman has undertaken to read here a portion of a report not at all responsive to what I stated, and only of the report signed by Mr. Abbott, of Massachusetts. He attempted to evade the point, and then to beg me to withdraw my statement in the face of the report, and I declined to do so.

I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that the great question before the electoral commission at the time the case of the State of South Carolina was being considered, if it was not in all cases, was this: those claiming that Tilden was elected, or that Tilden electors were elected, claimed it on the ground that the returns showed the fact of their election on their face.

Now I repeat here that Mr. Abbott signed a report which contains a statement and summary of all the election returns in the State of South Carolina, wherein it is stated, among other things, after summing up the returns, that "the result by thus ascertaining the votes"—that is, by the returns, and that is what the democrats stood on before the commission—"that the result by thus ascertaining the votes cast at the precincts and correcting the mistakes made by the managers in the returns is as follows;" and then follows a statement in summary. Then the report states "this gives Bowen, who received the smallest vote on the republican ticket, 92,093 votes over McGowan, who received the largest vote on the democratic ticket, 91,262 votes, a majority of 831." That was the report; and the question was what did the returns show, and the returns did show that the Hayes elector who received the lowest vote on his ticket had 831 more votes, according to Mr. Abbott's report, than the highest Tilden elector, and so they reported. I read further from the same report:

Your committee believe they have obtained with substantial accuracy the number of votes cast, &c.

So much for that, then.

Then, considering the great question which was before the commission, which was, who was elected by the returns, and denying the right of returning boards to correct mistakes or to throw out returns or votes for fraud, Mr. Abbott in effect voted that the Hayes electors were not elected and the Tilden electors were.

There is a good deal in this report, Mr. Chairman. It is the most marvelous thing we have ever seen. It contains a great many things which gentlemen may speculate about outside of these figures, but the substance is what I have given you here. It contains that most extraordinary statement that comes to us twice in reports made by democratic committees of the Forty-fourth Congress relating to the presidential election in 1876, and on which the democratic party proposed to throw out votes in certain districts. I give the statement in the language of this report now before me: "Women utterly refused to have any intercourse with men of their own race who voted against the republican ticket;" and that was adjudged by democrats to be a fraud upon the democratic party. [Laughter on the republican side.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, one word.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. COX. I renew the amendment. Now the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] undertakes out of his own unhappiness, out of his own lack of conscience on this subject, to tell this House because the face of the returns were so and so that Judge Abbott did not report what was read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, no.

Mr. COX. Why, the very point made by Judge Field and Judge Abbott and others in the electoral commission was that on the face of the returns there was a prima facie election, but under the returns into which they desired to go it was all rotten, like dead men's bones; a whited sepulcher, only the face showing what was clean, while the inside was all rottenness.

Does the gentleman not make the distinction which the commission made? If the gentleman indulges in that sort of conduct and will not take it back, I hope that hereafter when he makes statements here they will be taken cum grano salis. The gentleman knows very well the point before the electoral commission. He knows very well that the point was made there, not that the Hayes elector or the Tilden elector was chosen; but that Judge Abbott voted there was no election. The gentleman does not yet take back his statement that Judge Abbott voted that the Tilden men were elected, and when I read from the RECORD, showing that was not the fact, as it appears on the record, and when the gentleman still adheres to his statement, what shall we think hereafter of statements made by him before honorable men in this House?

Further than that, when I show by the statement in the RECORD in the most unequivocal way that the vote of Judge Abbott was the logical sequence of his own report what then shall be the answer of the gentleman except to take up these miserable, scoundrelly prima facie reports which it was the principal object of Judge Abbott to go under and show to the American people that they were all rotten?

Mr. KEIFER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. COX. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to know if the democrats did not in all their votes on the electoral commission, in all cases, vote that the returns as made were those that should be considered and treated as valid, not the returns of the returning boards but the other election returns with the exception of South Carolina?

Mr. COX. Now fair-minded gentlemen will see that after I have captured the gentleman from Ohio and driven a nail——

Mr. KEIFER. Do not say you have captured me till you have got me. I know when a man gets mad what hurts him.

Mr. COX. When I bring the gentleman to the facts he tries to make a side issue as to the object of the democrats on that commission. Why does not the gentleman stand up and say as he said in the first place that Judge Abbott voted that the Tilden electors were chosen.

Mr. KEIFER. Why does the gentleman not answer my question?

Mr. COX. Because you have not taken back yet what you said. You dance with your head and kick with your heels and are not logical.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HURD. I desire to make a statement as to this South Carolina matter. I argued the South Carolina case on behalf of the House of Representatives before the electoral commission. We did not insist that the Tilden electors had been elected. We only insisted that such fraud and violence had been committed in the State of South Carolina that it was impossible to tell what electors had been chosen. And when Judge Lawrence, of Ohio, was arguing the proposition that Tilden electors had been chosen he was interrupted by one of the members of the commission of the republican party who said it was unnecessary to discuss a question that was not before the commission for discussion. The decision of the democratic members of the commission therefore was not that the Tilden electors had been chosen; it was only that fraud and violence had been practiced in South Carolina, so that it was impossible to state what electors had been elected. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, it was not agreed to.

Mr. WARNER. I desire to offer an amendment which I think my colleague who has charge of the bill will accept. It is to add in line 20 after the word "alternately," the words "without reference to party affiliation;" so that it will read:

The clerk and said commissioner each to place one name in said box alternately without reference to party affiliation, until the whole number required shall be placed therein.

Mr. MCMAHON. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. URNER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 3 by striking out from the fourteenth line after the word "court" to the word "therein," in line 21, and insert in lieu thereof as follows:

And who shall select such three hundred persons with special reference to their probity and intelligence and without any regard to their political faith or party affiliation.

Mr. URNER. I desire to say but one word in support of this amendment. The section, as it now stands, provides that three hundred names shall be placed in the box, and from those three hundred names the jury shall be drawn, "which names shall have been placed therein by the clerk of such court and a commissioner, to be appointed by the judge thereof, which commissioner shall be a citizen residing in the district in which such court is held, of good standing and a well-known member of the principal political party opposing that to which the clerk may belong, the clerk and said commissioner each to place one name in said box alternately, without reference to party affiliation, until the whole number required shall be placed therein."

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is very apparent that the intention of that provision of this section is that the clerk, if he be a republican, shall, in the selection of these jurors, represent the republican party and make his selection of one hundred and fifty names from the republican party; if the commissioner is a democrat, he shall represent his party and make his selection from his party; and the result is that both of these officers will make their selections from their respective parties and we will have partisan juries.

Now, I propose to strike that out and to put in place of it a provision directing the clerk to make the selection with special reference to probity, without a reference to political opinions or party affiliations.

Mr. MCMAHON. That is already substantially in the bill, and I ask for a vote.

The question was taken upon Mr. URNER'S amendment; and on a division there were—ayes 71, noes 91.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CALKINS. I move to strike out all after the word "citizen," in line 29, down to and including the word "law," in line 30; as follows:

Possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law.

So that it will read:

Provided, That no citizen shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

I do not want to take up the time of the committee by arguments, but I want to call the attention of the committee to one point. [Loud cries of "Vote!"]

I have no idea that any defect of the bill will be removed. I offer the amendment for two purposes. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill, and I ask him to say what provisions this bill contains for summoning a jury if the first jury summoned from the three hundred names shall from any cause be dismissed? Must the court wait for another jury to be summoned?

Mr. McMAHON. There are three hundred names in the box.

Mr. CALKINS. But suppose that during the court for any cause the number of jurors remaining is but twelve. Are you to send a marshal out with a new venire or summon the bystanders to fill up the jury? I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee to this defect in the law. I understand that when the sections of the Revised Statutes which this law proposes to repeal are repealed, no provision remains on the United States statutes with reference to qualifications of any juror. Now, what qualification does the language refer to which I propose to strike out? Is it qualifications prescribed by State laws?

Mr. McMAHON. It means other qualifications if there are any others; if there are no others it amounts to nothing. It is very simple.

Mr. CALKINS. I suppose it does mean very much.

The question was taken on Mr. CALKINS'S amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer the following amendment:

Strike out all in line 19, after the word "belong," down to the word "but," in line 21, and insert the following:

And in case of disagreement between the clerk and commissioner and their failure to select a sufficient number of jurors as aforesaid, in due time the judge of the proper court shall be notified of such disagreement and shall in such case act with such clerk and commissioner in the selection of such jurors, and the three shall form a board, a majority of whom shall have power to select such persons to act as jurors as aforesaid.

[Loud cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

I have but a word to say in reference to this amendment, and I do not desire to say it if the gentlemen are unwilling to hear me. I never desire to speak unless I have the attention of the body I am addressing. I consider this amendment very important. The law of Pennsylvania on the subject is, I believe, the only one of like case with it in the country. I differ with my colleague from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] who made reference to the law a few moments ago on the other side of the House, as to its effects. Sir, the law of Pennsylvania does not look to the selection of partisan jurors, but only to the selection of the two jury commissioners, one of each party, the judge sitting with them with a view to secure non-partisan juries. The bill before the House requires that the clerk and commissioners shall alternately select, and the result, as stated by the gentleman from Maryland, is a partisan jury; a jury which, it appears to me, never will acquit or convict in any political case whatever. The amendment which I offer, if adopted, would result in the selection of good men. If the clerk and commissioner disagree, it then requires the interposition of the judge, as in Pennsylvania, and his consent for the selection of persons whose names shall be placed in the jury-box. This bill I consider to be defective, not worthy the name of law. It is defective in many respects. I am opposed to the bill, but if it is to become a law we ought to consider it carefully and perfect it.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I move to insert in line 2, section 3, after the word "dollars" the words:

Except in the Territories of the United States, where the per diem pay for jurors shall be $3.

I will state for the information of the House (and I think every gentleman here from the Territories will bear witness to the correctness of the statement) that $2 per day will not pay the board and lodging of a petit juror in the Territories. Besides that, the law of the United States now only allows five cents per mile for mileage. Now, in these Territories a juror can travel nowhere for less than twenty cents a mile, which is the amount allowed by the territorial law. The fees of the territorial jurors are $3 per diem and twenty cents per mile for mileage.

The hardship of the existing law is so great that I know one man in my Territory who, in order to attend a United States court, was subjected to an expense of $380. The fees he received amounted to but $60; so that it was an actual expense to him of $320 to act as juror.

At the last session of Congress the Committee on Territories had this subject under consideration, and agreed to report favorably upon it.

Mr. SAPP. Does not the same objection rest against this bill so far as the States are concerned?

Mr. MAGINNIS. I am not looking out for the States.

Mr. SAPP. I know that is the case in my own State.

The amendment moved by Mr. MAGINNIS was then agreed to upon a division—ayes 72, noes 52.

Mr. BAKER. It is a pity that all the States are not Territories, so far as jurors are concerned, so that they could all get $3 a day.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to suggest to the gentleman who has charge of this bill if it would not be well after the word "courts," in line 25 of the printed bill, to insert the words "for jury trial." That portion of the section now reads, "selecting jurors in the highest courts of the State."

Mr. McMAHON. We have employed here the language of the present law.

Mr. HISCOCK. To illustrate my point: in the State of New York, for instance, the highest courts are not courts for jury trial, and that may be the case in other States. I would suggest that the words "for jury trial" be inserted after the words "jurors in the highest courts."

Mr. McMAHON. I would say to the gentleman that this is precisely the language of the old law.

Mr. HISCOCK. I cannot help that.

Mr. McMAHON. There has been no trouble under the old law in that respect, and I think that when a construction has once grown up under a law which is plain the phraseology should not be changed.

Mr. HISCOCK. The point I make is this: the highest State court is very often an appellate court, and not a court for jury trials. It is very likely that a proper construction would be put upon this language, but the amendment which I suggest will make it beyond any question.

Mr. PHISTER. This language is plain enough; it means the highest courts for which jurors are selected.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will not press the amendment unless it is accepted. I will move, however, to strike out all of the section after the word "dollars," in the second line, leaving only that portion of the section fixing the pay of jurors. It is a fact very well known that a bill covering this same subject has been considered and passed by the Senate, and is now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary of this House. I believe it would be better to leave that committee to perfect the bill upon this subject.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. HISCOCK; and it was not agreed to upon a division—ayes 79, noes 92.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend section 3 by striking out the words "two dollars," and inserting the words "three dollars," in line 2 of the section, as the per diem pay of jurors in United States courts.

Now that the amendment of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS] has been adopted, giving to territorial jurors a per diem of $3, it must occur to the House that a very great injustice will be done to States, and especially to the frontier and larger States, by restricting the compensation of jurors in those States to $2 per day. All the courts in the Territories are United States courts, and yet in each of the Territories there are three judges, in some of them four judges, and there is less trouble and loss of business involved in attending what are practically State courts in the Territories than in attending United States courts in the States.

Mr. MAGINNIS. The gentleman is entirely mistaken; all the courts in the Territories are territorial courts.

Mr. DUNNELL. They are termed territorial courts, but they are classed under the law as United States courts.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Oh, no.

Mr. DUNNELL. Yes, they are. Now a few words upon the merits of this question. The compensation of $2 a day is an exceedingly insignificant compensation. It will not pay the expenses of an honest man who is summoned two hundred or three hundred miles from the place where the court is held. I was looking over the list of jurors selected for the use of the court held at Saint Paul, in my State, and I think that some of them would be required to travel two hundred and fifty miles to reach that court. And there is no respectable hotel in that place where they can get their board for $2 per day.

Mr. McMAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DUNNELL. Certainly.

Mr. McMAHON. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not the fact that in almost all the centers where United States marshals have now the privilege of putting men on juries there is not an indecent scramble for the place?

Mr. VALENTINE. Not of good men. It may be so in large cities, but not in the Western States.

Mr. McMAHON. That is the common report.

Mr. DUNNELL. If we give an insufficient compensation to jurors, we will compel the marshal to make up his juries of men who are hanging around the courts in which they are to serve. But if you give a fair compensation for jury service, the marshal can summon a portion of the juries from each of the counties away from the place where the courts are held. The compensation here proposed is so small that men living one hundred or two hundred miles away from the place where the court sits will seek to avoid jury duty; and the result will be that the panels will be filled by men called in from the city or town where the court is sitting. This low compensation will, in my judgment, encourage the employment of hangers-on about the courts as jurors. I think the rate of compensation here proposed is unworthy the Government. We have no right to ask intelligent, industrious farmers and mechanics, the class of men who ought to be summoned as jurors, to go off to the capital of the State to attend the United States court for a per diem insufficient to pay their board bills.

In one instance I was asked by the marshal of my State to give him some names of citizens to serve as jurors. When I inquired of respectable, intelligent citizens, "How would you like to attend court at Saint Paul?" the reply was in almost every instance, "I must decline to serve, as I cannot make my expenses."

Mr. McMAHON. The only answer I have to make to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] is to read an extract from the last report of the Attorney General of the United States:

I would renew the recommendation made in the annual report of 1877, that the present per diem of jurors be reduced to $2. The sums required for jurors throughout the land are the great expense of holding courts; and when it is remembered that hardly a secular day of the year passes in which there is not a court, the continued drain upon the judiciary fund to meet this service is very great, and indeed greater than is usually supposed. I therefore renew the proposed reduction and repeat what was then said upon this topic:

"Under present values it would seem that $2 should be a sufficient per diem. Should this suggestion be adopted thousands of dollars would be saved to the Government. The present per diem is so liberal that some jurors value the pay too highly for rapid transaction of business, and sessions are protracted without reasonable cause."

Every lawyer knows exactly what that means.

Service upon a jury should be considered a privilege and a duty, but not to be sought on account of its pecuniary profit. Instances are reported of persons who have applied to the marshal to obtain employment on the juries, while others are known to have resorted to the judge to induce him to request or direct the marshal to place them upon his jury list.

I would further state that, upon a rather careful comparison of marshals' requisitions, such a law would effect a reduction of nearly $200,000, the saving of which to the judiciary fund would materially lessen, if not entirely avoid, in ordinary years, the amounts asked for to supply deficiencies.

My predecessors thought that a uniform method of drawing jurors for United States courts should be adopted for the whole country, and I add thereto my conviction of its propriety and usefulness.

That is all the argument I desire to make.

Mr. DUNNELL. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] always follow the opinions of the Attorney General?

Mr. McMAHON. Whenever the Attorney-General recommends anything in the line of economy I generally adopt the recommendation, because it is so extraordinary for him to do so that I think the reasons in favor of it must be very clear.

Mr. WAIT. Mr. Chairman, I will renew the amendment. I wish to say that in Connecticut $2 a day will not meet the expense incurred by gentlemen who are called from the different sections of the State to serve as jurors at the sessions of the United States circuit and district courts, which are held alternately in the cities of Hartford and New Haven. At these places transient board cannot be obtained at the leading hotels or in respectable boarding-houses for $2 a day. Then there are, of course, other expenditures that jurors, when away from their homes, are necessarily compelled to incur.

We mean in Connecticut to send intelligent and fit men to serve as jurors in the Federal courts, and I believe that we ordinarily do. Farmers, merchants, and mechanics are selected, men who will discharge this very important duty faithfully and fairly, and are compelled to leave their different business pursuits and serve on juries. They are willing to leave their business and their homes and give their time to the discharge of this public service, but they want and ought to receive sufficient compensation to meet all the expenses which they are forced to incur. But this they cannot do when the per diem is but $2.

Mr. McMAHON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WAIT. Certainly; any that you please.

Mr. McMAHON. My part of the country is full of advertisements of nice watering places, summer resorts, in Connecticut and Massachusetts, where people can get board at six or eight dollars a week. What does that mean?

Mr. WAIT. That is true. You can get good board in respectable families at the seaside and in the country at the prices named. But the gentleman [Mr. McMAHON] must recollect that the sessions of the United States courts are not held at seaside resorts or at small villages in the country. These courts sit in the cities, and if my friend from Ohio will migrate to Connecticut we will with pleasure honor him by selecting him to serve as a juror in these courts; but he would soon find that $2 a day would not pay table board and room rent at any hotel or boarding-house such as he would desire to stay at, to say nothing of failing to supply him with certain little incidentals and creature comforts that he might desire to enjoy. [Laughter.]

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. DUNNELL, there were—ayes 81, noes 92.

Mr. DUNNELL called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Attorney-General shall include in his annual report a statement of all payments or expenditures during any fiscal year out of any appropriation fund subject to requisitions by him.

Mr. FROST. I move to amend by adding as section 5 what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the following sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States, viz: sections 2016, 2018, and 2020, and all of the succeeding sections of said statutes down to and including section 2027, and also section 5522, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and that section 2017 be amended by striking out of the first line thereof as printed in the Revised Statutes the words "and required;" and that section 2019 be amended by striking out of said section in lines 11 and 12 as printed in the Revised Statutes the words "for the purpose of engaging in the work of canvassing the ballots," and by striking out from line 13 of said section as printed in said statutes the words "in respect to such canvass."

That section 2028 be amended by striking out in lines 1 and 2 of said section as printed in the Revised Statutes the words "or a deputy marshal," and by striking out in line 3 of said section as printed in said statutes the words "city, town, county, parish." That all of section 2031 of said statutes, and that all other sections of the Revised Statutes and all laws and parts of laws authorizing the appointment of chief supervisors of elections, special deputy marshals of elections, or general deputy marshals having any duties to perform in respect to any election and prescribing their duties and powers and allowing them compensation, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. DUNNELL. We ought to hear read the sections of the Revised Statutes which are referred to in the amendment.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no; we know what they are.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk is not provided with the sections.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. FROST, there were—ayes 26, noes 59.

Mr. MILLS. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MILLS and Mr. MONROE were appointed.

Mr. FROST. I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to withdrawing the amendment?

Mr. CONGER. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do I understand that the gentleman is in favor of the amendment?

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 76.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope it will be noted that the republicans voted in favor of the amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMAHON. I now move the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 2252) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. McMAHON. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The Clerk read the first amendment, as follows:

Line 2, section 3, after the word "dollars," insert the following:

Except in the Territories of the United States where the per diem of each juror shall be $3.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 34, nays 159, not voting 92; as follows:

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

To Mr. TALBOTT, for twelve days, on account of important business.

And then, on motion of Mr. PRICE, (at five o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 11, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GARLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1841) to remove the political disabilities of James H. North, of Culpeper County, Virginia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the select committee to investigate and report the best means of preventing the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 675) to provide office rooms for the National Board of Health, and for the publication of its reports and papers, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ROLLINS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 684) fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia, and for a revision of assessments for special improvements, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOUSTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 685) to change the day for the election of Representatives and Delegates to the Congress of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. COKE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 686) for the relief of Thomas Kearney, late collector of customs for the district of Corpus Christi; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BAYARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 36) to pay Professor Peter Collier for services in connection with sugar duties; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ROLLINS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 2251) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

IMPRESSIONS FROM PORTRAITS AND VIGNETTES.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 343) relating to printing impressions from portraits and vignettes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, at the request of a Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress, the head of a department or bureau, art association, or library, to furnish impressions from any portrait or vignette which is now, or may hereafter be, a part of the engraved stock of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, at such rates and under such conditions as he may deem necessary to protect the public interests.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

D. C. W. BRINK.

Mr. EATON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 30) for the relief of D. C. W. Brink, bearer of dispatches from the United States minister at Mexico in 1869.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It directs that $552.69 be paid to D. C. W. Brink for compensation and expenses as bearer of dispatches from the United States minister at Mexico in 1869.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I desire simply to say one word in regard to this joint resolution. Upon conferring with the Department of State the Committee on Foreign Relations became entirely satisfied that this sum ought to have been paid years ago. The Secretary of State said that he had not a proper fund out of which to pay it without troubling Congress, and he has recommended to the Committee on Appropriations of both Houses that this money be paid. I hope the joint resolution will be passed.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is there a written report accompanying the joint resolution?

Mr. EATON. There is no written report. I stated, and I will state again for the benefit of my friend from Alabama, (perhaps I did not state it as fully as I ought to have done,) that this gentleman was bearer of dispatches. He was a consul in Mexico and by Minister Rosecrans was sent as a special bearer of dispatches for this Government in 1869. For certain reasons the Secretary of State did not think at that time that he ought to be paid, or deem it advisable to do so. There was some little disagreement in regard to the minister and the Department of State. But upon a thorough examination of the matter by the present Secretary of State he recommends that the money be paid, and said that he should not come to Congress at all if he had in his own hands money for that purpose. I have no doubt myself that this money should have been paid years and years ago, ten years ago, rather than now.

Mr. COCKRELL. This claim was once before the Committee on Claims, and was referred to me as a sub-committee for examination. I made a partial examination of it, and came to the conclusion that the claim was just. I did not think, however, that the duty of examining such claims ought to be placed upon Congress, but thought that the Secretary of State ought to report it to Congress as a deficiency. I understand that he has made that report; and I have no doubt that the claim is just. The Departments, in my humble opinion, ought to be made to examine all such claims, which they have the means of examining better than any committee of the Senate or House can do, and report them to Congress as deficiencies.

Mr. EATON. I move to amend the resolution so as to make the name "Dr. C. W. Brink."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EATON. I move to amend the title by making the name "Dr. C. W. Brink."

The amendment was agreed to.

ESTATE OF HENRY CONARD.

Mr. EATON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 681) for the relief of the estate of Henry Conard.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mrs. Adela Conard, widow and sole legatee of the late Henry Conard, of Pennsylvania, $7,000, to reimburse his estate for expenditures made and losses sustained by him in consequence of protection, &c., extended by him to Haytian refugees under the authority of the Government of the United States, while in the consular service thereof at Port au Prince, in the year 1868.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I desire to say a very few words in regard to this matter, and it is a very interesting matter.

During the late rebellion in Hayti, in 1868, a great many refugees sought the protection of the American minister resident at Port au Prince. He was a citizen of my State, Judge Hollister, a gentleman of very high character indeed. He corresponded with the State Department to know what he should do with these people. The Secretary of State, Mr. Seward, advised him to protect them. Our consular agent, Mr. Henry Conard, took into his house from one hundred to three hundred of these people and cared for them. No claim was made or has been made until now. Mr. Conard supposed that he was a man of wealth. He was our consular agent. He took great pride in being the consular agent of the United States at that point. But he died last year, and upon a settlement of his affairs he was found to be involved, so that his widow (and a sterling one she appears to be) went into a little business in order to pay the debts which this man, her husband, left. Now she presents her claim to the Government.

Judge Hollister, of my State, the former minister resident, was here before the committee; the correspondence was examined by the committee; interviews have been had with the Secretary of State; and we are unanimously of the opinion that this sum of $7,000 ought to be paid this woman.

It is a question how far this Government ought to go in recommending to its ministers abroad to care for refugees during political difficulties in another country. But that is a matter, however interesting, that need not come up here, because the honor of the Government is involved in this matter. It was by the recommendation of Mr. Seward, the Secretary of State, that this expenditure was incurred and that these services were rendered by Mr. Conard. I may say, as my colleague on the committee, the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] suggests to me, that it was done by the express authority of the Secretary of State. I trust that this sum will be paid, for really it hardly covers the expenditure.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 2252) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 34) to print 5,000 copies of the final reports of the United States centennial commission upon the international exhibition and centennial celebration of 1876;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 95) to pay Patrick Doran for services as messenger, House of Representatives.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 100,000 copies of Special Report No. 12 of the Commissioner of Agriculture, containing the reports of the examiners appointed to investigate the diseases of swine and contagious and infectious diseases incident to other classes of domesticated animals.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 678) relating to vinegar factories established and operated prior to March 1, 1879.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. R. No. 72) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to place vessels and hulks at the disposal of commissioners of quarantine or other proper persons at the ports of the United States; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 9th instant approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. No. 644) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned ordnance for the monument of Colonel Robert L. McCook, Ninth Ohio Volunteers, in Washington Park, in the city of Cincinnati, Ohio;

An act (S. No. 491) in relation to the accounts of the United States entomological commission; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 25) authorizing the Public Printer to bind in cloth two volumes of Sailing Directions for the United States Hydrographic Office.

SUMMONING OF A WITNESS.

Mr. MAXEY. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That E. R. Wheeler, of Spencer, Massachusetts, be summoned by telegraphic subpœna to appear without delay before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to give evidence in a matter pending before said committee.

It is simply an order for a witness.

Mr. HOAR. This is not a Massachusetts matter?

Mr. FERRY. No, it has no relation to Massachusetts.

Mr. MAXEY. No, it is not a Massachusetts matter, but the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has information that the gentleman's testimony is important to elucidate a matter before it. I simply desire to have him here at once.

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection.

Mr. FERRY. The case is now pending.

Mr. HOAR. I only interposed because it seemed to name a person in my State.

The resolution was agreed to.

USE OF TROOPS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no further business is moved the Chair will declare the morning hour at an end, and the unfinished business is Senate bill No. 621, on which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL] has the floor.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 621) authorizing the employment of the militia and the land and naval forces of the United States in certain cases, and for other purposes.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, I trespass upon the kind indulgence of the Senate a second time in this discussion with great reluctance. I would not trouble the Senate at all but for the fact that during my absence from the Senate and from the city the Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] saw proper to make some allusions to myself that I think it is due to the Senate and to myself that I should notice.

I desire to say first of all, however, and in advance, that no Senator I trust will do me the injustice for one moment to imagine that I will make in this Senate a personal criticism of a Senator. Respect for the Senate will restrain me from a retort in kind upon the Senator from Maine. Strangers have kindly furnished me with many documents and records for what they supposed was my purpose on this occasion. I only wish to say that I have given all such records to the waste-basket.

I trust as long as I have the honor of a seat on this floor I shall not forget that this is the Senate of the United States; that it is neither a bear garden, nor a fish market, nor a circus show for the amusement of the galleries. I shall therefore confine myself to matters entirely pertinent, which have in this discussion and on one previous occasion been brought to the attention of the people of the United States from the same quarter in regard to myself.

On the 19th of May, the Senator from Maine addressed the Senate at length. I will read the portion of his remarks to which I shall feel it my duty to call the attention of the Senate. He said:

> Nor do I desire to misrepresent the honorable Senator from Georgia—
> Very significant, indeed—
> who I regret is not in his seat. But the honorable Senator from Georgia the other day made a speech that was somewhat remarkable. Among other things, he depicted the overwhelming grief he had at the secession of the Southern States; and when he was called upon by the independent voters of the county of Troup to represent them in the secession convention he wrote this letter to them, as he says:
> "I will consent to the dissolution of the Union as I would consent to the death of my father, never from choice, only from necessity, and then in sorrow and sadness of heart."
> Well, he was elected on that platform, and he went to the convention, and the convention, as we all know, passed the ordinance of secession. And in the evening of January 19, 1861, he writes to a friend a letter which he quotes himself:
> "DEAR SIR: The deed is done. Georgia this day left the Union. Cannon have been firing and bells tolling. At this moment people are filling the streets shouting vociferously. A large torchlight procession is moving from house to house and calling out speakers. The resolutions declaratory passed on yesterday, and similar scenes were enacted last night. The crowd called loudly for me, but my room was dark, my heart was sad, and my tongue was silent. Whoever may be in fault is not now the question. Whether by the North or by the South or by both, the fact remains: our Union has fallen. The most favored sons of freedom have written a page in history which despots will read to listening subjects for centuries to come to prove that the people are not capable of self-government. How can I think thus and feel otherwise than badly?"
> These are very just sentiments; and now I want to read the wonderful declaration of the ordinance of Georgia which the Senator from Georgia would consent to have enacted as he would consent to the death of his father, and that so pierced his heart with sadness when it was accomplished. I want to read it, and my friend from Connecticut will observe its language, as he boasted the other day that Connecticut was "a free and independent State."
> Mr. EATON. I did not boast. I said that was the oath that Connecticut voters had to take.
> Mr. BLAINE. Here is the "ordinance to dissolve the union between the State of Georgia and other States united with her under a compact of government entitled the Constitution of the United States." This is the original journal of the Georgia convention. It is a rare book. The literature of that section from some cause is very hard to procure.
> "We, the people of the State of Georgia, in convention assembled, do declare and ordain, and it is hereby declared and ordained,
> "That the ordinance adopted by the people of the State of Georgia in convention on the 2d day of January, in the year of our Lord 1788, whereby the Constitution of the United States of America was assented to, ratified, and adopted; and also all acts and parts of acts by the General Assembly of this State, ratifying and adopting amendments of the said Constitution, are hereby repealed, rescinded, and abrogated.
> "We do further declare and ordain, That the union now subsisting between the State of Georgia and other States, under the name of the 'United States of America,' is hereby dissolved, and that the State of Georgia is in the full possession and exercise of all those rights of sovereignty which belong and appertain to a free and independent State."
> That was the ordinance which the Senator from Georgia said to the people of Troup he would consent to as he would to the death of his father, and the ordinance which the evening after it was passed so filled his heart with sadness that he put out the lights in his room and would not make a speech to a crowd outside serenading him. I have read the yeas and nays on that, and what is my unbounded surprise to find that the Senator from Georgia himself voted for the ordinance. Here he is, "Hill of Troup." I believe I am right in saying that he is the man. There were two or three Hills, all voting for it, but "Hill of Troup" voted for it, and he cannot say in defense of that vote that he did it because there was one of those tempestuous and tumultuous rushes of public opinion which bear everything before it and which no man could resist. We know what that is. It sometimes assumes such positive and portentous force as to have mob-like violence. That was not so in this convention. On the call of the yeas and nays there were 208 in favor of the ordinance of secession and 89 against it, and in the 89 were ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS and Herschel V. Johnson, who had that very year run for Vice-President on the Douglas ticket. The Senator from Georgia, [Mr. HILL,] who would consent to it just as he would to the death of his father, made up his mind that if two hundred and eight men wanted to murder the old man he would join with him. [Great laughter and applause.] Rather than be in a minority he would join the murderous crowd [laughter] and be a parricide.

Now, I have read that whole extract from the speech of the Senator from Maine, including the great laughter and the applause. Mr. President, I shall never do the unparliamentary thing of attacking the motives of Senators on this floor. But I have this to say, that if the Senator from Maine intended by the manner in which he has presented these facts to represent that in the convention of Georgia on the test question as to whether Georgia should or should not secede I voted for secession, he stated that which the documents which he professed to have in his hand taught him was not true. If he said that in giving the vote in this particular form at the time and manner in which it was given there was any intention on my part to express an approval of secession, he said that which the record he held in his hand most abundantly showed was not correct.

If the honorable Senator simply intended and desired to get off some smart things for the amusement of the galleries, and found it necessary to fix up his facts in a manner to suit his purpose rather than the truth of the case, I should judge from the loud applause and laughter that he had some success.

It cannot be a very material question to this Senate or to this country whether I have on any particular question been consistent or inconsistent, for whether I have been consistent or inconsistent cannot illustrate any point in discussion, and I shall never allude to any record of a Senator unless it throws light upon some question involved in discussion. Even if I had been inconsistent, it is remarkable that the people whom I represented in the convention never discovered that inconsistency, for from that day to this there has not been an hour when I have not enjoyed the undivided absolute confidence of the people of that county. So it is impossible that there should have been an inconsistency in their estimation, certainly not an inconsistency which would involve an abandonment of the pledges given them in the canvass.

But, sir, as the Senator has seen proper to introduce this question, I deem it proper to give the facts, and I premise the facts with one statement which is historical in its character and which perhaps everybody ought to know; and that is, that not only in Georgia but in the Southern States generally during the contest over the question as to whether the States should or should not secede, while there was great division on the main question, and while there was earnest and sometimes even bitter debate between the advocates and opponents of secession, it was universally conceded that if the State should determine to secede, when that declared will should be ascertained it was the duty of all her citizens to support her act; and two reasons were given for that. The first was that to oppose the will of the State, after that will had been officially ascertained and declared, could have but one result in our own midst, and that was a civil war in the State, which we determined at all hazards to avoid, for whether, as some said, the States seceded by virtue of a constitutional right, or whether, as others contended, secession could be nothing more than a revolutionary right and a revolutionary act, still when the State took the act, declared her solemn will in solemn convention, it mattered not upon what principle the act was put, there was but one result, and that was for her own citizens to sustain the State; otherwise we should have had civil war at our doors.

Then again there was another reason. We believed that if the northern people should see that after the will of the State was declared there was unanimity in its support among all her people, it would have a happy moral effect to avert the catastrophe of a sectional war, for it was generally charged through the country that the secession movement was simply a factious movement. Whether that were true or false, if the northern people should wake up to the fact that the whole people of the South sustained it after it was adopted, we hoped it would have a happy effect to bring the people everywhere to their senses and would result in averting a war, and those of us who sedulously and earnestly opposed secession firmly believed that if war could only be averted for a few months, the whole movement of secession would fail. I state as a fact known to myself that those of us who were prominent in opposing the movement in the Gulf and South Atlantic States were in constant communication with the leaders of what were known as the Southern Border States; and at that very moment we were expecting that a movement would be made for a peace conference by which we hoped that all differences between the sections would be adjusted and the bitter ordeal of a sectional war would thereby be averted.

In this state of things and with these feelings the Georgia convention met at Milledgeville on the 16th of January, 1861. I have the journal of that convention in my hand. There were nearly three hundred delegates, two hundred and ninety-seven at least voting, the largest vote, I believe, polled in that convention. Two days were consumed in organizing the convention, agreeing upon the rules of proceeding, &c. On the third day of the convention, to wit, on the 18th of January, the real question came up, and a programme was distinctly agreed upon by all parties; for while the parties were in earnest, yet I must say I never met more honorable adversaries. Nothing was concealed, nothing was attempted that was unfair, no advantage was sought to be taken. It was agreed that Judge Nisbet should bring forward the test resolution in favor of secession and Ex-Governor Herschel V. Johnson should offer for that the substitute agreed upon by the opponents of the resolution for secession; and we put that substitute in the strongest form possible, by simply providing that the question whether the State should secede or not should be postponed until after an effort should be made to secure a convention of the Southern States for the purpose of acting and consulting together upon the subject, we believing that by the time that the convention could assemble the peace conference of the States generally, which was called on that very day by the State of Virginia, should also assemble, and thus the evil might be averted. So the two parties then before the convention were what was known as the party of immediate secessionists, unconditional and absolute, and the party in favor of postponing decisive action until there could be a co-operation and a consultation on the part of the different States involved. Therefore, on the 18th of January, 1861—I now read from the journal—

The doors were then closed, when Mr. Nisbet offered the following resolutions; which were taken up and read:

"Resolved, That in the opinion of this convention, it is the right and duty of Georgia to secede from the present Union, and to co-operate with such of the other States as have or shall do the same, for the purpose of forming a southern confederacy upon the basis of the Constitution of the United States.

"Resolved, That a committee of —— be appointed by the Chair to report an ordinance to assert the right and fulfill the obligation of the State of Georgia to secede from the Union."

He then moved to take up the first resolution.

Whereupon Mr. Johnson, of Jefferson, offered the following preamble and ordinance as a substitute for Mr. Nisbet's, and moved the reference of both to a committee of twenty-one.

The substitute thus offered by Governor Johnson was the one to which I have alluded, on which the opponents of immediate secession had all agreed as in our opinion the strongest ground upon which we could stand with hope of success. It is long and I will not trouble the Senate to read it, but it is precisely of the character I have stated.

Now the issue was distinctly joined. Here was the resolution of Judge Nisbet declaring it the right and duty of the State of Georgia to secede from the Union. Here was the substitute offered by Governor Johnson postponing that act, and proposing to call a convention of the Southern States for the purpose of consulting on the subject. Upon that issue thus joined the debate sprang up and the whole question was decided. The very journal which the Senator from Maine had in his hand informed him, if he read it, that—

After an elaborate discussion, in which Messrs. Nisbet, Johnson of Jefferson, Cobb, STEPHENS of Taliaferro, Toombs, Means, Reese, HILL of Troup, and Bartow participated, a call was made for the "previous question," which, being sustained under the ruling of the Chair, cut off the motion to commit and a vote on the substitute, and brought the convention to a direct vote on the first of the original resolutions of Mr. Nisbet. Whereupon the yeas and nays were demanded; which, being called, resulted as follows, (the president voting in the affirmative)—yeas 166, nays 130.

This journal informed the Senator that this resolution offered by Mr. Nisbet declaring it the right and duty of the State to secede was the resolution upon which the discussion was had. It was to test the sense of the convention, and upon that resolution the whole test was had and the actual test was made, and I had the honor of closing the debate in opposition to that resolution. While, doubtless, all who opposed that resolution made abler speeches than I could have made, yet I presume there was no member of that convention and no person who heard it who would not concede that there was certainly no speech more earnest in opposition. That vote was taken, and my vote was recorded in the negative against the adoption of the resolution. But that resolution was adopted.

Mr. Nisbet moved to fill the blank in the second resolution.

Which was, as I have read to you, a resolution appointing a committee to bring in an ordinance to carry out the resolution declaratory, to which I have referred. That was all, and that was the only purpose of the ordinance. It was simply, as all lawyers understand, a mere pro forma entering of the judgment after the verdict had been rendered; and as evidence of that this record shows that Judge Nisbet moved to fill the blank in the second resolution with the number seventeen, instructed, not requested, not authorized, but instructed to bring in an ordinance to assert and fulfill the obligation of the resolution. On that committee there were seventeen gentlemen, nine of whom had voted for Mr. Nisbet's resolution, eight of whom, myself among them, had voted against it; and as the journal shows that the ordinance thus referred to a committee of seventeen, eight of whom had voted against secession, was unanimously reported. There was no dissent whatever. Why? It simply reported that that ordinance was a proper form of judgment to carry out what the body declared it was its duty to do. At this point, when this ordinance was reported, a discussion, very slight in its character, arose, an interchange of views rather between those of us who opposed secession as to whether the time had come to cease resistance. There was a general concurrence of views that it had, and some thought it best to express that concurrence by simply voting for the ordinance, others thought it would be better perhaps to vote against the ordinance and afterward sign it. Every Senator will see that whether a man voted for it or signed it could make no difference, because neither the voting for it nor the signing it was a test question. That question had been settled, after earnest and elaborate debate, by positive resolution.

I was unwilling myself, however, to yield until another effort was made, as the journal shows. I was dissatisfied, because I thought it was not exactly fair that the previous question should have been called upon the adoption of Mr. Nisbet's resolution after the discussion was had, when the only effect of calling it was to cut off a direct vote upon the substitute offered by Governor Johnson. I was exceedingly anxious to get a direct, square vote upon that substitute, and therefore I insisted on it, as the journal shows. That ordinance was reported on the 19th of January:

Mr. Nisbet, from the committee appointed to report an ordinance to assert the right and fulfill the obligation of the State of Georgia to secede from the Union, reported the following ordinance:

* * * * * * *

The report was taken up, and, on motion of Mr. Toombs, the ordinance was twice read.

Mr. Hill, of Troup, moved that the preamble and resolutions offered by Mr. Johnson, of Jefferson, on yesterday, as a substitute for the resolutions adopted by the convention raising the committee to report an ordinance to assert the right and fulfill the obligation of the State of Georgia to secede from the Union, be received as a substitute for the same.

That is, I moved that the substitute offered by Governor Johnson to Mr. Nisbet's resolution, and a vote upon which had been cut off by the call of the previous question, be now made a substitute for the ordinance, and upon that the yeas and nays were called, and I need not look at the journal, for I am perfectly familiar with it. The yeas were 133 in favor of my motion to 164 against. That was the strongest vote we ever obtained in the convention against secession. On the first vote the resolution was adopted by 36 majority, the yeas being 166 and the nays 130; on my motion of a substitute for the ordinance the yeas were 133 and the nays 164, being 31 majority.

Now, every man here sees and every man in the State itself saw what is true, that the convention by a most solemn resolution declared that it was the duty of the State to secede; a committee had been appointed to report an ordinance to carry out that resolution; that ordinance had been reported unanimously; a substitute for that ordinance had been voted down; so the matter was closed. The only question then was when would you signify your intention to abide the action of the State, whether it received your approval or disapproval. It fell to my lot to make the last speech against the resolution declaring it the duty of the State to secede. It fell to my lot to make the last motion to postpone the execution of that resolution, making the very last motion in the convention; and when nothing else could be done, it was agreed among ourselves that every man should vote as he pleased; some voted for the ordinance, one-third, simply saying "the matter is closed; it is impossible to reconsider; the convention has refused to accept anything in the way of a substitute; has refused to postpone the matter." One-third of us, therefore, voted for the ordinance as the proper form to carry out the resolution. The other two-thirds voted against it, but all signed it. I see the journal does not state that any did not sign it at all. I have a recollection, I may be mistaken in that, that some three or four gentlemen did refuse to sign, but I am not sure that I am correct in that. Certainly all but three or four signed the ordinance because it was nothing in the world but a method of testing our readiness to abide the will of our State thus solemnly expressed. That was all there was in it.

Mr. President, these are the facts. If the Senator from Maine had stated all these facts just as they occurred, and had he chosen to express his opinion that my vote was inconsistent with my views upon the subject of secession, I should have cared nothing for it. As to whether I was or was not consistent, the opinion of the Senator from Maine is a matter of utter indifference to me. That was a question which I had to answer to my constituents, with which my constituents were entirely satisfied and have been satisfied to this day. But, sir, the Senator from Maine, for some purpose of his own, chose to suppress facts which did exist; he chose to suggest facts which did not exist; and upon this double misrepresentation of the facts he chose to employ his wit and his smartness; and all when he knew I was seven hundred miles away. I make that simple statement, and leave the Senator to the judgment of honest men and honorable debaters without comment.

There is one other statement made by the Senator which I will notice, which I almost feel like apologizing to the Senate for noticing, and my only object in noticing it is that it furnishes a very fair specimen of that gentleman's style of representing his adversary in debate:

The honorable Senator from Georgia made the astonishing assurance that this Union had been saved by the northern democrats; they were the men that did it. It was the northern democrats. Why, in Connecticut it was not William A. Buckingham or JOSEPH R. HAWLEY that helped save the Union. The honorable Senator from Connecticut did it. It was not in New York William H. Seward that did anything for the Union; it was Governor Seymour. Out in Ohio it was not Salmon P. Chase that helped along the Union cause, but it was Clement L. Vallandigham.

Mr. President, will any man who loves accuracy or has respect for accuracy take the remarks I made on the occasion alluded to, and see if those remarks justify that Senator in saying that I intimated that the republicans did not help save the Union and that Mr. Seward, of New York, did nothing to save the Union; and if I made no such statement what is to be accomplished by such a representation? Is it to improve the dignity, elevate the character of the Senate, or is it to enlighten the people? Now just see what I did say on that subject. The Senator refers to one paragraph only. Let me read two others, though it is not necessary, I am sure, to the audience who heard the remarks.

Here is what I said in that same speech:

All good Union men at the North, by reason of the condition of things, being compelled to go into the Federal Army as others in the South of a like character who had no sympathy with secession were compelled to go into secession, it was by the aid of the democracy of the North, of the conservative men of the North who did not agree to absolute nationalism, who did not agree to the doctrine of consolidation, who did not agree to the absolute theory of a national government in the Federal head—it was by the aid of these democrats and conservative men that the Federal armies were enabled to triumph and crush out secession. A united North overpowered a divided South.

Is not that a fair statement, and is that a fair representation to the country of my position on that subject which the Senator from Maine made. But, again, hear what I further said in a few sentences preceding what the Senator from Maine read:

Now, we have tried sectionalism and we have abandoned it, and therefore we cannot consistently affiliate with the republican party. We are for national parties now. We come back to the grand old party of the North that never went off after secession, that never went after the Baals of consolidation. If there are any men on this earth for whom I have a higher regard than others, they are the democrats of the North. I know those of us at the South who were for the Union went through a trying ordeal, and none can ever know how trying it was except those who passed through it; but it seems to me the northern democrats who were so maligned and abused by the republicans went through a greater, for when the crisis came they that had no sympathy with the objects or purposes of the republican party shouldered their arms and marched side by side with the republicans of the North to put down their real friends in the South, and they did it. And yet, notwithstanding their fidelity to the Union, notwithstanding so many hundreds of thousands of democrats periled their all in the war, you abuse, you malign them, you give them no credit for it. And why do we affiliate with them? Because when we grounded our arms they met us as brethren and not as enemies.

How did I represent, and how is any Senator who has any regard for accuracy in debate justified in stating that I represented that the democrats alone saved the Union and that the republicans did nothing even to help in that work? Where is anything to justify such an interpretation? Sir, is it not true? A stranger from any other country coming into these Halls would never suspect that it was true if he listened only to that side. He would conclude that every democrat in the North refused to co-operate in the war and perhaps were what the gentleman is pleased to term rebel. He would conclude in listening to the views of gentlemen on that side of the Chamber that nobody went to battle but republicans.

Sir, take the muster-rolls of your Armies at Antietam, at Gettysburgh, and Appomattox, everywhere take the muster-rolls of the Federal armies and strike from them the democrats who were there, and will any sane man say that the war against secession would have been successful? Does any man believe it? Then, why is it that when I represent on this floor that without the aid of northern democrats the war against secession never would have been successful, and that therefore all the credit of putting down what you call the rebellion is not due to the republican party; why is it that gentlemen on that side take offense? Nay, more; is it fair, Senators—without meaning to be offensive—is it honorable for you to abuse and malign and detract from the merits of the northern democracy when you know that without their co-operation the war on the part of the Federal Government would have been an utter failure? Give all credit. There were many republicans, hundreds of thousands of them, that acted bravely and nobly. But in the confederate army it was a common report and believed that the best fighters, certainly as good fighters as any in the Federal Army, were the democrats. And yet gentlemen ridicule them!

Mr. President, I have another duty to perform which I take some pleasure in performing and yet feel some pain in performing, for it is always painful to have to refer to myself. I do not know why it is, but there seems to be a persistent effort on the part of the republican party of the North, encouraged I am sorry to say by some Senators here, to present me to the northern people as a cruel, brutal man, bloodthirsty, willing to kill everybody, and that I had made an especial record of that sort during the war. Soon after my first appearance in Congress, the Senator from Maine deemed it proper to make a bitter assault upon the character of the people of the South in relation to the prisoners held by them during the war. Familiar with the facts as I was, and knowing that the representations made by the Senator from Maine were utterly untrue, I deemed it my duty to reply and state the facts from the records and official letters of the Federal Government itself. In the midst of that discussion the Senator from Maine interrupted me—interrupted me with a question that had no relevancy whatever to the subject under discussion, and I will now detain the Senate by reading what then occurred, because I wish to get everything upon this subject fairly and fully before the Senate. I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 11, 1876:

Mr. BLAINE. I believe the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HILL] was a member of the confederate senate. I find in a historical book of some authenticity of character that in the confederate congress Senator Hill, of Georgia, introduced the following resolution, relating to prisoners——

Mr. HILL. You are putting me on trial now, are you? Go ahead.

Mr. BLAINE. This is the resolution:

"That every person pretending to be a soldier or officer of the United States who shall be captured on the soil of the Confederate States after the 1st day of January, 1863, shall be presumed to have entered the territory of the Confederate States with the intent to incite insurrection and abet murder; and, unless satisfactory proof be adduced to the contrary before the military court before which the trial shall be had, shall suffer death. This section shall continue in force until the proclamation issued by Abraham Lincoln, dated at Washington on the 22d day of September, 1862, shall be rescinded, and the policy therein announced shall be abandoned, and no longer."

I take pleasure in reading this for one reason. I have made it a rule all my life to state, when I speak, what I believe to be exactly the truth. Even though one may appear sometimes at a little disadvantage by stating the truth, it is the best rule after all to adhere under all circumstances exactly to the truth.

Mr. HILL. I will say to the gentleman from Maine very frankly that I have not the slightest recollection of ever hearing that resolution before.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman does not deny, however, that he was the author of it.

Think of a man asking another if he denied that he was the author of a resolution which he had frankly said he had no recollection of ever having heard of before!

Mr. HILL. I do not know. My own impression is that I was not the author; but I do not pretend to recollect the circumstances. If the gentleman can give me the circumstances under which the resolution was introduced, they might recall the matter to my mind.

Mr. BLAINE. Allow me to read further:

"October 1, 1862.—The judiciary committee of the confederate congress made a report and offered a set of resolutions upon the subject of President Lincoln's proclamation, from which the following are extracts:

"2. Every white person who shall act as a commissioned or non-commissioned officer commanding negroes or mulattoes against the Confederate States, or who shall arm, organize, train, or prepare negroes or mulattoes for military service, or aid them in any military enterprise against the Confederate States, shall, if captured, suffer death.

"3. Every commissioned or non-commissioned officer of the enemy who sh cite slaves to rebellion, or pretend to give them freedom under the aforementioned act of Congress and proclamation, by abducting or causing them to be abducted or inducing them to abscond, shall, if captured, suffer death."

Thereupon Senator Hill, of Georgia, is recorded as having offered the resolution I have read.

Mr. HILL. I was chairman of the judiciary committee of the senate.

Mr. BLAINE. And this resolution came directly from that committee?

Mr. HILL. It is very probable that, like the chairman of the Committee on the Rules at the last session, I may have consented to that report. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman then admits that he did make that report?

Mr. HILL. I really do not remember it. I think it very likely.

A MEMBER, (to Mr. BLAINE.) What is the book?

Mr. BLAINE. The book from which I have read is entitled "Republicanism in America," by R. Guy McClellan. It appears to be a book of good credit and authenticity. I merely want it settled whether the gentleman from Georgia was or was not the author of that resolution.

Mr. HILL. I say to the gentleman frankly that I really do not remember.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman does not say he was not the author.

Mr. HILL. I do not. I will say this: I think I was not the author. Possibly I reported the resolution. It refers in terms to "pretended," not real soldiers.

Mr. BLAINE. I thought that inasmuch as the gentleman's line of argument was to show the character of the confederate policy, this might aid him a little in calling up the facts pertinent thereto. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HILL. With all due deference to the gentleman, I reply he did not think any such thing. He thought he would divert me from the purpose of my argument and break its force by——

Mr. BLAINE. Oh no.

Mr. HILL. He thought he would get up a discussion about certain measures presented in the confederate congress having no relation to the subject now under discussion, but which grew out of the peculiar relation of the Southern States to a population then in servitude—a population which the confederate government feared might be incited to insurrection—and measures were doubtless proposed which the confederate government may have thought it proper to take to protect helpless women and children in the South from insurrection. But I shall not allow myself to be diverted by the gentleman to go either into the history of slavery or of domestic insurrection, or, as a friend near me suggests, "John Brown's raid." I know this, that if I or any gentleman on the committee was the author of that resolution, which I think more than probable, our purpose was not to do injustice to any man, woman, or child North or South, but to adopt what we deemed stringent measures within the laws of war to protect our wives and children from servile insurrection and slaughter while our brave sons were in the front. That is all, sir.

I called at the Library some time after this discussion occurred for the purpose of getting the book to which the Senator from Maine, then the gentleman from Maine, referred. It was not in the Library; had not been, I suppose, returned by the gentleman; at least it was not in; so the Librarian told me. I let the question, therefore, pass from my mind, being indifferent about these personal matters and really having no recollection whatever of the resolution referred to. Some time later I went to the Library again, indeed but a short time since, and found the book to which the gentleman alluded, and from which he quoted; and I find that the gentleman from Maine quoted correctly what appears in this book, except that he left out one remark which I think he ought to have stated, but which, I frankly confess, if he had stated might not have refreshed my mind, as it did not when I saw this book. The gentleman left out the following remark of the author following immediately upon what he quoted:

The confederate congress finally left the subject to President Davis. A general exchange of prisoners under the recognized rules of war was soon after effected, and the war progressed without the black flag of the democracy of the South, save at Fort Pillow and a few other places.

If that portion had been read it possibly, though I doubt it, might have showed me that the subject to which the resolution or the pretended resolution referred related to retaliatory measures that were proposed in the confederate congress on a certain contingency; but I must confess that after reading this book I was unable even to suppose what the truth was; my recollection was still an utter blank. But I read in this book other facts which very thoroughly convinced me that a more untruthful and unreliable book was never written. In my opinion it would be impossible for human ignorance and human malice combined to get up a more inveterate calumny against any people than this book has contrived to get up against the southern people. It is utterly untrue.

But, sir, I have been more fortunate, and almost by accident. I have found in Appleton's Annual Cyclopedia for 1862 quite a full reference to this whole subject, and the reference at least is ample to bring the whole subject to my recollection, and it will be seen now why I was utterly unable to recollect the facts when quoted by the Senator from Maine and when repeated in this book by R. Guy McClellan. The facts as quoted and the facts as repeated are utterly untrue and form a miserable perversion that ought to destroy the reputation of any one who voluntarily made such a statement. Of course I presume that the Senator from Maine in that transaction relied solely upon the book from which he read, but he seemed to be rather anxious to give it the character of a book of good reputation and authenticity.

Now, sir, I want the attention of the Senate a moment. It appears from the facts as they are given in Appleton's Cyclopedia, under the head of "confederate congress," of "prisoners of war," and "public documents," wherein the entire correspondence is given, that the following state of facts existed, which immediately brought up not the resolution but certain proposed action by the Senate of the Confederate States. Everybody will remember that soon after the beginning of the war one of the most serious differences between the belligerents was as to whether the Federal Government would recognize the confederate government as a belligerent. There was much feeling upon that subject. The Federal authorities refused for a long time to do so. You remember the capture of our privateersmen, some eighty-five or one hundred in number, who were imprisoned and condemned to be treated as traitors. Their execution was prevented, because in the mean time the confederate government had also made captures and selected hostages to be executed in case those privateersmen were executed. Quite a correspondence grew up upon that. Prisoners were captured on both sides during the spring of 1862, sometimes more on one side, sometimes more on the other, and quite a correspondence was had during that whole year for the purpose of getting up a cartel for the exchange of prisoners. There was only partial success. In the mean time a bitter state of feeling was growing up on both sides. Any gentleman can see what that feeling was by reading the preamble to the act reported by the majority of the judiciary committee at the time alluded to.

It was charged that persons under the guise of Federal soldiers were endeavoring to incite insurrection in the Southern States, were capturing unarmed citizens; that men were insulting women, were burning houses, and committing a great many acts of that sort at a time when the Federal Government refused to recognize the confederate government as a belligerent power. There were also some notable instances of alleged cruelty and brutality at various places.

In the midst of this correspondence, and before the question had been settled, Mr. Lincoln issued his proclamation, in September, 1862, announcing the emancipation of the slaves of the Confederate States on the 1st of January, 1863. That proclamation, coming as it did, was heralded as a purpose on the part of Mr. Lincoln to incite insurrection among the slaves of the South, and to murder the women and children and old men while the young men were absent in the army. It created a great deal of feeling. This Senate cannot appreciate the feeling it did create. The confederate congress met in August, 1862. It is proper for me to state that I did not believe that Mr. Lincoln had any such purpose in issuing his emancipation proclamation, and I so openly and publicly avowed. I did not believe that Mr. Lincoln desired to incite insurrection among the slaves of the South or desired that brutal treatment should be visited upon the unarmed citizens of the Confederate States, and I believed further that if he did so intend it would prove an utter brutum fulmen, and would fail. I believed, on the contrary, Mr. Lincoln's purpose in issuing that proclamation was political and for a northern purpose. That was my opinion.

In this condition of things the matter was brought by a resolution of a senator from Louisiana, Mr. Semmes, before the confederate senate, and that resolution offered by Mr. Semmes was referred to the judiciary committee. The resolution simply instructed the committee to inquire as to what retaliatory and retributive legislation was necessary or proper in view of the condition of things which I have laid before the Senate. When that committee met, what will this Senate believe, what will it think when I inform them that the fact is here stated, and it is true, that in the midst of all that excitement, natural, honest excitement, in the midst of that alarm among our people, I, who have been held up as the bloody man on that occasion, was the only man who utterly opposed passing any retaliatory legislation on the subject?

Finding, however, as I stated, a general purpose, or belief, or opinion, among the senators and on the judiciary committee that some retaliatory legislation ought to be enacted, I prepared a bill from which I will read to the Senate that portion which has not been read. The judiciary committee, all but two of them, agreed to a bill which is here quoted in full. That bill was not intended, as the authors of it declared, to make it criminal for a man to be a soldier in the Federal Army, but I thought it might bear that construction. Therefore I refused to join in reporting it, but agreed to it if that construction could be made explicit. I would not agree to make it a crime for any man to belong to the Federal Army, or to assume that he was a criminal because he belonged to the Federal Army. It is just to that committee to say that they disclaimed and denied that that was the proper interpretation of their bill. I thought it would be subject to that construction, and therefore I declined to agree to it. Another senator offered another resolution, not a bill. He proposed a resolution very violent in character, in which he declared that the rules of civilized warfare had been repudiated by the Federal Government and should be repudiated by the confederate government. I will say in defense of that man—he is dead and gone—that he sincerely believed that policy would bring the war to a speedy termination. It only shows how men can be misjudged.

I could not agree to any of these propositions, and refused to join in reporting any of them, but I drafted a bill which would steer clear of the difficulty which I had insisted might attach to the bill of the majority of the committee, and reported it, not for adoption but for consideration, if any legislation should be adopted at all. Now, I want to read the first section of that bill. The gentleman from Maine asked me if I had introduced a resolution, and what he quoted as the resolution is the second section of this act, and it is quoted in this book by McClellan as a resolution, an independent resolution offered by me. When I come to see the whole facts I find that what they call a resolution was the second section of a bill proposed by me. The writer left out the first section, which thoroughly explained the second, and shows precisely what I meant. I want to read that first section now to the Senate:

> That if any person singly, or in organized bodies, shall, under pretense of waging war, kill or maim, or in any wise injure the person of any unarmed citizen of the Confederate States, or shall destroy, or seize, or damage the property, or invade the house or domicil, or insult the family of such unarmed citizen; or shall persuade or force any slave to abandon his owner, or shall, by word or act, counsel or incite to servile insurrection within the limits of the Confederate States, all such persons, if captured by the forces of the Confederate States, shall be treated as criminals, and not as prisoners of war, and shall be tried by a military court, and, on conviction, suffer death.

I do not believe there is a Senator on that side who would disagree to that section. I especially want to read to the Senate the language I used in presenting that bill to the confederate senate. Here it is, fortunately reported in this work:

> Mr HILL, of Georgia. I must be allowed to say for myself—

Now, Senators, mark you, this is after the other bill by the committee had been reported. This is after Mr. Phelan, of Mississippi, had reported his substitute. I came last and said:

> I must be allowed to say for myself that I regard the proclamation of Mr. Lincoln as a mere brutum fulmen, and so intended by its author. It is to serve a temporary purpose at the North. I fear we are dignifying it beyond its importance. As the senate has concluded to notice it, I am in favor of the simplest and most legal action. We must confine our action within the line of right under the laws of nations. In my opinion we have the right to declare certain acts as crimes, being in conflict with civilized war, and the actors as criminals; and a criminal, though a soldier, is not entitled to be considered a prisoner of war. While, therefore, I approve the general idea to treat persons guilty of certain acts as criminals, contained in the bill reported by the senator from Louisiana, [Mr. Semmes,] and agreed to that report as being the one most favored by the majority of the committee, I also, in accordance with the understanding of the committee, propose the following bill, and ask that it be printed for the consideration of the senate.

And, sir, what are the facts? In the excited condition of the country then, I stood up in that senate and I refused to agree to any legislation except that which simply made wrongs committed upon an unarmed citizen criminal acts. Why, sir, I know the honorable Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] and I believe every honorable man on that side of the Chamber would say that it was right to provide by law for the punishment of those who should make war upon unarmed citizens, old men, women, and children in their homes. That was all I proposed to do, and I did not even propose to do that. I advised the confederate senate to take no action at all—to pass no bill on the subject of retaliation. I knew the dangers to which it would lead. I knew the sufferings that might result. I thought passion was already too high. I thought the motives of Mr. Lincoln in issuing that proclamation were misconceived. I said first, "I propose no action." Secondly, "If you will act I insist that you make nothing criminal but acts of wrong upon unarmed citizens, whether committed by anybody, soldiers or otherwise; but I advised in conclusion that it would be best to pass the matter over; that we were dignifying it unnecessarily. I did not believe the insurrections would take place that were apprehended. And, sir, I have the pleasure of saying to this Senate, as the record here shows, the confederate senate adopted my suggestion and passed none of these measures.

Sir, let my part in this transaction pass. I am an unimportant individual in this country; but I challenge the gentleman to take the annals of war and point me to a single instance in the history of any country where under circumstances half so threatening the authorities were half so considerate and moderate. The whole confederacy has been held up to the country as proposing and passing these laws to punish Federal soldiers with death because they were Federal soldiers. I have been placarded to the whole North, with the New York Tribune in the lead, as a man especially brutal, proposing in the confederate senate as an independent measure voluntarily offered by myself a resolution to treat Federal soldiers as criminals simply because they were Federal soldiers. And now the facts most conclusively show there was not only no truth in the charge, but that the very contrary of the charge is the truth.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me, inasmuch as he referred to me, I merely wish to ask him one question. As I understood the reading of the first section of that bill, it provided that individuals, singly or organized bodies, should be punished if they interfered with the private property of citizens unarmed. I do not ask the question with a view of entering into this discussion, but I ask if that would not apply to a foraging party that might be sent out for the purpose of obtaining fodder, corn, wheat, pork, or anything of that kind for the use of the Army? I ask whether it would not apply to that class of men where they took this property from private citizens unarmed?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I thank the Senator for asking me the question. I see his motive is good, and on this question I want no misunderstanding.

Mr. LOGAN. It struck me at the time that it would, and I suggested it for the purpose of ascertaining.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. It would not. If you will notice the language of the whole bill you will find, and even my language in introducing it shows, that it is confined not to real soldiers but simply to those who acting under pretense might go on marauding excursions under the protection of Federal uniforms. It did not apply to lawful soldiers in any capacity. Although the question of the Senator from Illinois is a very proper one and a very natural one, the Senator will see that I was utterly opposed to any legislation that was not strictly within the line of right and the law of nations. I call attention to the language of the act again:

That if any person singly, or in organized bodies, shall, under pretense of waging war.

It simply struck at what we believed would be organized bands of men taking advantage of Mr. Lincoln's proclamation to go into the Southern States under pretense of waging war for the purpose really of plunder upon the unarmed citizens. This was intended to meet that case; but for fear of the opposite construction, believing, as I say, that Mr. Lincoln's proclamation had no such purpose and could have no such effect, I insisted that nothing should be done, not even that that bill should be passed, and it was not passed. It never did become a law. I myself was opposed to it. I simply proposed it as an alternative proposition to avoid what I thought might be the difficulties of other propositions submitted.

Now, gentlemen on the other side, we differ in politics, and we give each other manly blows in consequence of our differences of political opinion, but I submit to every fair-minded man on that side of the Chamber, is there anything brutal in my conduct there? Is it not everything to the contrary? Sir, whether the republican press at the North shall correct the misrepresentations which they have so industriously circulated upon this subject, and which they have made this resolution or pretended resolution the excuse for circulating, is a matter which I shall leave to their own sense of honor and truth.

I am notified in the debate which occurred in 1876 of a fact which I had heard before. A distinguished gentleman of the republican party had taken the pains to send South and gather up all my records, and they say they found them quite voluminous. Really I have never preserved any myself; I have never made a habit of preserving my own speeches and letters. I am told that there is much in that record inconsistent with what I have said upon this floor.

Mr. President, I claim no superiority of intellect over others; none whatever. In view of the troubles which have cursed our country during the past twenty years, it seems to me every man who pretends to have been a statesman during that trying period ought to feel humbled that the statesmanship of this country was wholly insufficient to avert such a cruel and wicked war; it ought, I say, to humble in the dust every man in the country. I feel humbled in view of my utter inability to accomplish the good I so much desired; I certainly feel nothing like boasting. But he who here or elsewhere assails the sincerity of my convictions, the candor of my utterances, the honesty of my action, and the kindness of my nature, my devotion to the Union of the States under the Constitution, or my fidelity to any and every trust, is simply "a liar, and the truth is not in him."

Upon two subjects I stand here and throw not only to the other side but to the world a proud and confident defiance. Search all my letters, public and private, rake through the earth, you cannot find in one of them one line, one word, one syllable to justify the charge that anywhere before the war, during the war, or since the war I ever spoke in the slightest degree disrespectfully of the Union of these States under the Constitution of my country. There have been times, I confess, when I have almost despaired of its preservation, and there may be found words sometimes of despondency. You will find much against secession, you will find much against the republican party, you will find much against the war, and you will find burning words against reconstruction. All that is true; but against the Union of these States partly national and partly federal, against this confederate nation as explained by Madison and expounded by Webster, I have had no feeling but one of perpetual adoration from the time I understood it to this hour; and upon that subject I defy criticism and challenge malice. I know it has been frequently said that I have been inconsistent. That is untrue.

Sir, I have had to submit to many things I did not approve. I did not approve secession, but when the will of my State was declared I submitted to it. I did not approve of the war of subjugation, but when subjugation was accomplished I submitted to it. I did not approve of reconstruction. I believe to-day it has inflicted a deeper wound upon the vitals of our constitutional system than both secession and the war combined, and I did resist it with all the power and zeal, and even invective, I could command, but when reconstruction was accomplished I submitted to it. But I rejoice that one grand fact on which I always kept my mind remains unchanged. I did fear that the nation could not survive the war. I did fear that in some form the liberties of the people would be subverted and destroyed. I did fear that the character of our Government (and I explained it the other day) would be utterly changed. But, sir, the fact to which I allude with so much pride and satisfaction is that we have passsd through secession, through the war, and even through the carpet-bag infamies of the South, and the character of our Government still remains essentially the same; it has never been changed. The thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments, which give certain additional rights to a portion of the people of the country, have not changed in any degree the relations between the States and the Union, nor in any manner the character of our confederate, Federal, and National Government, mixed and composite, as Mr. Madison says it is; and I rejoice that it has been preserved. I look back through that long night of danger and threatening and feel that every man in this country ought to rejoice that we have passed through that angry storm of passion and hatred, as I trust we are through, with our Constitution still undestroyed; and it ought to be the pride and ambition of every public man of every party to see to it that it shall be re-established and re-enthroned in the hearts of the people.

But, sir, I come to the other subject upon which I want to throw out a defiance. I have passed through the war. I have seen scenes of suffering, and many of them. I have seen occasions when many might be tempted to be cruel and unkind; but I defy any human being, I care not what his position is, to put his finger on a single word or act of mine that was ever cruel to a human being It is impossible to do so, and tell the truth. I am a man of positive convictions; I denounce wrong, and have done it unsparingly; but cruelty, unkindness, is no part of my nature, and was never committed by me.

It is not for me, Mr. President, to parade to this country and to this Senate my acts of kindness, and I shall not do it. They were not committed for that purpose. But there is one incident in my life which, as it reflects credit upon others perhaps more than upon myself, and was somewhat of a public character, and as living witnesses are abundant to prove it, I will take occasion to state to the Senate briefly. During the month of April, 1865, the Federal Army under General Wilson passed from Alabama into Georgia, just previously to the surrender of General Johnston and General Lee. The main army under General Wilson entered Georgia at Columbus. There was a detachment of Federal soldiers, four thousand I understood, under Colonel La Grange, that entered the State of Georgia at West Point, which is in the county in which I resided, and sixteen miles from the county seat, my residence. Hearing of the approach of that army, of course I left hastily. Standing in the ashes of Atlanta, seventy miles away, I received two messages simultaneously. One was that my own house was burning; the other was that General Lee had surrendered. Imagine my surprise when on returning to my home a few days after I found that my house had not only not been burned, but that my family had not been in the slightest degree disturbed, and that a Federal soldier had not put his foot on my premises, the most conspicuous place in the town. Every other citizen perhaps had been visited, and some public houses had been burned, warehouses, &c. This was a mystery, and a very great mystery, and to none more a mystery than to myself. I expected, of course, that I should suffer above any other citizen of the town. I suffered not at all, and all others suffered more or less, and some very severely. It was a mystery to the town; it was the general talk how was it.

No man doubted my fidelity to the confederacy, because at that very moment and for two months before I had been the only public man in the confederacy on the stump trying to rally the people against unconditional surrender. Of course the event was of sufficient consequence to induce me to make an effort to explain the mystery. I was told on inquiry that at the battle of West Point, for there was a considerable little battle fought there, a young Federal officer was severely wounded who was a favorite with Colonel La Grange in command, and while not dangerously wounded he was so painfully wounded that he could not go on with the Federal forces. I fortunately had a niece living in the town of West Point whose husband was a physician and surgeon. Knowing, as was afterward reported, that the act would be altogether agreeable to me, he went and offered his services to take that young wounded Federal officer to his home and care for him. I supposed that had something to do with it.

Then my slaves, who were faithful and devoted to the last hour, claimed that they had gone to the Federal headquarters, for the Federal troops camped two nights and a day in the town, and interposed for the protection of my family. That I supposed also had something to do with it. After all the armies had surrendered, in the month of May, a detachment of Federal soldiers under somebody's order, I understand here at Washington, perhaps the Secretary of War, came to La Grange, and at two o'clock in the morning arrested me and took me off to Atlanta. While waiting there for transportation to Fort La Fayette a gentleman came to see me who said he came directly from Colonel La Grange, who was then in the city of Macon, and received the following facts from his own lips in explanation of my exemption from pillage on that occasion. Colonel La Grange stated that during the summer or fall of 1864, while the armies of General Johnson and General Sherman were north of Atlanta, in the northern part of Georgia, a number of ladies, northern ladies by birth, who had been residing in the South and who had passed safely through General Johnson's line under passports from the confederate government, on their return North were captured in General Sherman's line and carried to his headquarters under suspicion of being spies. They were of course properly required to give an account of themselves.

It turned out that these ladies happened to be some among many who had written to me frequently, and on this occasion especially, to Richmond, asking my advice as to whether under the circumstances of privation and suffering in the Southern States I would advise them to leave the people who they said had been so kind to them, though northern ladies, and return to their friends in the North, who had abundance, and, if I would give that advice, to give them the proper means of getting through the lines. I sent them everything they needed and advised them to go.

I never heard from them any more. I sent them passports and everything else necessary to take them to their friends in the North. When these ladies were required at General Sherman's headquarters to give an account of themselves they were naturally quite exuberant and extravagant in their account of my own treatment of them. Colonel La Grange was at that time in General Sherman's headquarters, I believe, I am not sure—a member of his staff. The Senator from Illinois will know better; but at least he was there. He became acquainted with these ladies, and heard the story of this kindness, and much in relation to myself that I will not venture to relate. As he approached the town of La Grange, the place of my residence, these facts detailed to him by these ladies came to his recollection, and he informed this gentleman that when he reached within two miles of my residence he stopped his whole command. He gave them first the information that at the next place a confederate senator resided, and they would perhaps think that they had a right to raid upon him; but he issued an order forbidding, under severe penalties, any soldier from putting his foot upon my premises under any pretext, and it was strictly obeyed. That was the solution of the mystery.

Mr. President, we are told that when God created the heavens and the earth on the third day he said, "Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed and the fruit tree yielding fruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself, upon the earth; and it was so." From that day to this it has been so. Yet all these seeds must be sown in their season and in the climate adapted to their nature, else they will perish. But, sir, there is a seed which will bear fruit in all seasons and in every clime under the heavens. Plant it in the cold where the snows never melt, or in the heat where the frosts never come; scatter it on the naked rocks or in the most fertile soil; drop it in the water or on the land and everywhere, every seed will germinate and grow and reward the sower. It is tilled by a hand that never tires; it is watched by an eye that never sleeps; it is trained by a power that tempers all the elements to its healthiest maturity. That seed, sir, is kindness, and I have garnered its fruits when and where they were least expected. Will leaders of a great party, will men who aspire to hold in their hands the destinies of millions living and of many more millions yet to live, never learn that abuse and slander and calumny and misrepresentation are not the means which wise or good men employ to give peace to a country or prosperity to a people or stability to a government? Will the people themselves at the North never learn that brawling treason and traitors at men for honest differences of opinion is not argument and proves nothing except that the brawlers are neither statesmen nor patriots?

Mr. President, in looking over this record of 1862 I find a debate which occurred in the confederate senate that I had forgotten between a senator from Texas, Mr. Wigfall, who is doubtless known to members on this floor, and myself. It is a singular and a curious discussion in some respects. The question had arisen what was the relation of a citizen of one of the Confederate States who adhered to the Union after secession to the Confederate States themselves. The senator from Texas, Mr. Wigfall, as was the natural corollary of his view of politics, held that the relation was that of a traitor. I denied it and took the position that the relation was that of an alien enemy, and upon that point the discussion was had. It would be interesting perhaps to those who listened to my argument a month ago to hear this, but I shall not read it all. In discussing that question I made use of these words:

> I ask this: Do you hold Andrew Johnson, who abandonedthe State of Tennessee and never came under obligation to the confederate government, to be a traitor? Can he be a traitor? I am discussing the general proposition. I say that, as regards every man who held allegiance to the United States originally, while he had a right to adhere to that allegiance, there was no power on earth could break his allegiance against his consent. This proposition I assert, and when a gentleman denies it he need not talk about State rights and individual rights. He erects the government into a despotism, whether it goes by the name of monarchy, aristocracy, or democracy. If you can lay hold of a citizen and tear him loose against his will from his acknowledged allegiance, you exercise the greatest power a tyrant is capable of exercising. I say again, that no power can rightly force a man to break his allegiance. The very violation of allegiance implies a consent of the will.
> The senator says that there are no citizen s of the Confederate States. But the constitution says there are. "The electors in each State shall be citizens of the Confederate States." The gentleman says it does not mean that. I should suspect any theory that drove me to destroy or change the language of the constitution itself. Here it is plainly written; and because I abide by it the gentleman calls me a "nationalist." God save the mark!
> Mr. WIGFALL. I hope he will.
> Mr. HILL. I have always understood that the fundamental principle of State rights is, that the power shall be found in the grant, and that it is to be defined by the words used, and that "construction" was the old theory of the nationalists.
> I grant that no person can be a citizen of the Confederate States who is not a citizen of some one of the States, but it does not follow that a citizen of a State is necessarily a citizen of the Confederate States. Gentlemen may indorse sublimated theories that define our constitution after the manner of the interpreters of the will in Dean Swift's Tale of a Tub. They wanted to construe it, not according to what it said, but according to the measure of their own wishes. The text did not suit them, so they took sentences; but sentences would not give the meaning, so they took words; they could not find the right consecutive words, so they took syllables, and, finding they would not do, they selected letters, and putting them together they made a will to suit their taste. Gentlemen upon the same principle may destroy the constitution, and make it mean what they please, in order to accomplish their purposes. But I am this much of a State-rights man: I deny the confederate government has any power not granted; and I say you must look to the language of the grant to find the extent of the power, and that which necessarily results from the grant—the power to carry out the grant must be in the grant.
> There is no necessity for the introduction of these theories to bring about a conflict between the State governments and the confederate government. My idea—I do not know whether it is a national one or not; certainly it does not depend upon a change of words in the Constitution, upon refined arguments and well-spun theories for its justification—is this: the States were originally sovereign, independent States—they are original and sovereign yet—and as such they had a right to exercise absolute and sovereign power. They have by their own free will and consent delegated these sovereign powers to a common government. And they made it a government, not simply an agency, for they call it a government in the compact, and they have said all citizens of the respective States shall be citizens of the Confederate States. They have established laws requiring these citizens to obey that which the States have agreed they shall obey—the common compact.
> To the extent of the powers delegated, the confederate government exercises the sovereign power. I grant that it did not have original national sovereignty, nor do I care whether it has or not. It has the power to declare war, the power to make money, to collect duties, and these powers are sovereign powers; they are expressly delegated to the confederate government. Violence done to the government by a citizen is treason, because it is a violation of the citizen's allegiance.
> If we, upon the part of the government, will exercise powers plainly delegated to us, and exercise none that are not delegated, there will never be any conflict between the States and the confederate government. If the States will exercise their reserved powers properly, and the confederate government exercises its delegated powers properly, there will never be any difficulty.
> I say to gentlemen here who make such a clamor in defense of State sovereignty, for which they say this war has been waged, that if they will recur to history they will find that the great cause of the disruption was the interference, by States, with a compact into which they had solemnly entered. No man found cause for dissolution in anything the Federal Government did; for all declared they wanted to preserve the Union until Lincoln was elected. Not against the Supreme Court—that tribunal was faithful to the last. Not against the Federal Congress, for there you had a majority. Not against Mr. Buchanan—par excellence the man chosen by the South. What was the difficulty, Mr. President? The Northern States, sir, passed their personal-liberty bills and nullified the acts of Congress. The State governments would not render up fugitives, declaring they were not criminals because they stole slaves, which were not property; and the State judges took it upon themselves in their State courts to set aside the acts of Congress for carrying out the fugitive-slave law. These were the enormities that drove the South to her condition of determined secession. I know that through my section of the country these facts had more influence upon the popular mind than any other; and when Mr. Lincoln was elected it was thought he was seeking not to continue the Federal Government, but pervert the Government, and to accomplish through Federal agency what the Northern States had already sought to do. That perfected the argument.

For uttering those sentiments in that senate I was denounced as a consolidationist, as a nationalist by one of the most ultra representatives of what I call the other extreme theory, that is Senator Wigfall, of Texas, and in reply to him I said:

> I am not national in one sense; I am not Federal in another, I am sure. I regard the reserved rights of the States as much as any other man, and will never seek to intrench upon them. The powers I am sworn to exercise I will exercise with strict reverence for the purposes of the grant. I think if we would all go to work in the exercise of delegated powers, and act instead of theorizing, we would accomplish more satisfactory results for the people.
> Mr. WIGFALL. I propose to answer the gentleman with the simple prefatory remarks, that I am as much astonished at his recollection of the facts as his avowal of principles. For a senator to rise in this confederate congress, within a few brief months after the nation has been dissolved, and declare the Federal Government of the United States never trespassed upon our rights—
> Mr. HILL. I never said that.
> Mr. WIGFALL. If you did not you said something bearing a wonderful resemblance to it.
> Mr. HILL. I said the trespasses of the Federal Government were not the evils alleged by the people in seceding; it was not the trespasses of the Government that influenced the people to secede. I said it was the trespasses of the Northern States in their faithlessness to the common compact.
> Mr. WIGFALL. Well, I ask if they had any complaint against the judiciary?
> Mr. HILL. None.
> Mr. WIGFALL. I need not ask him about the legislative branch, for he says we had no cause of complaint here. "Surely not," he says, "for you had a majority there." His language is plain and unmistakable. Why, sir, in that Congress the black republicans had an overwhelming majority in the House against us, and a tie vote in the Senate, with a black republican casting vote.
> Mr. HILL. It was not from any act of the Supreme Court or of Congress or of the Federal Executive we seceded. I do not say they always did right. I was utterly opposed to the administration of Mr. Buchanan.
> Mr. WIGFALL. He forgets Congress passed a law abolishing slavery in the District of Columbia, declaring no slave should be sold there.
> Mr. HILL. When did it pass?
> Mr. WIGFALL. In 1850.
> Mr. HILL. And the people expressly said they would not secede on account of it.

It is precisely the same theory of government that I gave to this Senate one month ago, and for giving that theory then, for standing then upon the doctrine of Madison and Webster, I was denounced by a secessionist as a nationalist, and for uttering that same doctrine here I am denounced by the consolidationists of the other side of this Chamber as a secessionist. It is the highest proof that the position is a correct one. These two extremes are alike the enemies to the true theory of this government. My life has been a peculiar one. For many years its whole purpose was to arrest secession, because I thought it unwise and suicidal.

Now, the only purpose of my connection with politics is to arrest what I believe before my God the more dangerous enemy to the true character of this Union than the secession party ever was, the consolidation party of this country. They are more dangerous because they are more powerful; they are more dangerous because they are more insidious; they are more dangerous because they are seeking to accomplish the destruction of the States, without which there can be no Union, under color of extraordinary and exclusive devotion to the Union. Sir, I do not say that every member of the republican party intends that. So it was that the great mass of the secession party did not intend the consequences of their action; but I do affirm to-day that the doctrine, the policy, and the whole tendency of the republican party of this country at this day and for years past has been in a direct line to the destruction of the States, and through the destruction of the States to the subversion of the liberties of this country. It will result so, as the inevitable result of your policy. The people are under every obligation—every man at the North, whether democrat or republican, who is sincere in desiring to preserve this Union as our fathers made it, is under obligation to rally to the support of those who oppose the further triumph and success of the republican party.

We hear it frequently said that the mission of the republican party has not yet been completed. In one sense that is true. If I construe the doctrines of that party, its policy, and its tendency correctly the mission of that party will not be accomplished until the States of this Union are utterly destroyed, the liberties of this country are utterly subverted, and a rigid, hopeless despotism shall settle down from one end of this country to the other. That is my sincere conviction.

Why, sir, since I made a speech in this Hall,—I am not going to refer to anything personal, as I see the Senator is not in his seat—but since I made a speech on this subject a month ago here, a distinguished gentleman of the republican party followed, and what remarkable language did he use? I want to call attention to it. Speaking of my own remarks he said:

> Now, what is the exact case as he states it? State rights and nationality were the causes of the war, and the real antagonists; slavery was a mere incident. Secession was the instrument employed by "State rights" in the contest.

I never had such an idea since I was born.

> What was the result of the war? "Secession was crushed out, utterly crushed out." He is particularly anxious for the "country to understand that." But what has become of "State rights," the guilty principal that employed this "secession folly," as he calls it?
> "What has become of State rights, the guilty principal?"

Again he says:

> After all, then, the war only destroyed the incident, (slavery,) and the instrument, (secession,) but the guilty cause of all our woes, the Samson of "State rights," still lives in all his vigor, and is ready to employ any other incidents or instruments that may happen to answer his purpose in the next conflict with nationality.

Here is a Senator standing on this floor, the ambassador of a State specially commissioned to protect the rights of his State, speaking of State rights as the guilty criminal and as the guilty author of all our woe! Will not such utterances alarm the country? Nothing is more common in these Halls than to hear remarks made depreciating, deriding, ridiculing the doctrine of State sovereignty, and declaring it synonymous with secession. Sir, in connection with and side by side let me read the language of one of the best men New England ever produced; it comes in, I think, with exceeding appropriateness. Here is what Oliver Ellsworth, of Connecticut, said directly on this point:

> Under a national government he should participate in the national security, as remarked by Mr. King; but that was all. What he wanted was domestic happiness. The National Government could not descend to the local objects on which this depended. It could only embrace objects of a general nature. He turned his eyes, therefore, for the preservation of his rights to the State governments. From these alone he could derive the greatest happiness he expected in this life. His happiness depends on their existence as much as a new-born infant on its mother for nourishment.

State sovereignty, State authority, State rights, to which this great patriot looked for support as a new-born infant looks to its mother, is denounced in this Hall by a distinguished republican as a guilty criminal, the author of all our woe.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. If it is necessary; if I am misstating a fact.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say, as the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] to whom the Senator from Georgia referred, is not in his seat, that the Senator from Minnesota did not speak of the true rights of the States in the passage to which he refers, but spoke merely of a false doctrine of State rights which speaks of Senators as ambassadors of States.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, I shall be sorry for the Senator from Minnesota if he accepts that as a true explanation—that is all—and in behalf of the Senator from Minnesota who is not here, as I have happened to refer to him, I will say that the speech shows that he had no such explanation. He said just what I have read and I shall be exceedingly careful not to misquote him in the slightest degree. The speech is published in full.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do not wish to give way any further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The Senator from Minnesota was replying to the argument I had made, and I certainly had not defined State rights other than as Mr. Madison and Mr. Webster had defined it. Therefore the explanation offered will not do. I will go on.

Now, sir, in relation to this great man Ellsworth, see what Mr. Webster said about him, and I quote it for two reasons; first, because of the character it gives Mr. Ellsworth; and, second, because of the indorsement by Mr. Webster of the doctrine of Mr. Ellsworth. Mr. Webster said in his celebrated speech in reply to Calhoun:

> And I think I cannot do better than to leave this part of the subject by reading the remarks made upon it in the convention of Connecticut, by Mr. Ellsworth, a gentleman, sir, who has left behind him, on the records of the Government of his country, proofs of the clearest intelligence and of the depest sagacity, as well as the utmost purity and integrity of character. "This Constitution," says he, "defines the extent of the powers of the General Government. If the General Legislature should at any time overleap their limits, the judicial department is a constitutional check. If the United States go beyond their powers, if they make a law which the Constitution does not authorize, it is void; and the judiciary power, the national judges, who, to secure their impartiality, are to be made independent, will declare it to be void. On the other hand, if the States go beyond their limits, if they make a law which is a usurpation upon the General Government, the law is void; and upright, independent judges will declare it to be so."

That language is indorsed by Mr. Webster. That shows that he indorsed the doctrine of State rights and State sovereignty just as contended for by me, which is not secession, but that State right which recognizes the States as sovereign in the exercise of all their reserved powers and the General Government sovereign in the exercise of all its delegated powers. But, sir, I want to read another sentence from Mr. Webster:

> The people, sir, in every State live under two governments. They owe obedience to both. These governments, though distinct, are not adverse. Each has its separate sphere and its peculiar powers and duties. It is not a contest between two sovereigns for the same power, like the wars of the rival houses in England; nor is it a dispute between a government de facto and a government de jure. It is the case of a division of powers between two governments, made by the people, to whom both are responsible. Neither can dispense—

Mark this—

> Neither can dispense with the duty which individuals owe to the other; neither can call itself master of the other; the people are masters of both.

Mr. President, I wish that one short sentence in that language of Mr. Webster could be riveted in the mind of every man in America. What is it? It is that neither of these governments is the master of the other. The secessionists made the mistake of insisting that the State governments were masters of the Federal Government. The republican consolidationists make the mistake of insisting that this General Government is the master of the States and the State governments. It is not true. In the brief, terse, correct, constitutional language of that greatest of constitutional lawyers this country ever produced, neither is the master of the other. The people of this country live under two governments. They are not adverse; they are not enemies; they are not strangers. They are co-laborers in one system in their respective spheres to accomplish the one grand purpose of the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people.

Sir, Senators talk about Mr. Webster differing with himself. He never differed with himself. No better State-rights doctrine from a correct stand-point was ever uttered than was uttered by Mr. Webster in his second speech on Foot's resolution and in this very reply to Mr. Calhoun. What is it? It is that the States are sovereign in their reserved rights, absolutely sovereign in the exercise of their reserved rights, and that this Government has no power over a State in the exercise of her reserved rights, and that on the other hand the same people who made the constitutions of the States made the Constitution of the Federal Government and clothed it with specific powers, and within its specific powers the Federal Government is also supreme, and of course within the delegated powers it is alone supreme, just as the States in their reserved powers are alone supreme.

Sir, I will read one more extract from Mr. Webster, and then I will close. In a great speech which Mr. Webster made at Buffalo, in New York, in 1851, he used this language:

> Now, gentlemen, I wish I had ten thousand voices. I wish I could draw around me the whole people of the United States, and I wish I could make them all hear what I now declare on my conscience as my solemn belief, before the Power who sits on high, and who will judge you and me hereafter, that if this Texan controversy had not been settled by Congress in the manner it was, by the so-called adjustment measures, civil war would have ensued; blood, American blood, would have been shed; and who can tell what would have been the consequences? Gentlemen, in an honorable war, if a foreign foe invade us, if our rights are threatened, if it be necessary to defend them by arms, I am not afraid of blood. And if I am too old myself, I hope there are those connected with me by ties of relationship who are young, and willing to defend their country to the last drop of their blood. But I cannot express the horror I feel at the shedding of blood in a controversy between one of these States and the Government of the United States, because I see in it a total and entire disruption of all those ties that make us a great and happy people.

Sir, those were the grand words, not of a sectionalist, but of a patriot; a man whose intellect towered up to the heavens, whose patriotism covered the continent, and every part of the continent. Sir, in the days of Webster, the great assault on the Constitution of the country was made by secession and nullification; there was no assault made on it from the other direction. Therefore it is that Mr. Webster's grand utterances are left on record against secession and nullification. But if Mr. Webster were living to-day and saw the dangers that threaten the very Constitution and Union which he loved, the very constitutional system of Government which he so well understood, if he were living to-day and could hear these voices of consolidation deriding the doctrine of State rights and State sovereignty, he would thrill this continent with an eloquence such as never characterized him in the days in which he lived, because the danger now his great mind would see is infinitely greater than the danger was then, because, as I have said, it comes from a more dangerous and a more insidious power. Would that Massachusetts would give to the country another Webster!

Sir, I cannot hope even to imitate his greatness; but I should like to follow such a grand man, even if it must be afar off; and I wish like him to have ten thousand voices to-day; I wish I could command his eloquence for one hour; I wish I could speak as he only spoke. I wish every man in America could hear the words which I believe he would utter in much more forcible power when I now declare this Union was not the cause of our war; this Union never shed fraternal blood; this Union never burned the houses and cities and devastated the soil of its own citizens. No, no. All that was the work of a diabolical sectionalism. I would beg the American people to-day, come back from these wanderings, these sectional wanderings, whether in the direction of secession or in the direction of consolidation and despotism; come back to the Constitution as our fathers made it, as Madison explained it, as Webster expounded it, as it now stands unaltered in character by the three new amendments that have been adopted; come back to it as a Union of States; come back to it as partly a national and partly a federal government, such as no other people ever enjoyed and such as no wise people will ever abandon. I earnestly beg the people of the North, if they would preserve this inestimable heritage and transmit its blessings to their posterity, to disband this sectional republican party. No sectional party ever was or ever can be a Union party. It is mere, sheer, naked hypocrisy to pretend so. No man and no party can be true to the whole Union who is false to a part of it: no man and no party can be a proper administrator of this common Government who hates any one section of this country.

I would ring it in the ears of patriots, I would ring it in the ears of statesmen, I would ring it in the ears of all the people North and South, East and West, if we would save further strife and further woe, if we would preserve finally the liberties of this country, we must disband all sectional parties and get back to that Union under the Constitution which knows no section, but does know all the States. Without States there may be empire, and there will be despotism, but there can be no constitutional union; while without union there may be license, and there will be anarchy, but there can be no liberty or security.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President——

Mr. BLAINE. I ask the Senator from Vermont to yield to me a moment. The honorable Senator from Vermont by a previous understanding is entitled to the floor. My desire is at some future day to make some observations on the speech of the Senator from Georgia just made, but I would not if I could interfere with the honorable Senator from Vermont to-day in his right to the floor.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I propose to use the same bill that was used by the Senator from Georgia for the purpose of vindicating the truth of history.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, belonging to the class that believe they serve their party best when they best serve their country, I have rarely indulged in what may be called political debate; but when democratic Senators at this ill-contrived, ill-continued, and ill-tempered session of Congress—notwithstanding that the general welfare and our own health dictate a speedy conclusion of public business—have consumed whole days in partisan speeches and party caucuses, it may be justifiable for me to use at least an hour in showing that the republican party is not so black as democratic oratory would represent, and that the democratic party is far from being so white as the wool which it seeks to wear as its livery.

Using no ornaments of speech, no flowers of rhetoric, I propose to muster from the abundance of the record those economical facts which, as it appears to me, will forever adorn and vindicate the history of the republican party, and which the world will not fail to appreciate nor fail to crown as full of great measures followed by great results.

As a contrast to this, I shall not give a complete inventory of the measures proposed by the democratic party, valuable as it would be to some future collector of curiosities, but shall refer to so many as will display the color and character of the whole. There was said to be in the other end of the Capitol a small platoon of independents, but the platoon mostly follow the democratic party, and when they do not the democratic party follow the platoon. Their measures will be classified separately if for no other purpose than to show that the phœnixes of the one and fiery flying-dragons of the other are all birds of the same feather.

The democratic party appears so anxious to blot out the history of the last twenty years, and to let by-gones sink forever to unremembered by-gones, that its character suffers from the unavoidable inference of having had affinities, creeds, and actions of which, if it is not ashamed, it is no longer proud. It would be far away from my purpose to fall short of justice to any large body of men merely because they differ from me in principles or policy, and therefore I cheerfully concede the wisdom of the democratic party in striving to hush up all references to its faith and patriotism from the dawn of what they begin to style the "so-called rebellion" up to that date when they proposed to starve the Government into subjection by refusing constitutional supplies, and by sweeping from the statutes all vestiges of republican legislation.

Statutes of limitation, however, usually bar facts of a remote date and not those of recent occurrence. I am not about to make any distasteful allusions to the late history of the democratic party, but, before I close, shall refer to the record of some of its proposed present or future measures, and to the question of whether or not these are much better entitled to the favor and confidence of the American people than those contended for under a different flag. I do not propose at this time to revisit the battle-fields of the rebellion, notwithstanding the new attractions offered in the latest commentary by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. HILL,] who says: "No, my good northern democratic brethren, you saved the country at last; you saved the Union in the hour of its peril, not the republican party." This certificate will be a new revelation, even to war democrats, who will be not a little choked by so much flattery; but it will more grieve that more noisy if not larger crowd, once distinguished, shall I say, as "copperheads," to be so strangely decorated; and, if the Senator from Georgia, at the close of their career, is to pronounce their eulogy, they will feel that it "adds a fresh horror to death."

The republican party elected its President and came into power when President Buchanan surrendered the last sad remains of democratic control, March 4, 1861. The Treasury was empty, and the ship of state only escaped from being scuttled because there was no place of refuge to which the rats might flee. Many demands on the Treasury for ordinary expenses could not be met, and $5,000,000 were wanted as the smallest amount which would protect the public credit on debts and interest falling due January 1, 1861. Public proposals for this amount were invited December 18, 1860, and offers were received to the amount of $1,831,000 at 12 per cent. interest or less, and further to the amount of $465,000 at rates ranging from 15 per cent. to 36 per cent. All offers at 12 per cent. or less were accepted, and those above rejected. In contrast with this low state of the public credit under democratic rule, the republican administration since March 1, 1877, has sold bonds and ten-dollar certificates bearing only 4 per cent. interest, to the amount of $846,022,000, thereby effecting the heavy annual reduction of coin interest to the amount of $14,297,177. The charge for annual interest was at its highest point in 1865, and amounted to $150,977,697.87; but on the completion of the present funding operations it will be only $83,773,778.50. The reduction of debt, less cash in the Treasury, for the same time has been $729,249,103.24; and this reduction grieves nobody but the democratic party.

Since March 4, 1861, the republican party has had control and is mainly responsible for congressional legislation, or was so until the democratic party obtained a majority in the House of Representatives in 1875. During these years the war of the rebellion was waged by the democratic solid South, and was only put down by four years of bloody battle, by prodigous cost of treasure, and by the sacrifice of unnumbered lives of priceless value to their families and to their country.

The taxation for the support of the Army and Navy had to be commensurate with the extraordinary exigencies of the war, or on a scale to meet the rebellion at home, and to confront the almost universal sympathy and quasi support of every non-republican goverment in the world. No country ever endured a greater strain or suffered greater national losses, both of men and material, and we are not yet wholly released from the cruel burdens caused by those who then, as now, own unreserved allegiance to the democratic party—a party that cannot truly swear it has not done great and permanent harm to the Republic.

It will not be out of place to make further reference to the position of the country when the republican party came into power, through the elections of 1860, in comparison with its position at the present time. If no greater achievements nor greater growth can be pointed out in any other epoch in our history, notwithstanding the rebellion and notwithstanding the universal depression since 1873 of the industries of the entire world, it would seem a marvel that the party which has been the sole break upon our progress, the hinderance which has prevented a still greater advance, should now have the audacity to denounce the guardians of the nation's life and to ask for the complete control of the future destinies of the Government.

When the republican party obtained the lead there were thirty-four States and five Territories, containing a population of 31,429,891 persons, including 3,952,801 slaves; while there are now thirty-eight States and eight Territories, with a population which may be estimated at not less than 48,000,000, and no slaves.

There were only 31,286 miles of railroads in operation in 1861, which in 1877 had increased to 79,208 miles, the whole costing $4,180,191,727. In 1878 there were 2,747 miles to be added, making a total railway mileage of 81,955 miles. Prematurely built as many of these roads undoubtedly were, yet they have immensely reduced the cost of transportation. The charge in 1860 for a bushel of wheat from Chicago to New York by water was twenty-eight cents, and is now eight and six-tenths cents, or by rail sixteen cents. From Saint Louis to New York an exceptional contract has recently been made by rail as low as seven cents per bushel.

The revenue under the tariff of 1846, as modified in 1857, it will be seen, failed to produce needed revenue in 1860, so that loans had to be resorted to for the ordinary support of the Government. The tariff of 1861, approved by a democratic President, was denounced as a Chinese wall and as utterly prohibitory; but it proved very effective in producing revenue, and by its numerous specific rates of duty instead of ad valorem it also proved effective in planting some permanent and taxable capital in home manufactures. It was an average of 25 per cent. ad valorem imposed in the form of specifics. The many additions and changes which have since been made to it were made for the purpose of obtaining more or less revenue through higher or lower rates of duties. Since the close of the war less revenue has been required, and taxation of all kinds has been repeatedly diminished. When we have a surplus of revenue, the time will have arrived for a reduction of duties as well as for a simplification of the various statutes on the subject, unless it should be found more expedient to part with more of internal revenue.

The receipts from customs for the year ending June 30, 1861, were only $39,582,125.64, and for 1865, under the new tariff, they were $333,714,605.

The amount of pig-iron produced in 1861 was only 821,223 tons, which increased to 2,066,594 tons in 1878.

The exports of manufactured articles in 1860 amounted to $42,408,934, which in 1878 had increased to $135,171,921. There is hardly an article in the tariff list that is not now to be had in our markets at much lower prices than in 1860. Pig-iron, which brought $23 per ton in 1860, is sold now for $18.50. Iron rails, which were sold for $48.75 per ton, are sold now for $33.50. Bessemer steel rails, which in 1866 brought $165 per ton, are now to be had for $41.

The amount of gold and silver in the country in 1860 was estimated at	$200,000,000
And the amount of State-bank currency was	207,000,000
Making a total of	407,000,000

Since that date the amount of coin has been nearly doubled, and the amount of paper currency has been more than trebled.

The amount of gold and silver in the country in 1878, according to the report of the late Director of the Mint, was	$244,353,390
And the amount of silver was	88,090,557
The domestic production of gold for the last ten months, less exports, as estimated by the present Director of the Mint, has been	35,000,000
And of silver for the same time	23,000,000
Making a total of	390,443,947

From our own resources of the precious metals, with this large and constantly accumulating stock on hand, it is conclusively demonstrated that we are able, with nearly four hundred millions of coin, to maintain resumption and to keep our paper currency at par, without any draught upon the supplies abroad. Both gold and silver in the Treasury have actually increased since resumption (together) to the extent of $9,483,707.

In addition to coin, the amount of currency outstanding April 1, 1879, was as follows:

United States legal-tender notes	$346,681,016
National-bank currency	327,969,911
Fractional currency	15,874,781
Notes of gold banks	1,466,600
Total	691,992,308

This, added to our coin, makes a grand total of $1,082,435,255, which would seem to be quite equal in amount to any wants of trade for some years to come, though not quite up to the supreme exigency of a democratic campaign in Ohio.

The excess of the exports of gold and silver coin and bullion in 1860 over imports was $57,996,104, while it was only $3,918,811 in 1878, which leaves almost our entire production of both gold and silver for our own home consumption.

The production of American cotton in 1860 was larger than in any prior year, amounting to 2,275,372,309 pounds, and yet nearly thirty million pounds more were produced in 1878, or 2,305,173,286 pounds, of which 190,189,018 pounds more were retained and manufactured at home than in 1860. All men agree that, beyond the staple crops, the increase of other productions in the Southern States, making them almost self-supporting as to provisions, has been on a grand scale of improvement.

In 1861 the amount of wool produced in the United States was only 75,000,000 pounds, against 207,000,000 pounds in 1878.

In 1860 the anthracite coal produced in Pennsylvania amounted to 9,807,118 tons of 2,240 pounds, against 21,323,000 tons in 1877.

The production of wheat in 1860 amounted to 173,104,924 bushels, against 364,194,146 bushels in 1878. The amount of corn produced in 1860 was 838,792,740 bushels, against 1,342,558,000 bushels in 1878.

Our entire exports in 1860 amounted to $316,242,423, against $695,749,938 in 1878. The imports in 1860 were $353,616,619, against $439,051,532 in 1878. The imports of manufactured commodities in 1860 were $240,245,702; and, notwithstanding the much larger population, the amount in 1878 was no more than $273,772,943.

There is, perhaps, no Department of the Government which more correctly illustrates the growth of the country than the Post-Office Department. I will give a table of comparative results:

	1860.	1878.
Ordinary postal revenues	$8,518,067 40	$29,277,516 95
Total expenditures	$14,874,600 63	$34,165,084 49
Number of railroad routes	349	1,000
Length of railroad routes in miles	27,129	77,120
Aggregate miles of annual transportation on railroad routes	27,653,749	92,120,395
Aggregate miles of annual transportation on other routes	47,071,027	66,064,980
Number of stamps and stamped envelopes issued	245,650,685	932,766,153
Number of postal cards issued	.....	200,630,000
Number of post offices	28,498	49,258
Number of money-orders issued	.....	5,613,117
Value of money-orders from June 30, 1865	.....	$81,442,364 87
Excess of expenditures over revenue	$6,356,533 23	$4,887,567 54
Departmental officers	99	359

The excess of postal expenditures over revenue in the slave-holding States in 1860 was $3,401,463.40, and in the same States in 1878, with greater expenditures, the excess had fallen to $2,427,759.97.

The number of immigrants arriving here for the eleven fiscal years from 1868 to 1878 inclusive have been 3,199,268, and is now steadily on the increase.

The crop of tobacco, according to the census of 1860, (crop of 1859, which was a very large one,) was 428,121,000 pounds, of which 214,000,000 pounds were exported. The average export for the last five years has been 260,674,102 pounds, to which add the leaf manufactured, 193,453,806 pounds, and it makes a total present annual product of 454,127,908 pounds. This shows that with the increase of the crop the export trade has also satisfactorily increased.

The republican party made a reduction in the expenses of the Government every year after the close of the war, and the democratic party is entitled to the credit of contributing, with the aid of the Senate and the Executive, to the same result in the Forty-fourth Congress to the extent of $20,000,000 for the fiscal years of 1877 and of 1878. But the democratic party does not like the strait-jacket of economy, except while it is on trial for good behavior. Already the regular annual appropriations, omitting such permanent appropriations as never appear in the annual bills, like the interest on the public debt, which have been voted by the democratic House are beginning to exceed anything we have had for ten years.

For the last four years—

And I copy from the North American Review the carefully prepared statement by General GARFIELD—they were as follows:

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877	$124,122,010
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878	114,069,483

To this last amount should be added $16,500,000, authorized by law at the last session, but yet to be appropriated, to pay the arrears of pensions, which will swell the amount of the appropriations authorized for the next fiscal year to $178,300,000. Even this large amount must be further increased by the deficiencies which will be required for that year. The appropriations authorized at the last session, not including these deficiencies, exceed by $54,000,000 the amount at the last session of the Forty-fourth Congress, and considerably exceed those of any year since 1869.

It might seem a little absurd for the prodigal, on his return to his father's house, to have called upon his hard-working brother to give an account of the expenditures upon the homestead—to show his books—during the time the prodigal was absent among the harlots; but republicans do not shrink from any scrutiny even of that character. They preserved the Union, with added glories and with the least possible expense. War subjects official integrity to unusual temptations; but the record is before the world, and even hostile inspection and comparison is invited. The loss of money received by the Government during the last term of General Jackson was $10.17 for each $1,000; in Van Buren's time it was $3.01 for each $1,000; in Buchanan's time it was 62 cents for each $1,000; in Lincoln's time it was 10 cents for each $1,000; in General Grant's first term it was 37 cents, and 22 cents for the second term, on each $1,000. That is the way the account stands, and republicans are quite willing the books should be investigated.

Since the close of the war it would be a low estimate to say that $100,000,000 have been paid to citizens of the South for losses caused by the rebellion. Notwithstanding this and all other democratic drawbacks, the material prosperity of the people during all the years of republican ascendency and democratic opposition, I have shown to have been conspicuous and unexampled in the annals of our country. The republicans handed over to the democratic majority in Congress an ample revenue together with a large and handsome surplus in the Treasury. Already new and obnoxious taxes, it is whispered, must supply deficiencies. The books are posted; he who runs may read; and no partisan accountant, no expert, can mystify or hide the stubborn facts. As has already been indicated, I now propose to examine the claims of the democratic party to the future confidence of the people. Is there anything in its history, past or present, that entitles it to lead, upon either fundamental principles of freedom and good government or upon any of the economical and financial questions which most concern the material welfare and prosperity of the country? I am not striving to say bitter things for there has been no time when the republican party has not been to the South, in the words of Sextus Pompeius, "as a friend by inclination; as an enemy from necessity." Nor would I degrade economical and financial questions by making them dependent upon the success or failure of political parties. Much rather would I have these great American questions to be wholly and intelligently decided upon the sole basis of the best interests of the whole country.

The House of Representatives, where the Speaker and committees are all under the domination of the democratic majority, tempered by a solid South, offers some evidence, of a very practical sort, of the measures it seriously proposes in the sixty-five hundred and forty-nine bills introduced during the last Congress, and in the litter of nearly fourteen hundred introduced in one day (April 21) of the present session. The Senate is not without its riches of this kind; but the Senate, since the 4th of March, barely registers the edicts of the House, or seems in the mood of passing, unbolted, whatsoever grist comes from the House. Of course I shall neither weary nor amuse the Senate by reviewing all of the notable congressional exhibitions of statesmanship which have been recently formulated in the shape of bills; but I shall be more than justified in calling attention to a few bills, not greatly differing in character from other thousands which have appeared on our desks as having been introduced chiefly in the House of Representatives by democratic members.

To begin with bills of the House in the last Congress:

H. R. 2596 (Mr. Riddle) proposed to suspend the sinking fund.

H. R. 2612 (Mr. BUCKNER) proposed the same thing.

These are distinct declarations, with more of the same sort in the Senate, that no more of the public debt is to be paid now, if ever, or hardly ever. The debt-paying policy of the American people is to be reversed, and by that party primarily responsible for the existence of the debt. In referring to bills I shall give the number but not the full title whenever I find less words will give a better idea of their purpose.

H. R. 3430, (Mr. SHELLEY,) to authorize the issue of $500,000,000 of legal-tender notes for redemption of bonds, and coin is to be purchased with the notes, and not less than $50,000,000 of bonds are to be redeemed in any one year. This would be inflation on a grand scale, but the amount of coin, if any, that could be purchased with such paper would be on a much smaller scale.

H. R. 5098, (Mr. CULBERSON,) to restrain the payment of 5-20 bonds, except in legal-tender Treasury notes.

H. R. 5116, (Mr. WRIGHT,) to authorize the issue of $400,000,000 of notes to be expended for public buildings, rivers and harbors, and never to be redeemed. This is the same Hon. HENDRICK B. WRIGHT who was in the House at the time when the legal-tender notes were originated and denounced the measure, February 5, 1862, as follows:

> This bill proposes, sir, to throw on the country $100,000,000 of Treasury notes, payable at no time—payable nowhere—payable at the pleasure of the Government—and the astounding clause is added, that these notes, payable at no place, at no time, shall be lawful money and a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, within the United States. Now I submit, as a matter of law, as a correct conclusion from the Constitution itself, that you cannot under the Constitution of these United States make anything but gold and silver a legal tender on contracts.

I voted myself against the legal-tender-note bill with all my colleagues then in the House or Senate, doubting the constitutional power, and because we believed there would be difficulty, as there is, about final redemption. I knew that demagogues die, but never surrender, and that every State has its "buncombe" county; but I was then in the excellent company and voting arm in arm with the eloquent junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and with the careful and erudite junior Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PENDLETON,] both of whom were not then less distinguished as members of the democratic party in the House than now as members of the Senate. Let me give a specimen of the well-balanced periods of the Senator from Ohio as member of the House, January 29, 1862, from an elaborate argument against the constitutionality of the legal-tender notes. The Constitution in this respect has not been changed.

I believe—

Said Mr. PENDLETON—

> that this Government has reached a crisis in its history. I believe that it is approaching a period in the history of its legislation which may determine the question of its continuance. By wisdom it may overcome the evils of secession; by its great powers and resources it may be able to defend itself against those in arms against it; but I firmly believe that it cannot maintain itself against the shock of the accumulated and manifold dangers which follow inevitably closely in the wake of an illegal, unsound, and depreciated Government paper currency.
> I find no grant of this power in direct terms or, as I think, by fair implication. It is not an accidental omission; it is not an admission through inadvertency; it was intentionally left out of the Constitution because it was designed that the power should not reside in the Federal Government.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] did not fail to record his vote against legal-tender paper money in 1862, and he had not become a convert to this sort of money until years after; for I find his utterances in the House trumpet-tongued against the "meretricious splendor" of this "gigantic scheme of human credulity and folly" as late as March 5, 1864. I will read an extract, but I regret that it will lack his magnificent voice and more magnificent gesticulation:

Unnatural prices—

He said—

> are paid for everything. A meretricious splendor hails us upon the streets, at the rout, the assembly, and the theater. The nation seems fattening on blood and carnage. But this high, feverish flush which we everywhere behold is not the genial warmth of health. It is the finer hectic glow of a swift consumption. It is the herald of death, and points to the tomb. What we call money is not money, and the most gorgeous wealth has no value, because it is a prey to the monster, debt.
> The credit of the Mississippi company became the basis of an illimitable paper currency, and both the King and people of France hailed John Law, its founder, as the deliverer of their kingdom. It was treason to doubt the infallibility of his gigantic scheme of human credulity and folly, as it is now to doubt the wisdom and final success of our own financial department.
> At about the same period a similar frenzy was raging on the other side of the English channel, and British statesmen fancied they had found the magic alembic by which paper issued upon credit could be made to supply the uses of gold.

I could find a great deal more of argument and sentiment of this sort and at this time in democratic speeches in the House and Senate. They were all that way.

H. R. 5190, (Mr. ATKINS,) to tax United States bonds 1 per cent. under regulations to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

H. R. 296, (Mr. Banning,) for the free coinage of the silver dollar for the benefit of the owner of silver bullion.

H. R. 301, (Mr. EWING,) for coinage of silver dollar and no charge for coinage except for assay.

H. R. 3474, (Mr. SPARKS,) to coin silver bullion free of charge, issue certificates therefor receivable for all public dues, and when so received may be reissued.

H. R. 5378, (Mr. FELTON,) to make trade and Mexican dollars a legal tender.

H. R. 5405, (Mr. ATKINS,) to make all subsidiary coin legal tender for debts due to the United States.

H. R. 5377, (Mr. FELTON,) to compel national banks to receive silver dollars.

H. R. 5608, (Mr. FORT,) to enforce the legal-tender quality of silver dollars.

H. R. 5437, (Mr. BUCKNER,) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase $7,000,000 of silver bullion, and coin the same monthly.

H. R. 102, (Mr. Cutler,) to tax all United States bonds hereafter issued.

H. R. 223, (Mr. Robbins,) for the sale, free of tax, of tobacco by producers.

H. R. 229, (Mr. VANCE,) repealing tax on State banks.

H. R. 221, (Mr. Robbins,) reducing tax on spirits and tobacco.

H. R. 1522, (Mr. STEPHENS,) for the issue of three hundred and fifty millions of exchequer bills.

H. R. 307, (Mr. EWING,) repealing the resumption act.

H. R. 334, (Mr. Riddle,) to abolish national banks.

H. R. 212, (Mr. SCALES,) to refund direct tax imposed on the late insurrectionary States.

H. R. 1339, (Mr. COOK,) to refund cotton tax ($68,072,388.79) which, it should be noticed, was nearly all the tax collected in the course of six years from the late insurrectionary States; and it is not now proposed to refund the amount to those who paid the tax, nor to the producers of the cotton, but to the several States.

H. R. 53, (Mr. WILLIS,) tariff bill reducing duties, changing many specific to ad valorem, reducing the duties on wool to three, five, and six cents per pound, repealing the free list, putting a duty on coffee of three cents per pound, and on tea of fifteen cents per pound.

These bills are significant of the aims and purposes of many of the leading members of the last House of Representatives, and indicate the legislation which the democratic party have at heart. I will now give some examples of the quality of the bills received from the House at the present session.

H. R. 369, (Mr. J. J. DAVIS,) to reduce the tax on brandy made from apples, peaches, or grapes, to thirty-five cents per gallon.

H. R. 369, (Mr. CABELL,) to repeal all taxes on brandy made from apples, peaches, or grapes.

H. R. 340, (Mr. GOODE,) to indorse by the United States $400,000 bonds of the Dismal Swamp Canal Company at 6 per cent. interest for forty years.

This sum may be needed in many dismal swamps, but forty years is a good while to trust a company with such a name.

H. R. 338, (Mr. GOODE,) to appropriate $500,000 for a fresh-water basin near Norfolk for iron-clad vessels.

Unfortunately, Norfolk as a place of safety for United States vessels has some unpleasant memories. "But ships are but boards; sailors but men: there be land rats and water rats."

H. R.—, (Mr. KLOTZ,) to pension survivors and widows of those who served fourteen days in the war of 1812, or fourteen days in the war with Mexico, and any land grants received to be prima facie evidence of service; and all widows of names stricken from the rolls of such persons as have taken up arms against the Government are to be entitled to make claim for a pension after the passage of this act.

H. R. 458, (Mr. CHALMERS,) to provide for the organization of the Mississippi improvement commission. This appears to be a magnificent scheme to obtain magnificent appropriations for a magnificent river.

H. R. 525, (Mr. EWING,) to impose an income tax with rates graduated from 2½ up to 5 and 10 per cent.

H. R. 628, (Mr. T. TURNER,) to impose an income tax graduated from 1½ up to 10 per cent.

H. R. 813, (Mr. J. W. SINGLETON,) to provide for the issue of United States notes, not bearing interest, in denominations of not less than $1, full legal tender, for all debts, public and private, except interest on the public debt; "and said notes shall be paid out upon any appropriation authorized by law that the ordinary revenue of the Government may be insufficient to meet;" and no notes so issued shall be canceled or retired. And in order that revenue shall be insufficient, another section of the bill proposes to repeal a dozen chapters of the Revised Statutes which provide for internal revenue from ale, beer, spirits, tobacco, stamps, and banks, and all other parts of laws relating to internal revenue.

H. R. 410, (Mr. STEPHENS,) to provide for a new metric gold coin for international use, to be known as the Stella, and to contain six grams of pure gold, three decigrams of pure silver, and seven decigrams of copper, and the weight thereof to be seven grams of the value of $4; the Secretary of the Treasury to fix the charge for making the alloy and coinage to any holder of gold bullion or coin, and one mill to the dollar to be paid for the patent-right for said alloy to William Wheeler Hubbell, or his legal representative.

H. R. 412, (Mr. STEPHENS,) to provide for metric gold or metric goloid ingots of $500 each, one mill on the dollar to be paid to William Wheeler Hubbell for the patent, and certificates to be issued therefor in sums of $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, and $500, receivable for customs, taxes, and all public debts, and to be reissued and renewed when mutilated.

H. R. 411, (Mr. STEPHENS,) to authorize the coinage of the goloid metric dollar, $2, of fractions of a dollar, and also of the metric gold double eagle, eagle, and half eagle, all of standard value; one mill to the dollar in value of said coinage or alloys to be paid for the patent-right to William Wheeler Hubbell, or his legal representatives.

H. R. 1040, (Mr. CULBERSON,) to revive and extend the right of action in the Court of Claims "to those claimants whose claims have been adversely determined by said court upon the ground of disloyalty."

H. R. 1049, (Mr. MILLS,) making all bonds hereafter issued payable in gold, silver, or legal-tender notes, at the option of the Government.

H. R. 1053, (Mr. MILLS.) Exactly the same bill, on the same day, and by the same member.

H. Res. 16, (Mr. HOSTETLER,) requiring Secretary of the Treasury to redeem interest-bearing bonds in silver whenever there shall be accumulated $5,000,000.

H. R. 1051, (Mr. MILLS,) to repeal exemption of deposits in savings-banks. This exemption covers only the smaller deposits of less than $2,000. The bill aims a blow at institutions which have proved, next to education, the greatest boon the laboring classes have ever had.

H. R. 349, (Mr. SCALES,) to refund direct taxes on land in the late insurrectionary States under the act of August 5, 1861.

H. R. 104, (Mr. CULBERSON,) to provide for the unlimited coinage of silver.

H. R. 24, (Mr. REAGAN.) This is a proposition to change the Constitution so that direct taxes shall be levied and apportioned in proportion to the value of property in each State and Territory, with the right of the State to collect its portion by its own officers and under its own laws. In case of failure, to be collected by the United States.

H. R. 23, (Mr. REAGAN,) to pay the State of Texas $1,629,615.69 on account of money paid for frontier defense.

H. R. 2023, (Mr. BICKNELL, from select committee,) to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President and the decision of questions arising thereon.

The main proposition of this bill is in case of any "controversy in any State as to the appointment or eligibility of electors, the same may be passed upon by its highest judicial tribunal in accordance with its laws," and "the decision thereof by its highest tribunal shall be conclusive, and the vote shall be counted in accordance therewith unless reversed by both Houses."

It will be seen that, notwithstanding the loud professions constantly made here about State rights, no State is to be permitted to appoint electors of President and Vice-President in any manner that cannot be reversed by a democratic House and Senate. Even a decision "by its highest judicial tribunal in accordance with its laws" is not to be conclusive, and may be "reversed by both Houses." This law, if passed, would obviously give to "both Houses" the power to elect whichever of the candidates they should see fit, although the people by an overwhelming vote had decided otherwise.

A party controlling the late House of Representatives of the Forty-fifth Congress, which excluded FIELD, Haralson, BELFORD, Pacheco, and Bisbee, all republicans and rightfully elected as members of that body, and which seated in their places Dean, SHELLEY, Patterson, Wigginton, and FINLEY, all democrats, and not one of them lawfully entitled to seats, may be trusted to elect the democratic candidate for the President whenever the chance occurs. A party which in the Senate initiates proceedings to oust a Senator after the question of his election had been once decided on its merits, and after the Senator had occupied his seat for years, may be trusted by its friends to seat the democratic candidates for President and Vice-President at the earliest opportunity.

H. R. 1715, a bill reported from the House Committee on Revision of the Laws "to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes and of the Statutes at Large relating to the removal of causes from State courts."

A Senate bill, 275, (Senator WHYTE,) seems even more sweeping in its character; and they both propose to take away all right of removal of any prosecution under revenue laws and all other laws.

First. No one who invokes the Constitution or laws of the United States as a defense to a State prosecution is to have his trial in a national court.

Second. No suit between citizens of different States is to be removed to the United States courts.

Third. No civil right or fourteenth and fifteenth amendment cases are to be so removed. In other words, the States are to have power to nullify all the power of the United States to enforce its own revenue and customs laws, or any others.

H. R. 444, (Mr. MULDROW.) This bill authorizes and directs the issue of $500,000,000 of legal-tender notes not bearing interest, and to purchase coin with said notes "for the purpose of redeeming any bonds of the United States outstanding, when by the terms of the original contract the same are payable in coin."

H. R. 1364, (Mr. COX,) to retire national-bank notes when received at the Treasury for redemption, burn and destroy them, and to issue an equal amount of United States notes. When received to the amount of $10,000 to cancel a proportionate amount of bonds held as security, and when all notes of any national bank shall have been retired, to return to the bank any surplus of bonds remaining to its credit.

It is to be noted that the Treasury is the mere custodian of bonds purchased and paid for, often at a high premium, and that the existing law requires their return to the banks upon the surrender of their circulation. Yet it is proposed not only to burn up the notes of national banks, but to grab and cancel the bonds held as security, and to square the account by an issue of an equal amount of United States notes. A more flagrant proposition of confiscation and repudiation could hardly be conceived.

H. R. 319, (Mr. HUNTON,) to pay Maryland and Virginia for advances made in 1791 for the purpose of aiding in erecting public buildings at the permanent seat of government.

H. R. 1357, (Mr. COX,) to regulate commerce between the United States and the Dominion of Canada.

This bill proposes to fix a much lower scale of duties for this colony of Great Britain, to take effect when an act reciprocal in terms shall have passed the Legislature of Canada. All of our treaties with foreign nations require that all privileges shall be granted to each one that are granted to the most favored nation, and that no higher duties shall be demanded of one than of any other; but this bill does not seem to regard the obligation of treaties.

H. R. 564, (Mr. WEAVER,) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to coinage and coin and bullion certificates.

This bill is full of objectionable features, and appears designed to effect an unlimited issue of silver certificates to circulate as currency and to give to any ring of speculators an opportunity to make fortunes out of the Treasury by the monopoly and control of the silver market for a single week.

From the handiwork of those most widely known as greenbackers I will now present a few specimen bills which, not less than ape-headed centaurs and double-tailed unicorns, would seem better calculated to excite curiosity than respect; and yet these honorable members are really in earnest, while the democrats know, having been taught from their youth up, that fiat paper money is not a whit better than deal boards made of saw-dust, but they are to a large extent quite willing to allow that any Quixotic eccentricity or monomania which afflicts or distinguishes greenbackers equally belongs to them, and may be expected to so belong until after the next election.

H. R. 1630, (Mr. DE LA MATYR,) to provide for funding municipal indebtedness with United States paper money, to be issued to any such corporation for their bonds at par, a sum equal to the outstanding debts of such corporation at a rate of interest not exceeding 2 per cent., and to run not less than fifty years.

H. R. 10, (Mr. MURCH,) providing for $50,000,000 of fractional currency, which is to be a legal tender the same as subsidiary silver coin.

H. R. 5, (Mr. LADD,) provides for gold and silver coinage on the same footing, and the owners of either to pay only actual cost of coinage.

H. R. 1072, (Mr. WEAVER,) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue $600,000,000 of United States Treasury notes, to be known as lawful money of the United States, and to be a legal tender and paid out as Congress shall hereafter direct.

H. R. 1631, (Mr. DE LA MATYR,) to provide $1,000,000,000 of legal-tender greenback currency for general circulation, and to be loaned for fifty years to any corporation that may apply, and for such an amount as they may desire, without interest for five years, and then at the rate of 3 per cent. interest until paid.

But I cannot wholly neglect some bills which have made their appearance in the Senate.

> The things, we know, are neither rich nor rare,
> But wonder how the devil they got there.

S. 12, (Senator MCDONALD,) to authorize the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois to commence and prosecute suits against the United States in the Supreme Court on account of sales of public lands in each of said States.

When a similar bill was formerly presented by a republican Senator, we had large help from democrats in aiding its defeat, and can we now rely upon an equal manifestation of virtue?

S. R. 7, (Senator COKE,) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay over to the State of Texas the balance of the fund of $7,750,000 appropriated in 1850 for the payment of the creditors of the late Republic of Texas.

An appropriation of $10,000,000 was made in 1850 to pay debts of Texas, and for territory claimed but said not to belong to her. The debt, $4,045,027.14, such as it was, then floated around at from five to ten cents on the dollar, and enough of it proved to be in the pockets of a few distinguished gentlemen to furnish the foundations for tell-tale fortunes. This bill is apparently to take out of the Treasury a supposed remainder of this malodorous appropriation not yet absorbed by Texas scrip. The amount of the present bill is not set forth, as it was not at the start in the original ten-million bill, to which Senator Benton sarcastically referred when he spoke of its "coy and bashful blank."

S. 28, (Senator BAILEY,) for relief of the book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, $150,000 for compensation for injuries by the United States Army.

S. R. 29, (Senator COCKRELL,) providing for a treaty of reciprocity and commerce with the Republic of France. If such treaties were not palpably unconstitutional, this would be inadmissible, because such articles as brandy and champagne, silks, chinaware, and plate-glass, all consumed by those having unstinted means, could not be admitted by us at nominal rates of duty, and France could have no other object.

S. 31, (Senator BECK,) for the removal of all disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution.

This of course includes Jefferson Davis.

S. 51, (Senator MAXEY,) to aid in the construction of the Corpus Christi, San Diego and Rio Grande Railroad.

This is a Texas corporation, and it is proposed that the United States shall pay $6,000 per mile for one hundred and forty-five miles of road, and take a mortgage thereon for security.

S. 64, (Senator WITHERS,) to provide for the recomputation of the accounts between the United States and the several States, and between the United States and the city of Baltimore growing out of moneys expended by the several States and by the city of Baltimore in the war of 1812 with Great Britain.

The cat under this meal is, as it may be inferred, the recomputation of the account of Virginia coming in under the head of "the several States."

S. 71, (Senator BECK,) to repeal section 1218 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which provides that "no person who has served in any capacity in the military, naval, or civil service of the so-called Confederate States, or of either of the States in insurrection during the late rebellion, shall be appointed to any position in the Army of the United States."

This is intended to open the way for a restoration or appointment of officers lately in the service of the so-called Confederate States.

S. 104, (Senator BECK,) to pay Milton J. Best $25,000 for house destroyed by commanding officer of United States forces in 1864.

This claim was once vetoed by President Grant.

S. 115, (Senator COKE,) to aid in the construction of railroad from San Antonio to Laredo, and to deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury bonds to the amount of $15,000 per mile, payable in forty years, with interest at 4 per cent.; and for this the Secretary to indorse the same and deliver them to the company as fast as the road may be built.

S. 115, (Senator COKE.) Railroad from Galveston to Rio Grande City, three hundred and fifty miles; subsidy of bonds of $7,500 per mile.

S. 121, (Senator MAXEY,) granting to New Orleans, Texas and Colorado Railroad every alternate six sections of land.

S. 213, (Senator GROVER,) to reimburse the State of Oregon $131,000 for moneys paid in suppressing Modoc hostilities in 1872 and 1873.

S. 248, (Senator GROOME,) to aid in the construction of the Maryland and Delaware Ship-Canal, by authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to indorse the coupons of bonds amounting to $4,000,000, bearing interest at 5 per cent. per annum, payable January 1, 1928.

S. 295, (Senator COCKRELL,) to pay bounty to the enlisted men of the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Regiments of Missouri Cavalry Volunteers, $100 to those who served six months, and $33.33 to those who served less than six months.

S. 384, (Senator GORDON,) to aid the Great Southern Railway Company (consolidated) to construct a line of railway in the States of Georgia and Florida, the said company to issue bonds to an amount of $15,000,000, payable fifty years after date, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum; and the Secretary of the Treasury is to indorse the guarantee of the United States for the payment of the interest on said bonds.

S. 407, (Senator HILL,) to refund to the State of Georgia $35,555.42 for money paid by said State for supplies for the troops in 1777.

S. 408, (Senator VANCE,) to pay rebel contractors for carrying mail prior to May 31, 1861.

S. 430, (Senator JONAS,) to provide for the completion of a railroad between the ports on the Lower Mississippi River, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Pacific Ocean. This provides that the sum of $10,000 per mile shall be paid by the United States in lawful money on three hundred and thirty-five miles to Shreveport, a like sum for ninety-five miles to the North Louisiana Railroad, for three hundred and thirty-five miles to the Memphis and Great Southwestern Railroad, for six hundred miles to the Galveston, Harrisburgh and San Antonio Railroad, for one hundred and fifty miles to the branch to the Rio Grande. This grand combination calls for money out of the Treasury to the amount of $15,950,000, which the companies are to repay, if able, in twenty years; and if not able, then they are to have another term of twenty years to become able.

S. 443, (Senator MORGAN,) "regulating the appointment of the United States marshals." This bill takes the power to appoint marshals of the judicial districts of the United States away from the President and confers it upon the circuit courts. It is a manifest encroachment upon the appointing power of the President.

S. 544, (Senator GORDON,) to provide for a railway from the Mississippi waters to the Pacific Ocean. This railroad is to have in any lawful money of the United States $15,000 for each mile constructed; and the railroad, if it cannot repay it at the end of twenty years, is to have a credit of another twenty years.

S. 485, (Senator JOHNSTON,) giving consent of the United States to the prosecution of the suit of G. W. Custis Lee, for the recovery of the Arlington estate, on certain conditions.

S. 569, (Senator HEREFORD,) to authorize the payment of customs duties in legal-tender notes.

The various bills to which I have called attention, better than anything else, practically illustrate the true inwardness of the present majority in Congress, its democratic policy, its ability or non-ability to maintain the government of our fathers, its economy and its extravagance. By the fruits the tree is to be known. And what are the leading features of this immense outpouring of measures, big and little, waiting to be hatched out? Among many others will be found—

1. Propositions by which many States with stale claims are to deplete the Treasury of the United States. The most valuable of State rights appears to be old debts against the nation.

2. Subsidy schemes, large in number and gigantic in amount, in behalf of railroads across the continent, as well as within various States.

3. Wiping out the distinction between those who were loyal to the Government and those who were not.

4. Hostility to resumption of specie payments.

5. Plain and palpable, as well as sinister, attacks upon the public credit of the country.

6. Stupendous inflation of paper legal-tender currency, with no purpose of present or future redemption.

7. Violent assaults upon the national banks—upon the best system now existing in the world—with no possible substitute but the restoration of State banks, destitute of capital or security, for the issue of bills current only in their immediate locality.

8. Measures to push silver into circulation and to push gold out of the country, and to give speculators all the profits of exchanging silver bullion for legal-tender coinage of equal weight.

9. Free-trade tariff, by which American industries are to be subjected to the Darwinian theory of natural selection, or the survival of the fittest, and whatever cannot be produced here for less wages than anywhere else to be abandoned.

The democratic party, with the prestige of having long insisted upon the hard-money doctrines of Benton and Jackson, that the Constitution only permitted Congress to provide coin as money; and having, even during the late war, loudly denounced the issue of paper legal-tenders, at the very outset, as flagrantly unconstitutional, it might well have been expected that this hard-money party would have been foremost in the support of a restoration of specie payments and the maintenance of a sound currency. Instead of all this, they have persistently denounced the law fixing the date for resumption which allowed four years for preparation, as a "hinderance," just as they denounced in 1864 the war to preserve the Union "a failure," and with just as little of truth. This party is not now seeking a diminution of the public debt by payment, but, as the Government cannot be sued, proposes to make at its own sweet will, and regardless of its intrinsic value, as little of silver, or as much of paper, as it chooses, a legal-tender for all debts, public and private. So far as this may go below the money standard of the world it is flat repudiation. For the honor of our common country I would not say that the democratic party are in favor of repudiation, nothwithstanding the present attitude of Virginia, Tennessee, Louisiana, and some other democratic States, but I must say, judging by the measures which so many of its component members propose, that there will not be a repudiationist in all the land who will not make his home in its bosom, unless the greenback party shall uncover greater nakedness and greater temptations.

As soon as the democratic party obtained a majority in the House of Representatives a so-called free-trade-tariff bill was proposed, the handiwork, as was supposed, of a New York custom-house clerk; and, though it was not a success, the country has suffered from the agitation of the subject more or less ever since. At the last session another tariff bill was introduced into the House, and again was the country long annoyed by the abortive agitation of crude and unwholesome changes; but finally, so apparent was its unwisdom, that its enacting clause was stricken out by a vote of 134 to 121.

The proposition was not for the purpose of rescuing our people from any existing depression in business affairs nor for starting any new enterprises at home in any part of the country, but for stimulating foreign markets with an active American demand for the products of foreign labor and foreign machinery.

The anomalies of the bill are too numerous to receive attention now. Raw materials not produced at home, but essential to home manufactures and, therefore, now free, were to be subject to duties. The farmers were taken care of in the left-handed way by imposing a duty on wheat, but wheat flour was to be admitted free of duty. Rice was to be subjected to duty, but rice flour was to be free. Potatoes, yielding annually half a million dollars of revenue, were to be admitted free of duty. Buckwheat, peas, and beans were also to be free. The bill retained a duty on beef and pork, but mutton and poultry were to be free. Why, if Canada had made the bill it could hardly have presented a more sunny side to our neighbors across the border, while our farmers seem to have been left wholly out in the cold.

If there was ever a time when the country needed rest from crude and rash experiments it is now, when business activities appear to be awakening from a long slumber, and when both labor and capital are eagerly seeking something to do. And yet the tariff agitation has not been the only annoyance of business men. The subject of a reduction of the tax on spirits interfered greatly with the sale of corn, stopped all movements of trade, inflicting heavy losses in many cases, until fortunately the matter was put at rest by a vote of the Senate, and at the earnest request of those concerned in the business. Again, the question of a reduction of tax on tobacco, not asked for by the consumer, and destructive to six months of business, after long discussion was accomplished, at the loss of much revenue when we had none to spare; but neither the consumer nor the producer obtain the smallest benefit from the reduction. All these changes, and threatened changes, are at war with that stability in legislation upon which the prosperity of the country is largely dependent.

I have placed upon the record the spirit and the letter of what is proposed by the democratic party, and I invoke the public judgment upon the merits of that record. Who will venture to say that the general welfare of the country can be promoted by any or all of the wild and extravagant propositions so seriously presented? And yet we have nothing else to expect from the democratic legislators. They are here, I fear, not to build up but to tear down.

If the republican party is now deprived of the power of affirmative legislation, it may at least point with some pride to the retrospect of its past career, and to the credit to which it is legitimately entitled. There is not a man among us who cannot have his homestead of one hundred and sixty acres if he chooses to take it. Forty-four national colleges, or institutions teaching that scientific knowledge most useful to the farmer, mechanic, miner, and engineer, have been prosperously established, at least one in every State, and mainly within reach of the industrial classes. No man has lost a dollar by holding bills of national banks. Our pension-roll is of unexampled liberality and intended to include every worthy man. The money now paid to all laboring-men is equal to gold. Our export and import trade was never in a more healthy condition. Resumption of specie payments places our commerce and credit in harmony with the foremost nations of the world. We are at peace with all the world. The increased number of immigrants constantly arriving proves that greater rewards to industry are received here than anywhere abroad, and that there is a higher level of living here for the great masses of mankind than in any other country. It is a fact that no foreigner will dispute, that Americans are better fed, better clothed, and better schooled than any other fifty million of people. It is true that the rebellion was a great calamity, but it did not prove overwhelming, and our recovery has been not only heroic but transcendent.

That our moral and political triumphs have been far greater than our material admits of no doubt, but in relation to the latter, and to show that the Republic has received no detriment at the hands of the republican party, I will close by quoting the words of Mr. Gladstone in his Kin Beyond Sea, when writing of the children of a "prolific British mother:"

> But, among these children, there is one whose place in the world's eye and in history is superlative: it is the American Republic. She is the eldest born. She has, taking the capacity of her land into view as well as its mere measurement, a natural base for the greatest continuous empire ever established by man. And it may be well here to mention, what has not always been sufficiently observed, that the distinction between continuous empire and empire severed and dispersed over sea is vital. The development which the Republic has effected has been unexampled in its rapidity and force. While other countries have doubled, or at most trebled, their population, she has risen, during one single century of freedom, in round numbers from two millions to forty-five. As to riches, it is reasonable to establish, from the decennial stages of the progress thus far achieved, a series for the future; and, reckoning upon this basis, I suppose that the very next census, in the year 1880, will exhibit her to the world as certainly the wealthiest of all the nations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 2263) supplemental to "An act to establish post-routes;" in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the fourth amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 1) to repeal certain clauses in the sundry civil appropriation act, approved March 3, 1879, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. J. D. C. ATKINS of Tennessee, Mr. T. R. COBB of Indiana, and Mr. J. R. HAWLEY of Connecticut managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BECK. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. No. 2251) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, with amendments, and I ask that it be printed and placed on the Calendar. I shall endeavor to call it up to-morrow, or, at the latest, day after to-morrow; to-morrow if possible.

Mr. CHANDLER. I present a copy of an original letter of General Pope to General Sherman, dated October 23, 1878, embodying a letter of Colonel Schriver, and extracts from the reports of the operations of the Army of Northern Virginia in the summer campaign of 1862, which I move be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, to accompany the message of the President, previously referred to that committee, in relation to the case of Fitz John Porter.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DISEASES OF DOMESTIC ANIMALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein,) That there be printed 100,000 copies of Special Report No. 12 of the Commissioner of Agriculture, containing the reports of the examiners appointed to investigate the diseases of swine and contagious and infectious diseases incident to other classes of domesticated animals, of which 70,000 copies shall be printed for the use of members of the House, 25,000 for the use of members of the Senate, and 5,000 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the fourth amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 1) to repeal certain clauses in the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1879.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, it was Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the fourth amendment of the Senate and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, Mr. WALLACE, and Mr. ALLISON.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 2252) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses—to the Committee on Appropriations;

A bill (H. R. No. 2263) supplemental to "An act to establish post-routes"—to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 34) to print 5,000 copies of the final reports of the United States centennial commission upon the international exhibition and centennial celebration of 1876—to the Committee on Printing;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 77) in relation to treaty negotiations with Russia as to American citizens—to the Committee on Foreign Relations; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 95) to pay Patrick Doran for services as messenger, House of Representatives—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and fifty-four minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 11, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. ALFRED H. AMES, McKendree Methodist Episcopal church, Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

NEWSPAPERS AND STATIONERY FOR MEMBERS, ETC.

Mr. FARR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2260) making an appropriation for newspapers and stationery for Senators, Members, and Delegates for the extra session of Congress which commenced March 18, 1879; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

GAS SUPERINTENDENT FOR CAPITOL BUILDING.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for consideration at this time a bill to provide a superintendent of gas for the Capitol building.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The preamble of the bill states that H. H. Lemon, lately employed on the Capitol police force, was in August, 1870, while in the regular discharge of his duties, seriously injured and permanently disabled so as to incapacitate him for the exercise of manual labor; and that it would be to the manifest public advantage and economy to restore the employment of a gas superintendent under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol.

The bill directs the Architect of the Capitol to employ H. H. Lemon as such gas superintendent at a compensation of $1,200 per annum, to be paid out of the appropriation for lighting the Capitol building, until otherwise provided by law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration at this time of the bill which has been read?

Mr. ATKINS. I think that bill should be referred to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. I hope the gentleman will not object to its present consideration.

Mr. ATKINS. I would greatly desire to oblige my friend from West Virginia, but I must insist upon the bill taking its regular course.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. If the gentleman insists upon his objection, I will ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 2261) was received, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

SETTLERS ON LAND IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. POEHLER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted an adverse report upon the petition of sundry persons, dated Baxter Springs, Kansas, asking for the passage of a law allowing them to settle on lands in the Indian Territory; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

METRIC SYSTEM.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am directed by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures to submit a report upon the adoption by the United States of the French metric system, not only as to measurements and weights, but as to the varieties and denominations of coinage. I am directed by the committee to ask that the report be printed and recommitted, and to move that 10,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. GARFIELD. That last proposition will have to go to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. Certainly, it will have to be referred to the Committee on Printing under the law.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

The following resolution was referred under the law to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 10,000 extra copies of House Report No. 13, first session Forty-sixth Congress, be printed for the use of the Congress.

JULIET LEEF.

Mr. BEALE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk, and to move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The bill (H. R. No. 2262) for the relief of Juliet Leef, widow, and the heirs of Henry Leef, deceased, owner of the bark Marie Therese, illegally seized by Alexander H. Tyler at Bahia, Brazil, was received, read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. ACKLEN. I desire to reserve to myself the right to submit a minority report in this case.

Mr. NEAL. I object.

Mr. ACKLEN. Is there objection to my submitting a minority report?

Mr. BEALE. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ACKLEN] reserved in the committee the right to make a minority report.

Mr. ACKLEN. I understand that is my right.

The SPEAKER. It is usual to allow the views of the minority to be submitted.

Mr. NEAL. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the majority report will be printed together with the views of the minority when submitted, and the bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. Not to come back on a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. It is not proposed to recommit the bill to the Committee on Commerce, but to refer it to the Committee on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. But a motion to reconsider would bring the bill back into the House.

The SPEAKER. The point of order would still lie against the bill. The Chair does not think it a usual practice to bring back into the House by a motion to reconsider bills that have been referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. The rule would apply to bills.

The SPEAKER. Even if brought back on a motion to reconsider, a point of order would immediately commit it again to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. That is, if it contained an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. This bill does contain an appropriation.

REPORTS OF UNITED STATES CENTENNIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. HAYES. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back, with a favorable recommendation, House joint resolution No. 34, to print 5,000 copies of the final report of the United States centennial commission upon the international exhibition and centennial celebration of 1876.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That there be printed and bound, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, 5,000 copies of the final reports of the United States centennial commission upon the international exhibition and celebration of 1876; 1,000 copies thereof for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 500 copies for the use of the State Department, and 500 copies for the use of the centennial commission.

Mr. HAYES. I wish to say that the passage of this joint resolution is unanimously recommended by the Committee on Printing. I will yield a few moments to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY,] that he may explain the matter.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not care to make any explanation unless there is objection.

Mr. GARFIELD. The only objection I can see is that the number is too small.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is the only objection I see.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

GEOLOGY OF THE HENRY MOUNTAIN.

Mr. HAYES. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back a concurrent resolution of the Senate in regard to printing the report on the geology of the Henry Mountain. The committee recommend concurrence in the resolution with an amendment.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 3,000 copies of volume 2 of the geological series of the reports on the geographical and geological survey of the Rocky Mountain region entitled "The Geology of the Henry Mountain," with the necessary illustrations and charts; 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 500 for the use of the Senate, 1,000 for the use of the Department of the Interior, and 500 for the use of the survey; the illustrations and charts to be made by the Public Printer, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Public Printing.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 9 of the resolution strike out "1,000" and insert "1,500;" in line 10 strike out "1,000" and insert "500;" so as to make the number of copies for the House of Representatives 1,500, and the number for the use of the Interior Department 500.

Mr. REAGAN. Why should not all the copies designed for general distribution be placed at the disposal of the Interior Department? Why provide that a certain number shall be for the use of the survey?

Mr. HAYES. It has always been customary where the report of any survey has been printed that the officers of the survey should have a certain number of copies for distribution. The resolution as amended, which is unanimously recommended by the committee, gives 1,500 copies to the House, 500 copies to the Senate, 500 to the Interior Department, and 500 to the gentleman who conducted the survey.

Mr. REAGAN. It seems to me that the surveyors had best be engaged in the discharge of the duties assigned to them, and that the distribution of documents or information should be intrusted to the appropriate department, to which persons desiring these documents can apply. It seems to me the distribution can be more conveniently and appropriately made by the officers of the Interior Department.

Mr. HAYES. This report is one of the regular series of Major Powell's reports; and it has been customary in printing reports of these surveys to assign a certain number to the officer of the survey for distribution.

Mr. REAGAN. I make no motion, only a suggestion.

Mr. STEVENSON. Inasmuch as I introduced this resolution originally, I desire to say that I trust the resolution as proposed to be amended by the committee will be adopted. In this form, I like the resolution better than as originally presented.

Mr. DUNNELL. As I understand the amendment offered by the committee, they make a reduction in the number of this report to be printed.

Mr. HAYES. No, sir, the amendment simply changes the proportion assigned to the House of Representatives from one thousand to one thousand five hundred, and cuts down from one thousand to five hundred the number designated for the use of the Interior Department.

Mr. DUNNELL. I think it unfortunate that so small an edition of this valuable work is printed. The number of copies ought to be three times as large. The number proposed will give about seven copies to each member of the House, not half enough for the libraries ordinarily found in a congressional district.

Mr. HAYES. Well, the gentleman can offer an amendment to increase the number.

Mr. DUNNELL. I am told that the number proposed will give but five copies to a member, while in a congressional district there are fifteen, twenty, or more libraries. After we have gone to a large expense—tens of thousands of dollars—in securing material for a report of this character, why should we print so few copies? Besides, after the matter has been set up by the printer and the quantity proposed printed, it is very well known to all of us that an additional number will cost very little.

Mr. HAYES. Let us have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend so as to make the aggregate number printed 5,000, 3,000 of which shall be for the use of the House and 1,000 for the use of the Senate. I make this motion as an amendment to the amendment of the committee. I trust that the gentleman in charge of the resolution will not object.

Mr. HAYES. I certainly will not object.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. DUNNELL to the amendment of the committee, it was agreed to.

The amendment of the committee, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I observe that the resolution speaks of 500 copies "for the use of the survey." Would it not be better to say "for the use of the office of the survey?"

Mr. HAYES. These copies are designed for the use of the office of Major Powell for general distribution to libraries, &c.

Mr. GARFIELD. The word "survey" does not convey the idea of a person who can use anything. The language ought to be "for the use of the officer in charge of the survey." I suggest that modification.

Mr. HAYES. "Survey" is the term usually employed. Still I have no objection to the modification suggested.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be modified as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

The resolution, as modified, was adopted.

SUPPLEMENTAL POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. COOK. I am directed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to report a bill (H. R. No. 2263) supplemental to an act to establish post-routes.

Mr. BAKER. Is there any general legislation of any sort in it?

Mr. COOK. None whatever.

The SPEAKER. This will be considered as the usual post-route bill, which is uniformally passed by its title upon the assurance of the gentleman reporting it that it contains no general legislation of any sort, and provides merely for the establishment of post-routes.

Mr. COOK. That is all the bill provides for.

The bill was received, read a first and second time, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COOK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table joint resolution (H. R. No. 1) to repeal certain clauses in the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1879, returned from the Senate with disagreement to the amendment of the House to Senate amendment No. 4.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table.

Mr. ATKINS. I now move to insist on the amendment of the House to Senate amendment No. 4, and to ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on said joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VINEGAR FACTORIES.

Mr. CARLISLE. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to report back a bill (H. R. No. 1843) relating to vinegar factories established and operated prior to March 1, 1879, and to ask for its consideration at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That any vinegar factory for the manufacture of vinegar, established and operated as a vinegar factory prior to March 1, 1879, may be operated for the manufacture of vinegar by the use of alcoholic vapor within such distance less than six hundred feet of any distillery or rectifying-house as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may, in each instance, upon application to him, permit and prescribe in writing, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CARLISLE. There is a short report accompanying that bill, the reading of which I think will furnish a complete explanation.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1843) relating to vinegar factories established and operated prior to March 1, 1879, beg leave to report:

That by the fifth section of the act to amend the laws relating to internal revenue, approved March 1, 1879, it was provided that no vinegar factory for the manufacture of vinegar by what is known as the alcoholic vaporizing process should be permitted within six hundred feet of any distillery or rectifying-house. Since the passage of that act it has been discovered that some such factories, which have been established and in operation for many years, are located within less than the prescribed distance, and the result is, unless the law be modified as to such factories, they will be compelled to cease business entirely, or at least to remove from their present localities.

The object of the bill herewith reported is to confer authority upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to permit such factories as were already established when the act was passed to continue their operations within such distance less than six hundred feet of any distillery or rectifying-house as that officer may prescribe in writing.

Its passage will not affect any factory established since the 1st of March, 1879, or that may hereafter be established. The bill was prepared at the Treasury Department and your committee are satisfied that under it the interests of the Government will be amply protected, while the manufacturers of vinegar by the use of alcoholic vapor will be relieved from great hardship to which they appear to have been subjected by inadvertence rather than by design.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky having the bill in charge whether its passage will effect any diminution in the internal revenue?

Mr. CARLISLE. It will not affect the internal revenue at all.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Senate has passed and sent to the House a bill precisely like the one just read, and I ask leave to lay this bill upon the table and in its stead to take up for action the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the bill was laid on the table and the bill (S. No. 678) relating to vinegar factories established and operated prior to March 1, 1879, was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides that any vinegar factory for the manufacture of vinegar, established and operated as a vinegar factory prior to March 1, 1879, may be operated for the manufacture of vinegar by the use of alcoholic vapor within such distance less than six hundred feet of any distillery or rectifying house, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CARLISLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH L. LEWIS.

Mr. CARLISLE. I am also instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to report back the bill (H. R. No. 2046) to authorize a compromise of the claims of the United States under the will of Joseph L. Lewis, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The substitute will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Attorney-General is hereby authorized and directed to adjust or compromise the claims of the United States under the said devise and bequest upon such terms and conditions as shall be deemed by him fair and reasonable.

The question being taken on the substitute, it was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CARLISLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES CLINTON.

Mr. CARLISLE. I am also directed by the Committee of Ways and Means to report back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1542) for the relief of Charles Clinton, of New Orleans, late assistant treasurer at New Orleans; and I move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BAKER. Not to come back on a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The point of order would still continue even if it came back on a motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS OF FOREIGN STEAMSHIP COMPANIES.

Mr. RICE. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make final adjustment of claims of certain foreign steamship companies arising from an illegal exaction of tonnage duties, accompanied by a report in writing. I ask that the same be printed and recommitted, not to come back on a motion to reconsider.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 96) was read a first and second time, recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, not to come back on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. BICKNELL. I desire to present the views of the minority, and ask that they be printed with the report of the committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

JOHN ELLIS.

Mr. BICKNELL, (by request,) by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of Claims:

Resolved, That there be paid to John Ellis, out of the contingent fund of the House, the sum of $60 per month from October 15, 1877, to February 1, 1878, for services as messenger to the Committee of Claims.

POST-OFFICE IN BALTIMORE.

Mr. KIMMEL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1478) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate for the purchase at private sale or, if necessary, procure by condemnation a site for a post-office in the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland, accompanied by a report in writing; which was recommitted to the same committee, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

HOUSE RESTAURANT.

Mr. KIMMEL. I also ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a bill directing the Architect to remove the bath-room of the House for the enlargement of the restaurant.

Mr. CONGER. I reserve the right to object till I hear the bill read.

The bill was read.

Mr. CONGER. I object. If the committee will provide something in the restaurant for the sustenance of members I would not object to that.

The SPEAKER. That is against the rules of the House.

Mr. CONGER. And I know it is against the practice.

The SPEAKER. There is objection, and the bill is not before the House.

STEAMER B. P. CHENEY.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I desire to present again from the Committee on Appropriations a bill which was objected to yesterday by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. WHITTHORNE.] That gentleman now withdraws his objection.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read for information; after which objections, if any, will be in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to amend section 1, page 234, volume 20, of the United States Statutes at Large, Forty-fifth Congress.

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of section 1, page 234, of the 20th volume of the United States Statutes at Large, passed at the Forty-fifth Congress and approved June 20, 1878, as relates to the steamer B. P. Cheney, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. CONGER. What does the gentleman from Mississippi ask?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I ask for the present consideration of the bill. It is reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CONGER. That throws suspicion on the bill.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I hope the gentleman from Michigan on this occasion will not indulge in any suspicions.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I desire to be allowed a word of explanation. On yesterday I objected to the passage of this bill for the reason that my colleague on the Naval Committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HALMER,] had given me certain information that led me to believe that there had been fraud in this case. My colleague has investigated the matter in connection with the information he had received, and has come to me this morning and stated he has no objection to the passage of the bill. Yesterday in objecting I did it solely for and on account of my friend from Pennsylvania, I myself having no objection to the matter. As that gentleman is satisfied, I now withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there any further objection?

Mr. CONGER. I reserve the right to object until the gentleman from Mississippi makes a statement of the case.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I will repeat the statement which I made yesterday and which if my friend had looked in the RECORD he would have found there.

Mr. CONGER. I generally read the remarks of my friend from Mississippi as they appear in the RECORD, but I failed to do it in this instance.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I do not reproach the gentleman for not having read the RECORD, because I have not read it myself.

I will say that this matter was considered by the Committee on Appropriations at the last session of Congress. The claim had been audited and allowed and was presented to the Committee on Appropriations, and we passed an act authorizing the payment. Some gentleman, I do not know who, getting the ear of the Secretary of the Treasury, represented that there was some fraud in the matter. Thereupon he sent to the Committee on Appropriations a request that we should suspend the payment of the claim until he should investigate it. We did so. We provided that the amount should not be paid until this investigation should be made. The Secretary of the Treasury referred the matter to the Second Auditor of the Treasury, and he reported favorably. It was re-referred to him and he made a second report in its favor. It then went to the First Comptroller. He examined it and reported it right and proper.

Now the Secretary of the Treasury sends in a letter asking that the obstruction may be removed.

Mr. CONGER. Upon that statement I withdraw my objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was sorry to hear the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] say that it was a cause of suspicion that this bill came from the Committee on Appropriations. He must have meant it in a "Pickwickian" sense, for he belongs to no committee that is more careful than the Committee on Appropriations.

The case has been again and again before the committee, and probably no subject which has gone through the different Congresses for a long time has had such a thorough investigation as this one.

Mr. CONGER. If the matter has undergone investigation by those admirable officers of the Government, the Auditor and Comptroller, in whom I have confidence, I will withdraw my objection to the report of the committee.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I am glad the gentleman has seen fit to withdraw his objection. I will not squabble about the reasons why he has done so.

The bill (H. R. No. 2264) was entertained, received its several readings, and was passed.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL LORD, JR.

Mr. EVINS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 62) for the delivery to Samuel Lord, jr., receiver, of certain bonds now in the Treasury of the United States.

The bill was read.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that that bill contains an appropriation, and must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EVINS. I hope the gentleman will not object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BREWER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the morning hour be dispensed with.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. COX. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to call the attention of the House to what would seem to be a reflection on my statement of yesterday, in relation to what fell from the lips of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER.] The RECORD is before me.

Mr. GARFIELD. How much time does the gentleman want?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised?

Mr. COX. I will not take more than five minutes. I have the report of the reporters, which is different from the report in the RECORD. The report of the reporters confirms what I said yesterday, and in addition to that, the printed report in another place confirms what I said, but the RECORD report which I send to the Clerk's desk has this in it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nay, we have, Mr. Chairman, this extraordinary instance in relation to that commission: A gentleman who was appointed by the Forty-fourth Congress on a committee to investigate the elections in the State of South Carolina, to take testimony and report who carried that State in 1876, and whether the electors in favor of Tilden or Hayes carried that State, (I refer to Judge Abbott, of Massachusetts,) went there and after the testimony was taken, and he had it all before him, came back to the Forty-fourth Congress with other democratic members of the committee, reported that the Hayes electors had carried the State of South Carolina, and then he was put on the electoral commission; and when he had no testimony before him he voted in effect that the Tilden electors had carried the State of South Carolina and that the Hayes electors had not.

Mr. COX. Now, I desire to say to the House that I did not see the report made yesterday; I did not correct my own notes, but the words in italics in the passage which the Clerk has read are not in the report of the reporters, and I ask that the reporters' report be read.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not understand what the gentleman is driving at.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman says that the report as published in the RECORD is not correct.

Mr. KEIFER. Does he say that the report of his own remarks is not correct?

Mr. COX. No; the report of your remarks.

Mr. KEIFER. Did the reporters not correctly report the gentleman?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the statement to be, that words have been inserted in the RECORD which were not uttered on the floor.

Mr. COX. It makes me appear to reply to things that were not uttered here.

Mr. KEIFER. We all understand that the gentleman undertook to reply to a man from Indiana who had made no speech and had not said a word upon the subject.

Mr. COX. I claim my five minutes. The RECORD shows this, that when I rose I misunderstood as to the member who had spoken, and first attributed the remarks to the gentleman from Indiana. I replied to what was actually said, and the RECORD shows something that did not occur here, according to the report of the reporter.

I will read from the RECORD:

Mr. COX. I rise to oppose the amendment. I do so for the purpose of correcting my friend from Indiana. I understood him to say that Judge Abbott voted in favor of the democratic electors in South Carolina.

Mr. KEIFER. It was I who made that statement.

That is correct in the RECORD. It has not been changed by the printer. Now, how is a man to be reported fairly? The RECORD shows one thing, the report of the reporter another; and, as I do not want to be placed in a false position, I ask that the reporters' notes be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

My colleague from Ohio [Mr. MCMAHON] says there is something to be learned from looking to the electoral commission. I think there is where we are to learn a very bad lesson. We found gentlemen voted according to their politics there. Nay, we have, Mr. Chairman, this extraordinary thing in relation to that commission: A gentleman who was appointed by the Forty-fourth Congress to the State of South Carolina to take the testimony and report who carried that State, whether the electors in favor of Tilden or of Hayes carried it, I refer to Judge Abbott, of Massachusetts, he went there and took the testimony, had it all before him and came back to the Forty-fourth Congress and reported that the Hayes electors had carried the State of South Carolina, and then you put him on the electoral commission, and when he had no testimony before him he voted that the Tilden electors had carried the State of South Carolina. That is the fact.

Mr. COX. The closing words of what has just been read, "that is the fact," are left out of the RECORD. That is all I have to say. I want the RECORD corrected so as to show the remarks of the gentleman as they were made here. The original report ought to stand.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman is through, I wish to state that the report as printed in the RECORD is correct, with the exception that I put in the words, in one place, "and that the Hayes electors had not"—that is, had not carried the State of South Carolina. That was repeated twice by me, and once it was struck out, so that it appears in the RECORD in only one place. I also struck out the words "that is the fact." As to the words "in effect," which the gentleman says I inserted, those words were used by me, as every one around me here who paid attention to what I said will bear testimony.

MEMBERS on the democratic side. Oh, no.

Mr. KEIFER. I did use those words. If that is all the gentleman desires, I am quite well satisfied that he should make his statement. I remember very well that on yesterday the gentleman, when he found that he was in a place that he could not get out of very well, resorted to a trick common among boys, crying out that they had captured somebody, when in fact they had been taken themselves. I remember perfectly well the gentleman doing that, while the tears were in his eyes. Now this morning he is here with his heart bleeding and his mind still troubled, because he could not use any more unmannerly language toward me than he did yesterday, and because he did not produce any more effect on the House than his language did yesterday when it fell from his lips.

Mr. COX. I have not said an unmanly thing of any man.

Mr. KEIFER. That is the word he used yesterday about me.

Mr. COX. The gentleman concedes that he has altered the report.

Mr. KEIFER. Not in any material sense at all.

Mr. COX. I referred to the report as printed in the RECORD. Where is the manliness in making me appear as replying to something that was not said? I have not changed the RECORD report. I did not correct the notes of my own remarks. The gentleman did change the notes of his remarks in order to blunt the edge of what I said.

Mr. KEIFER. That is simply untrue. There is nothing struck out and nothing added that would affect that question at all.

Mr. COX. After what the gentleman said yesterday about an honorable man, and after his course in changing his remarks for the RECORD, it does not matter what he says as to the truth or falsehood of anything I may say.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] to dispense with the morning hour for the present.

Mr. CONGER. For what purpose?

Mr. CLYMER. In order to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. FRYE. Before this is done I suggest that the judiciary bill, which is now in the morning hour and has been for some time obstructing public business, be referred, by unanimous consent, to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union with the understanding that it shall not be taken up this session.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I am willing to accept that proposition.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 1715) to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes and to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes and of the Statutes at Large relative to the removal of causes from State courts was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union with amendments, with the understanding that it should not be considered therein during the present session of Congress.

Mr. CLYMER. I now insist upon my motion to dispense with the morning hour of to-day.

VETO MESSAGES OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. KNOTT. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] to yield to me in order to present a report from the Committee on the Judiciary upon the veto messages of the President of the United States and to move that it be printed and recommitted to that committee.

Mr. CONGER. I think that report, which I suppose is intended for a campaign document this year, had better be read to the House before it is ordered to be printed.

Mr. KNOTT. I have no objection to its being read.

Mr. CONGER. I think I must object to it now until we get through the appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged report.

Mr. KNOTT. It is the unanimous instruction of the Committee on the Judiciary that I should submit the report and ask that it be printed and recommitted.

Mr. CONGER. Is there a minority report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unadvised, but if desired the Chair will ask that privilege for the minority.

Mr. ROBINSON. It was decided unanimously in the Committee on the Judiciary that the chairman of the committee should submit this report to the House and have it printed and recommitted, with the understanding that hereafter it shall be again reported to the House, at which time the minority of the committee will present their views. It is understood that the report shall not now be read.

Mr. BAKER. There is consent to make it public, I suppose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the arrangement proposed, which seems to be in accordance with the unanimous agreement of the Committee on the Judiciary. It is ordered accordingly.

PAY OF MESSENGER, COMMITTEE OF WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. CLYMER. I now insist on my motion to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman to yield to me a moment, that I may ask the House to do an act of justice to an employé of the Committee of Ways and Means. I desire to submit a resolution to which I think there will be no objection.

Mr. CLYMER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to submit for adoption at this time the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to John E. Kelly for service as messenger to the Committee of Ways and Means for the present session at the same rate now paid to messengers and doorkeepers of the House.

This man faithfully served the Committee of Ways and Means for two Congresses and he has served regularly and faithfully during the present session. But the ordinary resolution heretofore passed directing his pay has at this session been omitted by mere oversight.

The SPEAKER. Is this to come out of the contingent fund?

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Then the resolution must go to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. GARFIELD. Very well, let it go there. I hope that committee will report it back promptly.

Mr. MILLS. This is a unanimous report of the Committee of Ways and Means, who understand all the facts. There is no use of sending it to the Committee of Accounts. I ask that the resolution be adopted now.

Mr. BREWER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let the resolution be referred to the Committee of Accounts.

The SPEAKER. It will be so referred.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, there is some difference of opinion on this side as to the effect of sending to the Committee of the Whole the bill which has occupied the morning hour. Do I understand that the bill will come up again at the commencement of the next session as soon as the House may go into Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole, and whenever the House goes into Committee of the Whole the bill will be reached.

Mr. CONGER. Not during the present session, however.

The SPEAKER. Not during the present session. That was the understanding, clear and distinct.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I am satisfied with that arrangement, but prefer if there is no objection that the bill be fixed for consideration on the second Tuesday of December next.

Mr. CONGER. I object to fixing any time for its consideration.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Do I understand that as soon as the House goes into Committee of the Whole at the next session that bill will come up?

The SPEAKER. It will come up in its order as prescribed by the rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Are there any other bills ahead of it?

The SPEAKER. One, the Chair thinks.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Only one bill ahead of it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not certain about that. The gentleman will find out the fact by application at the Clerk's office.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. CLYMER to dispense with the morning hour, it was agreed to; two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLYMER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2175) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLYMER. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the Army appropriation bill. Pending that motion, I ask that the bill be considered by sections, under the five-minute rule, until the whole bill is disposed of, save the sixth section, which is what is known as the political clause, and that when the sixth section is taken up there shall be general debate to the extent of one half hour on each side.

Mr. PRICE. Had not the gentleman better provide that the bill be considered by paragraphs instead of by sections?

Mr. CLYMER. Very well; I will say "by paragraphs," if it suits the gentleman better. I propose that when the sixth section is reached there shall be general debate for one hour, to be divided equally between the two sides of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. That means, I suppose, that the sixth section is to be informally passed over till we go through with the rest of the bill?

Mr. CLYMER. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is all right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the arrangement proposed, and the order is made accordingly.

The motion of Mr. CLYMER that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2175) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

Mr. CLYMER. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the House, this bill will be considered by paragraphs under the five-minute rule, and when section 6 is reached it will be passed over informally until all the other sections of the bill have been disposed of, and then one hour of general debate will be allowed on section 6.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1880, as follows.

Mr. CLYMER. I move, pro forma, to strike out the last word of the paragraph just read for the purpose of explaining very briefly the provisions of this bill. It is precisely the one known as the vetoed Army appropriation bill, except in the particulars which I will specify. There is a sum of money to the amount of $30,000 set apart for the building of a storehouse and depot at Omaha. It comes in as a proviso to the section of the bill which provides for the repairing of public buildings.

Then the sixth section of the vetoed bill, known as the political section, is stricken out and another substituted. Save in these two particulars, this bill is precisely the one which was vetoed on the 30th of April last.

The amount estimated for all the purposes in this bill by the Secretary of War is $31,898,965.19. The amount appropriated is $26,797,300. The bill is less than the estimates $5,101,655.19. The amount appropriated for the Army during the present fiscal year under existing law is $25,893,486. The increase over the appropriation for the present fiscal year by the bill now under consideration is $853,813.99.

This increase, Mr. Chairman, is made up of the following items: in the Pay department proper, $496,000; in travel pay and discharged soldiers, $29,736.35; in retained pay, $84,186.80; pay to soldiers for clothing not drawn, $106,721; additional pay to enlisted men, $44,852; making a total increase in the Pay department of $761,496.82. In the Quartermaster's Department there is an increase of $250,000; in the Ordnance department of $10,000; in the manufacture of arms in national armories, $100,000; and in the repair of ordnance in the hands of troops, $5,000; making the increase $1,126,496.82.

There are two new items in this bill, amounting to $55,000, as follows: for the purchase of a site for a powder depot, $50,000; and for the repair of the range ground at Sandy Hook, $5,000; making a total increase in this bill over existing law, as I have already stated, of $1,181,496.82.

There are reductions in the bill, as compared with existing law, amounting to $327,682.83, the items of which are as follows, namely:

In pay of commissary-sergeants	$15,000 00
Commissary-sergeants	1,384 00
Mileage of officers, &c	30,000 00
Telegrams, citizen witnesses, &c	10,000 00
Subsistence department	15,000 00
Quarters of superintendent at Sandy Hook	10,000 00
Hospital stewards	6,000 00
Completing Medical and Surgical History of War	12,883 85
Completing Medical and Surgical History of War, second edition, part 3	17,414 98
Military post at Black Hills	100,000 00
Military post at Milk River, Montana	100,000 00
For committee on reform in the Army	5,000 00
For committee on transfer of Indian Bureau	5,000 00
	327,682 83

The condensed statement is as follows:

Increase by this bill	$1,126,496 82
New items in this bill	55,000 00
Total increase by bill	1,181,496 82
Decrease as compared with law of 1878	327,682 83
Net increase as first stated	853,813 99

I have stated the exact provisions of this bill so members, as we proceed with its consideration, will be able to understand fully what it is proposed to enact into law.

Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman has stated there is an appropriation of $50,000 proposed by this bill which was not in the vetoed bill. Let me remind him that it was in the vetoed bill.

Mr. CLYMER. Then that is a correction which should be made, and the correction shall appear in the RECORD.

Mr. SPARKS. It is no new item.

Mr. CLYMER. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of recruiting and transportation of recruits from rendezvous to depot, $75,000. And no money appropriated by this act shall be paid for recruiting the Army beyond the number of twenty-five thousand enlisted men, including Indian scouts and hospital-stewards; and thereafter there shall be no more than twenty-five thousand enlisted men in the Army at any one time, unless otherwise authorized by law. Nothing, however, in this act shall be construed to prevent enlistments for the Signal Service, which shall hereafter be maintained, as now organized and as provided by law, with a force of enlisted men not exceeding four hundred and fifty, after present terms of enlistment have expired.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I move, in line 12, to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifteen;" so as to provide that the Army hereafter shall not consist of more than fifteen thousand men.

Mr. Chairman, I have to say that I was grieved to hear the remarks of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] in reporting this bill that provides for an increased expenditure for the Army of the United States. As we progress not only in civilization but in material power and strength throughout the country it would seem, when we look to the fact that the domestic enemies of our Government, regarding the Indians as such, are decreasing yearly in number, and to the further fact that our neighbors in our immediate vicinity and upon our borders are decreasing while we go on making gigantic strides in progress in every way—it would seem to me that the consideration of such facts would tend to do away with the reason which heretofore existed for a large army and increased expenditure for the support of the Army, and yet we are to-day called upon in the report made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to still further increase the expenditures for the Army of the United States. I for one, sir, had hoped, with the advent of a new administration in this House, that at least the attention of the guardians of the people's money would be directed to reduce rather than increase Army expenditures.

I have nothing to say upon the general merit of the proposition I have made. I for one believe there is no necessity whatever for an army in this country. I believe, sir, if this sore on the body-politic, which is only serving to increase the heavy pension list so burdensome to the labor and industry of the country, were got rid of, it would be better for the general interest and prosperity of the country.

Sir, an army is not necessary. In recent years we have demonstrated, to the satisfaction of the world, that our fathers were right when they said the surest bulwark and protection for our country was a reliance upon its militia. And I would have been glad, rather than have witnessed this report of an increase in the expenditures of the Government, to have witnessed a report that looked to a reduction of the numbers of the Army and the reduction of its expenditures.

Sir, it is instructive to go back for a moment and look to the increase year by year in the amounts that have been appropriated for the support of this branch of the public service. To-day there is in this bill appropriated more money than it cost to administer the entire Government during the administration of the younger Adams. Why is this? Is there any necessity for it in the condition of this Government? Is it called for with a view to the maintenance of the rights of the Government or its honor or its interest in any direction? An army like ours should not be kept up by a government whose chief reliance ought to be and must be upon the patriotism of the people at large.

Mr. KEIFER. I simply rise to state that I have heard upon this floor at various times, not only in this Congress but in the Forty-fifth, the statement made that in the early history of the country there was no disposition to have an army. I want to say especially to the gentleman from Tennessee, who has in substance made many times this speech that we have heard this morning, that the second veto message of George Washington, bearing date February 28, 1797, was upon a bill providing for a reduction of the Army. He said it was injudicious and unjust. That is all the speech I desire now to make.

Mr. McMILLIN. What was the size of the Army at that time; can the gentleman from Ohio tell me?

Mr. KEIFER. It was proportionately as large as it is now, taking everything into account. Gentlemen around me say it was proportionately larger. If I recollect rightly, General Washington said he was sorry the Army was not more adequate to the wants of the country than the Army at that time which it was proposed to reduce, a proposition upon which he put his veto.

Mr. McMILLIN. That was not my question. What was the number of the Army at that time?

Mr. KEIFER. I cannot give the gentleman the exact number; but I will obtain the facts and give them to him.

Mr. McMILLIN. It was much smaller than it is to-day.

Mr. KEIFER. It was proportionately as large or larger.

Mr. CLYMER. The increase in this bill over the law of this year, which has been criticised by the gentleman from Tennessee, is explainable in this wise: Last year the Appropriations Committee in their bill made appropriations for an army of twenty thousand men. When the bill went to the Senate the number was increased from twenty thousand to twenty-five thousand; but no increase was made in the appropriation, so as to provide for the additional five thousand men. Hence the appropriations last year were grossly inadequate for the support of an army of the full number provided by law. In this bill we have made only the appropriation necessary for the actual strength of the Army. The increase of this bill over the bill of last year is thus explained.

I might sympathize to a certain extent with the views of the gentleman from Tennessee with reference to a reduction in the Army; but we on the Appropriations Committee are obliged to deal with things in a practical way. The gentleman perfectly well understands that no bill for a reduction of the Army below twenty-five thousand men can pass at this session. We have tried it over and over again. There are conflicting views as to what should be the proper size of the Army; and upon more than one occasion the committee in its efforts to reduce the Army has been defeated. Hence in this short session, with business pressing upon us, with every one anxious to leave, it would be futile and almost foolish for the Appropriations Committee to bring into the House a bill which would provoke discussion, cause disagreement, and only lead to the final defeat of the committee's recommendations. We have therefore, as I have said, dealt with this matter as practical men. In the future there may be time and opportunity for us to make the corrections which the gentleman from Tennessee would have us make.

Mr. WHITTHORNE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I only desire to reply to my friend from Pennsylvania in a single remark. I have been taught, as a great many gentlemen on this floor have been, that the Committee on Appropriations should report general legislation which being in the interests of economy looks to the reduction of expenses. I have been painfully taught that it is to this committee we have to look for all efforts of that kind. And, by the indulgence of the House, I will say that a decrease in the number of men will cause but a very small reduction of the expenditures of the Army. What should arrest the attention of the Committee on Appropriations if they have jurisdiction, and they have taken jurisdiction heretofore of matters of that kind, is the mass of barnacles that are clinging to the military establishment. Let them look at the increase in the pay, at the increase in the mileage, at the increase in the transportation, at the mode and manner of making contracts for the subsistence of the Army. These things have been growing year by year. I feel warranted in making the assertion that per capita, year after year, there has been in all these things an increase in expenditure.

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee. I do not wish to occupy the attention of the committee, but I would say that I think the gentleman must understand that the matters suggested by him are purely matters of legislation and should rightfully come from the Committee on Military Affairs. And I would further suggest that it is proper for him, as chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, to report legislation of a nature calculated to remove the barnacles clinging to the Navy. But I have never heard him come before the House and report legislation of that character in reference to the Navy. When it comes to another branch of the public service the gentleman is very ready to make a charge in reference to the Army. I would recommend the gentleman to report legislation looking to a reduction of the expenses of the Navy, which are peculiarly under his charge; and I trust he will confine himself to the special duties belonging to him as chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Allow me to say right there that the Committee on Naval Affairs in the Forty-fourth Congress did that same thing and had to fight the Committee on Appropriations upon it.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read as follows:

For hire of quarters for troops, of storehouses for the safe keeping of military stores, of offices, and of grounds for camp and summer cantonments, and for temporary frontier stations, for the construction of temporary huts and stables, and for repairing public buildings at established posts, $880,000.

Mr. CLYMER. I move to add to that clause the following proviso:

Provided, That of said sum $30,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended in the construction of a necessary storehouse and depot building at the city of Omaha, in the State of Nebraska: And provided further, That no part of said sum shall be used in the purchase of the ground required for such purpose. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to receive, by donation of citizens or others, the title for any lots or tracts of land necessary to the proper location of the building or buildings hereinbefore provided for.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that this proviso is attached to the next paragraph of the bill at line 190. That was an error on the part of the Public Printer. The proviso is attached to the wrong clause of the bill. This amendment is necessary in order that it may be placed where it properly belongs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read as follows:

For construction of a military post near the Niobrara River, in Northern Nebraska or Dakota, at a point to be selected by the General of the Army, with the approval of the Secretary of War, $50,000: Provided, That of said sum $30,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended in the construction of a necessary storehouse and depot building at the city of Omaha, in the State of Nebraska: And provided further, That no part of said sum shall be used in the purchase of the ground required for such purpose. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to receive, by donation of citizens or others, the title for any lots or tracts of land necessary to the proper location of the building or buildings hereinbefore provided for.

Mr. CLYMER. I move to strike out the proviso to that clause.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLYMER. I move to amend further by inserting, after the word "dollars," in line 190, the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For maintaining and improving national cemeteries, $100,000.

Mr. McMAHON. I move to amend that clause by inserting after the word "dollars" the following:

And the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers may change the regulation stones to be used in the central branch, at a cost not exceeding $1.50 additional for each one.

I hope that that provision will be adopted. The cemetery at the National Home is one of the most important grounds in connection with the building there, and is a spot that has been ornamented by the United States Government, and in part by the soldiers, with a general monument costing $10,000. The regulation stone in the national cemetery is now but two inches wide, and tall and slender, and the managers desire to have a stone put up that shall be five inches wide and closer to the ground, and that the names of the soldiers shall be put upon the tops of the stones. It will not cost a great deal of money.

Mr. McCOOK. Why not make the provision general? Why apply it only to the national cemetery?

Mr. McMAHON. They have only asked for it at that place.

Mr. McCOOK. The board of managers have asked for it?

Mr. McMAHON. Yes, sir; at least it is asked for by one of them.

Mr. KEIFER. I would suggest that the head-stones are up in all the other cemeteries, so that this change cannot be made.

Mr. McCOOK. All right.

The amendment offered by Mr. McMAHON was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read as follows:

For quarters for superintendent of the proving ground at Sandy Hook, $2,500.

Mr. MANNING. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk, to go in after the clause just read.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

After line 284, on page 13, insert the following:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to grant to the National Aquarium Association of the United States a lease authorizing said association to occupy and use, for the purposes for which it was organized, so much of the Government reservation of Sandy Hook as may not be used for military and light-house purposes, on the condition that said association, at its own cost, shall construct and keep in repair all necessary sea-walls on both water fronts and construct and maintain a roadway throughout the entire length of such parts of the reservation as it may from time to time become entitled to and occupy under this act; that it construct and keep in repair a first-class life-saving station on said reservation, under the control of the proper officer of the Treasury; and on the further condition that said association shall cause at once to be constructed an aquarium of such character and on such a scale as shall be approved by the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and which shall at all times be at his service, without cost to the Government, for the inspection and study of the animals and plants contained therein, and that in connection therewith such apparatus be erected and attendance furnished for the propagation of food-fishes, under the direction of said Commissioner, as he may call for from time to time, free of expense to the United States: Provided, however, That said association shall be regarded as a tenant-at-will; that any neglect or failure to comply with any of the foregoing conditions herein provided for shall work a forfeiture of all rights under this act; and whenever it may be necessary for the public defense that said association shall vacate said reservation it shall, without cost to or right of damage against the United States, remove therefrom all of its structures, excepting sea-walls, and excepting such as may be condemned and taken for public purposes according to law.

Mr. HAWLEY. I raise the point of order that that amendment is not in the interest of economy, is not germane to the bill, and is new legislation.

Mr. MANNING. I submit in answer to the objection of the gentleman from Connecticut that it is in the line of economy, that it does not require any expenditure on the part of the Government, but that it saves the Government perhaps $15,000 or more. The Book of Estimates shows that $10,000 is asked for protecting the fort at Sandy Hook from the encroachment of the sea, and $5,000 for the protection of East Beacon, Sandy Hook, from the encroachment of the sea. It is provided by the proposed lease that $3,000 shall be expended by the National Aquarium Association for the construction of a life-saving station, and a sufficient sum for constructing sea-walls on both water-fronts. The association is required by the amendment also to make a roadway from the northern limits of the reservation to the mainland.

I say in addition to this, while speaking to the point of order, that the facts I have referred to are contained in the Book of Estimates, and further confirmatory facts are set forth by Governor McClellan, of New Jersey, and by the members of both branches of the Legislature of that State.

From these papers it appears that it is desired that this association shall have leased to it by the Secretary of War, as tenants at will, a portion of this reservation. Upon the merits of this amendment it is perhaps not now necessary for me to say anything until the point of order has been disposed of.

Mr. HAWLEY. The mere excuse that this company is to build a sea-wall there, which probably would be indispensable for their purposes, I am sure is not sufficient to meet the point of order. It is proposed by this amendment to give to a private company (and what the company is is not fully explained) the use of a large tract of Government ground at Sandy Hook below the fort. Now, I submit that there is no evidence showing that such a proposition is in the interest of economy at all. The only pretense that there is any economy about it is that this company may find it necessary to build something in the shape of a sea-wall along the sea front of their structure. I say that this proposition is not germane to the bill, is not in the interest of economy, and is new legislation entirely. It is a grant of public property to a private company.

Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey. I am not personally acquainted with the land which it is proposed by this amendment to donate to this association. I understand that there is no corresponding return to be given to the Government. I also understand that it is very valuable property, upon which the Government has expended thousands of dollars per annum; very valuable, not for a fort simply, but as containing upon it valuable timber, and in it large quantities of granite which will be taken from the Government entirely if this amendment is adopted, and by means of which this corporation will receive large benefits without the Government receiving any corresponding return. For that reason I think the point of order is well taken.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I understand this to be a proposition authorizing the Secretary of War, or rather empowering the Secretary of War, to lease a piece of land which is now a part of a Government reservation, and for which the Government has no earthly use. If that be so, and this amendment will authorize an officer of the Government to make a contract from which the Government will derive a revenue from property that is now useless and paying nothing whatever to the Government, then it seems to me the point of order is not well taken.

The fact that this property may be valuable, or that there may be something valuable contained in the soil, is of no consequence, since this proposition does not authorize the Secretary of War to dispose of any such valuable property. He is to lease this property for a specific purpose to the National Aquarium for specific uses. And the soil, or whatever may be contained in it or may be upon it, whether stone or timber, is in no wise affected by this proposition. The Government does not part with the title of it in any respect.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this is a national aquarium?

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. An aquarium for "The National Association."

Mr. ATKINS. What has the United States to do with this association?

Mr. SPARKS. Nothing.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I do not mean that it is a national association in the sense that the Government owns it or will have any specific interest in it, except that it may have access to it for educational purposes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; at fifty cents a head.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I am not disposed to discuss the merits of this proposition at this time. I am speaking now upon the point of order that was made upon the proposition by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.] If I am correct in what I have said, then it seems to me the point of order is not well taken, because this proposition, if adopted, will result in bringing to the Government a revenue from property which now pays nothing whatever to the Government.

Mr. CLYMER. I feel that it will be a very difficult matter for the chairman, under our rules, to determine whether this proposed legislation will result or not in the reduction of expenditures. Apparently, upon the face of the proposition, if this association should build the sea-wall called for in the proposed amendment, if sea-walls are necessary to be built and maintained there, that would seem to be a reduction of expenditures on the part of the Government. I do not know whether these sea-walls are contemplated or in any way required for the use of the Government. But it does seem to me that if they should be required by the Government there should be in this proposition a provision that these sea-walls should be under the direction, order, and control, as to their size and extent, of the Engineer-in-Chief of the Army. That, it seems to me, would be a wise precaution.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is not in the proposition now.

Mr. CLYMER. As I understand, it is not now in the proposed amendment. Again, as to the Government deriving any revenue from this scheme, I do not understand that any of the charges to be made for admission to the aquarium are to go to the Government. Therefore I think the Chair may find great difficulty in deciding whether this amendment comes within the provisions of our rule or within the spirit of it. I confess I am puzzled myself on that point. This question was under consideration in the Committee on Appropriations. The desire was that we should attach this to the bill, members reserving to themselves the right to oppose it in Committee of the Whole. I do not propose at this time to discuss the propriety of the legislation proposed—whether it be beneficial or not. I merely throw out these suggestions as to the difficulties surrounding the question.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether it is not proposed that the Secretary of War shall lease this ground without consideration?

Mr. CLYMER. As I understand, there is to be no consideration save that this association shall build these sea-walls. They are to be allowed to erect what buildings they please, the right being reserved to the Government to remove the buildings and resume possession of the ground at any time, the sea-walls to be allowed to remain.

Mr. GIBSON. Are not these grounds necessary for the practice of heavy artillery?

Mr. CLYMER. I did not propose to touch the merits of the question now; but I will say to the gentleman from Louisiana that in this very bill there is an appropriation of $4,000 for the purpose of improving the practice-grounds at Sandy Hook. Now, as to whether those grounds are the same premises which it is proposed this association shall occupy, I have no knowledge.

Mr. MANNING. In answer to the remark of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] I will say that the amendment proposes that the Secretary of War shall draw his lease to the National Aquarium Association in such terms that both water-fronts shall be protected. More than that, the association is to construct a life-saving station at a cost of not less than $3,000.

In reference to the suggestion of the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. CLARK,] and in answer to the remarks of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. ATKINS,] I will read one or two lines from a statement of Governor George B. McClellan and over thirty members of the New Jersey Legislature. They say:

> These improvements on Sandy Hook reservation—

Consisting, I will say, of two or three frame buildings, a life-saving station, and a sand fort—> are within one mile of Sandy Hook, leaving four miles of barren sand-bar not only unused, but useless, so far as the Government of the United States is concerned, except for the purpose of communication with the mainland.

Coming more pertinently to the question under consideration, I will ask whether it is even intimated that the Government does not now feel it to be its duty to make an appropriation for the protection of these water-fronts? The answer is given by the gentleman in charge of this bill, who calls attention to the fact that an appropriation of $4,000 for this purpose is contained in the bill.

This National Aquarium Association, incorporated under a general act of Congress and organized in pursuance of the local laws of New York, will be required by the lease which this amendment authorizes the Secretary of War to make, to do all these things to which I have referred. If the association fails to comply with the requirements of the lease—it is but a tenant at will—the lease is at once revoked and becomes void. Let me say to the gentleman from Louisiana and to the gentleman from Tennessee, who intimate that there may be an objection in the fact that these grounds will be required for practice of heavy artillery, that the lease, if it be drawn in conformity with the amendment I have submitted, will provide that whenever the Government desires to use this property for any purpose whatsoever the association must at once vacate the premises at its own expense. What becomes then of this objection? The chief executive of the Commonwealth of New Jersey and members of both branches of the Legislature, in a document presented to this House over their own signatures, have declared that this ground is utterly worthless and unused by the Government, and in this statement the Secretary of War concurs.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I wish to state that I misapprehended this proposition in regard to one matter. I supposed that it authorized the Secretary of War to lease these grounds without consideration. I find, however, that certain improvements to be put upon the grounds are the consideration.

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to know whether it is in order to discuss the merits of the question upon a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has repeatedly requested members to confine their remarks to the point of order.

Mr. SPARKS. On that point I propose to say one word. The only question here is whether or not the lease of this ground to the corporation named will, so far as the Government is concerned, retrench expenditures. If not, the amendment is clearly out of order. Now, how can the lease of this land to this corporation reduce the expenses of the Government? I cannot see how it can possibly do so, unless indirectly in view of the requirement that this corporation shall build a sea-wall which otherwise it would be necessary for the Government to build.

Mr. MANNING. And a life-saving station.

Mr. SPARKS. I am told that there is such a station there already.

Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey. A sea-wall cannot be maintained there. Every severe gale will break it away.

Mr. SPARKS. My understanding of the rule is that in passing upon a question of this kind the Chair should not consider nor go into any guessing as to indirect or incidental retrenchments. The proposition, if it changes existing law, must show on its face clearly that it will reduce expenditure, or under the rule it is not in order. You have no right to guess that if a certain contingency occurs expenditures may be reduced. The proposition must show on its face that there is a reduction, or it is clearly out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will decide the question of order. The point is not free from doubt. Rule 120 provides that "nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject-matter of the bill shall retrench expenditure." The Chair is not clear as to whether the provision of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi does change existing law in the sense in which that phrase is used in the rule. It does not authorize a grant of Government property, but simply such temporary regulation in regard to the use of this public property as may be made by the officer of the Government. It is not legislation in the sense in which that term is usually used, and as the Chair believes it is used in this rule. There is at least such doubt on the point that the Chair will not rule the provision out of order, but prefers to submit the amendment on its merits to the committee. The Chair overrules the point of order, and the amendment is before the committee on its merits.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, unless the gentleman from Mississippi desires to advocate it, and I suppose he does not, as he has already stated all there is in favor of the amendment, I have a few remarks to make about it. There is a very valuable property in the possession of the Government beginning at the upper point of Sandy Hook, running along the shore some four or five or six miles, (I do not know precisely how far,) on which there has been expended a large sum of money in building—not a sand fort, but an enormous granite fort. It is not complete yet. There is enough of granite in and around the fort to build a good-sized town—to build this Capitol two or three times over. There is a life-saving station there. There is a telegraph station there for the benefit of the press of the country. Adjoining the fort and its surroundings on the south and fronting on the open sea is the ground which this private aquarium company wishes to get hold of, and it contains the best long-range ground which the Ordnance department has in the country for practice with heavy long-range guns. They can fire down the beach several miles, five or six or more, I believe, and it is just that particular part of the ground this hotel company wants to be placed in possession of.

Mr. MANNING rose.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let the gentleman from Mississippi wait a moment, and I will not leave anything for him to talk about. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is not a word here from the Secretary of War saying this is a legitimate enterprise of any description. There is not a word from the Ordnance department saying they can spare this ground over which they fire shots weighing from two hundred to a thousand pounds. I should like to know how an aquarium and hotel company can be established there and this ground can be used for long-range practice by our heavy guns at that point.

There is a gigantic African here. [Laughter.] I am satisfied of it. I heard all there was to be said in the Appropriations Committee on this subject. It is a magnificent situation for a hotel company. Half a dozen great hotel companies might establish themselves there like those at Coney Island or Long Branch.

It is right in sight of Coney Island. It is just across the bay. It is a splendid place for an aquarium company to put a shark in a tub and to build a five-hundred-thousand dollar hotel. [Laughter.] It will not do; it must be that there is an African here. I know they have induced distinguished, respectable, and honorable gentlemen to sign the petition or recommendation for the establishment of an aquarium company there, but we have not seen the articles of organization. We have no guarantee they will spend the money upon aquaria. We have not the approval of the Secretary of War. We have no information whatever from the Ordnance department. I want the African taken out of the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANNING. From the triumphant air of the gentleman from Connecticut I supposed I would be left nothing to say.

Mr. HAWLEY. If you have anything to say in favor of it I should like to hear it.

Mr. MANNING. If you will give me your attention I will state the facts. I will call the Secretary of War and let us hear how he answers you. Let us see whether you are quite correct in saying to this House that the Secretary of War has not spoken of the question at issue.

Mr. HAWLEY. We had this before the Appropriations Committee, and not one word from him on it.

Mr. MANNING. You said nothing has been heard from the Secretary of War, and that was the complaint made here, and I am now about to show you what he does say on the subject.

Mr. HAWLEY. Nothing has been heard officially, and if there is any document it should have been sent to the Speaker and referred to the committee. If there is anything of the kind I should like to hear it.

Mr. MANNING. You are mistaken again, and it seems you are only adding one blunder to another.

Mr. HAWLEY. Go on.

Mr. MANNING. On the 11th of February, 1879, there came into possession of the Speaker of the House a letter from the Secretary of War. I doubt not if you had been as careful to discover the merits of the matter as you were to find something which did not properly belong to it, not in the range of this discussion, you would not have overlooked this letter. Let us hear what it is.

Mr. HAWLEY. That was the last Congress, and not before our committee at all.

Mr. MANNING. February 11, 1879.

Mr. HAWLEY. That was the last Congress.

Mr. MANNING. Very well. Then you object to it because it is too old.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no objection to its being read. I said we had not a word before our committee, and we never heard of this letter.

Mr. MANNING. The impression you made on me, and I doubt not the impression desired which you have made on many of the members, was that the Secretary of War was silent as the grave on the question at issue.

Mr. HAWLEY. We never had that before us.

Mr. MANNING. Very well; that is the impression the gentleman made. And am I to take an intimation from the gentleman from Connecticut or a vague insinuation that comes from other quarters and to set aside positive statements of worthy gentlemen to the number of three or four dozen, holding high places, statements indeed from the highest officers known to the laws of New Jersey down to the humblest member of the legislative body of that State? Am I to set all that aside as worthless? They use clear, positive language, and doubtless know whereof they speak. It has been said that this paper contains the name of one man who does not recollect to have signed it or that he must have been drunk when he signed it. I have carefully looked at that signature and when I submitted it to the gentleman who bore to me the information that perhaps this was true, he agreed with me that he was not drunk, but duly sober, and that his signature was genuine.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman know that the National Aquarium Association has ever been incorporated?

Mr. MANNING. I have that information in my desk. I sent for it because I wanted to get at all the facts of the case; and I have a certificate from the clerk of the court showing that certain gentlemen—I do not know who they are—were incorporated as the National Aquarium Association on the 5th of February last.

Mr. HISCOCK. That was the next question I was about to put: Do you know who are the members of the corporation?

Mr. MANNING. I do not; but they are accredited to me by the host of witnesses whose statement I have commended to the kindly attention of the gentleman from Connecticut. Governor McClellan, various officers of his State and members of his Legislature, the geologist of the State of New Jersey, the commissioner of fisheries of Maryland, Professor Baird of the Smithsonian Institution, and the Secretary of War all favor the proposed lease. Indeed, much of that amendment was written by Professor Baird himself. It is a very material amendment, and one which I gladly accepted, because it places under the control of the Fish Commissioner this National Aquarium Association to the extent that it will be required to make the aquarium accessible to him and to construct apparatus and furnish attendance for the propagation of fish and the study of food-fishes and all animals and plants therein contained.

But I will read what the Secretary of War states in his letter to Congress:

> It appears from the report herewith—

To which I have called attention—> that a portion of the reservation can be appropriated to the purpose named without detriment to the public service.

Remember, these people are to vacate Sandy Hook Point at whatever moment the Secretary of War may say, if he thinks it desirable himself to put them there. I suppose that on that point the Secretary of War can speak as satisfactorily and intelligently as the gentleman from Connecticut, and he says it can be done without detriment to the public service. Then only the authority to lease is to be exercised. He says:

> I recommend, in case Congress deems the establishment of the aquarium a question of public importance, that authority be conferred upon the Secretary of War to permit the use, for the purposes named, of such portion of said reservation as is not needed for military purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

Here the committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair a message from the Senate was communicated by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 343) relating to printing impressions from portraits and vignettes; and

A bill (S. No. 681) for the relief of Henry Conard.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a joint resolution (H. R. No. 85) fixing the date on which the pay of committee clerks, pages, and laborers of the House of Representatives, who are paid during the session only, shall begin for this session.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces as the conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (H. R. No. 1) to repeal certain clauses in the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1879, Mr. ATKINS of Tennessee, Mr. COBB of Indiana, and Mr. HAWLEY of Connecticut.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILBER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1842) to remove the political disabilities of J. C. Pemberton, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 94) directing a monument to be erected to mark the birthplace of George Washington.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey. I move to strike out the last word.

During the last session of Congress a bill was introduced authorizing certain persons to be incorporated as trustees of the National Aquarium Association and authorizing them also to lease from the Secretary of War these premises. That bill failed to receive proper consideration; and therefore, in order that this corporation known under the name of the National Aquarium Association shall receive consideration, they now want to tack this legislation to the present appropriation bill. As the gentleman from Connecticut has stated, I am well satisfied that the gentlemen whose signatures are attached to this paper from New Jersey were entirely misled with respect to the true character of the paper which they signed. If they had known that certain parties, some of whom I am informed are irresponsible, proposed to lease these grounds from the Government without any recompense to the Government in return, for the purpose of establishing not an aquarium, but public buildings by means of which they may receive large sums of money when rented as hotels and otherwise; by which they may appropriate to themselves the valuable timber there—and there is valuable timber there to a large amount as I am informed, and not only that, but also the granite which the Government has put there for years and years at large expense—by which they would receive large revenues and sufficient returns to enable them to carry on their enterprise without any outlay of money themselves at all—I am satisfied that if these facts had been known to the gentlemen whose names are subscribed to that paper they never would have signed it.

Now, it may be said these statements are somewhat rash. I do not desire to mislead the House. Personally I do not know these lands, but I am informed by gentlemen who know all about them that they are not a barren waste; that this is not simply a sand-bar, but that it is covered by the most valuable timber to be found anywhere—cedar timber—and that there is a large amount of granite there which has cost the Government a large sum of money.

I do not see where any return is to come to the Government if this corporation is to take charge of the property.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I desire to ask the gentleman from New Jersey a question for information. I want to know what right the association would acquire to any timber or granite mentioned by the gentleman.

Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey. I have not a copy of the amendment before me, but I understand that it says that they may take and appropriate to their own use such property as they may deem advisable and such as is not used by the General Government. As I understand it, if there is any timber in the way of the prospective improvements which they may desire to make in the way of building, they may remove and keep that timber.

Mr. MANNING. Not to the detriment of the Government; the Secretary of War says that.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. We may provide against it by an amendment if there is any danger of that sort.

Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey. Now, with reference to the argument that the Government is to be benefited. It is urged that there is to be established a life-saving station. There is one there now. Does the gentleman say that another is needed? Does he say that an additional life-saving station is required?

Mr. MANNING. Not at all; but there is a necessity for the improvement of that one now there, and $3,000 is to be paid by the association for the purpose of making the necessary improvements; and if there is need for another, then they can be required to construct another.

Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey. We are not opposed to any improvements in New Jersey at all. We desire that all legitimate improvements within our State should be made or carried on, because it is an advantage to our State; but we are opposed to a set of gentlemen coming there, under the title of the National Aquarium Association, and pretending one thing while in fact meaning another; hoodwinking the governor and the Legislature of the State into signing a recommendation which they would not have signed, in my judgment, if they had known all about it.

Mr. MANNING. Allow me to say to the gentleman that if he can make good that declaration, and give plausible reasons for it as to the governor, the State Legislature, and the State geologist having been hoodwinked, then I will consider the charge, but there is no intimation that such is the fact.

Mr. BAYNE. I simply want to ask the gentleman from New Jersey one question. I want to ask him whether or not any Representative on this floor from that State favors the proposition set forth in the amendment?

Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey. I will answer most cheerfully. I understand, although I have consulted with but one member of the delegation, that every member on the floor is opposed to this legislation.

Mr. MANNING. But the Senators of the State are in favor of it. I have not seen them myself, but that is my information.

Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey. If the Senators from New Jersey knew what was the real nature of this proposition, they would be just as much opposed to it as we are.

Mr. ROSS. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MANNING] says that the Senators from New Jersey are both in favor of this proposition. I had a consultation with Senator MCPHERSON yesterday, and he told me that he was opposed to it.

Mr. MANNING. Opposed to this amendment?

Mr. ROSS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANNING. He has never seen it, I am sure.

Mr. ROSS. I showed him the original amendment that the gentleman showed to me. I received this amendment from the gentleman from Mississippi—the original. These lands are in my district. I am in favor of any and all legitimate improvements, but nothing should be done under cover. If they want to build hotels let them say so. If they want to take valuable property of the Government and appropriate it to their own use, so as to receive money therefrom to further their speculations, let their proposition be made in that way, but not in the dark, under the pretense of benefiting mankind through a so-called aquarium association.

I desire the gentleman to state who compose this association. Nobody knows. Shall we give valuable privileges to parties whom nobody knows, and for whom no member on this floor will vouch. The gentleman from Mississippi has been misled——

The question was taken on the amendment; and it was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. That each member of the next two graduating classes of the Military Academy, after graduation, may elect to receive the gross sum of $750 and mileage to his place of residence; and the acceptance of this gross sum shall render him ineligible to appointment in the Army until two years after his graduation; and the amount required to defray the expenditure herein provided for shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he means that section to apply to the present graduating class, and if so, if it is not necessary to make an amendment to affect those who are graduating this year?

Mr. CLYMER. If it becomes a law before the class graduates it will apply to it.

Mr. NEWBERRY. But it is not likely to become a law.

Mr. CLYMER. Then it will only apply to future classes.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Should it not be so amended as to apply to the class that graduates this year?

Mr. SPARKS. I will explain to the gentleman that this is a copy of the old bill, which it was supposed would pass in time to apply to the graduating class of this year. I think an amendment to cover it would be well.

Mr. NEWBERRY. So as to specify the classes of 1879 and 1880.

Mr. CLYMER. There is no objection to that.

Mr. SPARKS. Do you offer that as an amendment?

Mr. NEWBERRY. I do.

Mr. WARNER. There is a proposition embraced in this clause which I desire to enter my protest against. Having educated these cadets, it is proposed that the Government shall then pay them the gross sum of $750. That seems to me to be a principle that cannot be defended. I cannot give assent to the proposition in any form, that, having educated a class of cadets, the Government assumes thereby the responsibility of supporting them the rest of their lives.

Mr. CONGER. Amend it so as to pay them in silver.

Mr. CLYMER. The object is to obviate a difficulty of this kind: the number of graduates at the academy is so large that it is impossible to give them rank or position in the line of the Army. There is no room for them.

Mr. MCCOOK. My understanding is that in this grade of officers, the lowest in the Army, there are vacancies all the time, and that the graduating class which does not exceed forty or fifty can be placed in the field at once.

Mr. SPARKS. If the gentleman will allow me, I would suggest that the section leaves it discretionary with the graduate.

Mr. CLYMER. Certainly.

Mr. SPARKS. It leaves it open for him to accept this increase and retire or remain in the service. If I am not trespassing upon the right of the gentleman from Pennsylvania in charge of this bill, [Mr. CLYMER,] I desire to say that the reason for putting in this provision was that there is now a superabundance of this class of men. It was felt that it would be a wrong to dismiss them from the service, and hence the proposition is inserted here giving them the discretion to accept this amount or to reject it. That is fair to them and fair to the Government. If they reject the proposition, then they will remain in the service.

Mr. McCOOK. I do not wish to be understood as objecting to the section at all, but as replying to the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER.]

Mr. WARNER. I do not understand upon what theory these graduates of the Military Academy are entitled to any choice in this respect. If the Government is under any obligation to them after it has educated them, then buy them a corner grocery apiece and set them up in business and make them self-supporting.

Mr. McCOOK. Or set them up in the silver business.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. NEWBERRY to strike out the words "next two" before the words "graduating classes," and to insert after the words "Military Academy" the words "of the year 1879 and of the year 1880;" so that the section will read as follows:

That each member of the graduating classes of the Military Academy of the year 1879 and of the year 1880, after graduation, may elect to receive the gross sum of $750 and mileage to his place of residence, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER. I move to strike out the section as amended.

Mr. CLYMER. I trust not.

Mr. WEAVER. I hope it will be done.

Mr. WARNER. I hope also it will be done.

Mr. WEAVER. A young man in this country should consider himself very fortunate to be educated at the expense of the Government.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Is it too late to raise a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. What point of order?

Mr. NEWBERRY. On the amendment, that it is not in the way of retrenching expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER?]

Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir; that amendment is not in order.

Mr. WEAVER. It certainly is.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Wait a moment. These graduates will receive their regular pay for the next two years if this section does not become a law. If it does become a law, and they shall elect to take the sum here provided, then for the next two years they will receive from the Government only $750 each, quite a large reduction; I cannot state the amount, for I have not the figures before me. But I know that each year each graduate receives a certain salary.

Mr. ATKINS. Each year he receives $550 in cash.

Mr. NEWBERRY. And allowances.

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, that is while they are cadets.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] make the point that the motion to strike out this section is not in order?

Mr. NEWBERRY. I do, upon the ground that it does not retrench expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order; it is in order to move to strike out any portion of this bill. The motion of the gentleman from Iowa is therefore in order, and he is entitled to the floor to speak upon it.

Mr. ATKINS. The motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] is in the form of an amendment, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a motion to strike out the section.

Mr. ATKINS. And a point of order is made upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. ATKINS. Was that point of order discussed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] discussed it. The point of order was not upon the section, but upon the motion to strike out the section.

Mr. ATKINS. And was that discussed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan discussed it.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I think the Chair must certainly have misunderstood my suggestion. If the Chair will hear me a moment, I will say that as I understand it a graduate of the Military Academy receives after his graduation something in the neighborhood of $1,800 a year. The chairman of the committee will correct me if I am mistaken; but I think it is in the neighborhood of $1,800 a year. Therefore for two years he would receive $3,600, if the present statute remains in force. If that statute is changed, and this proposition inserted instead, then the Government will receive the benefit of paying only $750 for that two years.

Mr. SPARKS. I would inquire of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] if it is not in order for any member to move to strike out any portion of this bill?

Mr. NEWBERRY. If it is not in the way of retrenchment it is not in order.

Mr. SPARKS. I apprehend that any member can move to strike out any portion of this bill.

Mr. NEWBERRY. It would not be in the interest of economy to strike out this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair adheres to his opinion, already expressed by him. The Chair desires to state that this is not a motion to insert new matter, but to strike out this section. It is equivalent simply to disagreeing to the section; and the Chair rules that it is in order.

Mr. WEAVER. If anything should be done in this direction, if the Government has no need of these graduates after they have been educated at the public expense, a better proposition would be to retire them. If the Government has no use whatever for these graduates, why pay them anything? I move to strike out the entire section; and after the vote has been taken upon that motion, I may have a further amendment to offer.

Mr. CLYMER. I trust the motion to strike out will not be agreed to. This provision was inserted in this bill with the assent and approbation of the War Department. It seems to me such a provision as this will be manifestly just. As I said before, in reply to a question by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. McCOOK,] there is a superabundance of young officers of the grade of second lieutenants, which these cadets become upon graduation. They are supernumeraries of certain companies in certain regiments, and have to remain as such until vacancies occur by promotion or casualty. Now, it would be unjust that these young men, after being educated at the institution, should be set adrift without the Government making any provision for them whatever. By making this provision we effect economy. For if they remain in the Army where they are not needed the lowest grade of salary there is $1,500. We propose to send them into civil life by paying them $700 a year for two years, and after this the Government may call upon them for their services. I trust that the provision will not be struck out.

Mr. WEAVER. I cannot conceive how it will be unjust——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to amend by striking out the last word. This provision was inserted as a matter of economy. As I understand, these cadets when they enter the West Point Academy do so under a contract with the Government that the Government is to educate them and that they are to serve in the Army if the Government requires their services. Now there is a superfluity of officers, a greater number than the Government needs; and in order to get rid of some of these officers it was thought best to offer these young men $750 a year for two years if they would retire upon that. On the other hand, if the contract between them and the Government is to be executed they will be officers of the Army as a matter of course, and their salaries will be double or more than double $750.

But this economy, it is to be observed, is to be wrought by the consent of the cadet. He is not to be forced to quit the service of the Government. He must voluntarily agree to it. Will any gentleman say we should practice economy by violating the contract, whether the cadet is willing or not?

Mr. WEAVER. My amendment does not propose that.

Mr. ATKINS. How are we to put these youths out of the employ of the Government? Must we retire a portion of them arbitrarily? Let us rather pass a law restricting the number of appointments. After these young men have entered into this contract with the Government, after they have gone to the academy and been educated, it seems to me that the Government should not violate its contract with them. I agree that we should strike at the root of the evil; that is, the number of these appointments should be limited. In my judgment we should have fewer appointments to West Point and to Annapolis. That has been my opinion for some time. But I would not do injustice to these young men. I would not force them out of the profession which they have chosen, and which they have agreed to pursue under the direction of the Government.

Mr. WEAVER. If the gentleman will allow me a moment I will say that my motion does not propose to do any injustice to these young men. It simply proposes to strike out the section, leaving the law stand as it is. That is all there is of it. Now, as to the additional expense——

Mr. ATKINS. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I have the floor. If he wants to ask me a question I will answer it.

Mr. WEAVER. I yielded the floor to the gentleman.

Mr. ATKINS. No, sir, I obtained the floor in my own right.

Mr. WEAVER. If I did not yield the floor to the gentleman, he took it.

Mr. ATKINS. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not take the floor from him. I made a motion and obtained the floor in my own right.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman's motion prevails, all these graduates will remain in the public service.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. They have the right to resign.

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, to be sure, they have the right to resign. But does any one suppose they will resign after they have spent four years at the academy and educated themselves for this profession?

Mr. McCOOK. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee what is the pay of a cadet from the time he graduates until the date of his assignment to service in the Army as a second lieutenant?

Mr. ATKINS. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The cadet upon graduation is commissioned and at once receives the pay of a second lieutenant.

Mr. ATKINS. Which is $1,500, I believe.

Mr. SPARKS. He is commissioned at once.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Before the question is taken on the motion to strike out, I desire to offer an amendment to perfect the section. I move to amend by inserting after the word "Army," in line 6, the words "except in the event of war."

Mr. CLYMER. I accept that amendment.

The amendment of Mr. SHALLENBERGER was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I move to amend by striking out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I do not claim any particular knowledge of military matters, yet this section seems to me wrong in itself. It looks to me to be a proposition like this: Here the Government of the United States, at an expense of five or six hundred thousand dollars a year, educates a company of fifty young men. For what? For the Army, for the Government's use, for the Government's service, and the young man receives his education as pay for the contract which he makes that he will serve the Government of the United States. Now, you have a class graduating, the Government has paid $2,000 apiece to educate them and fit them for graduation; and now, right at the point when they are graduating, the Congress turns around and bribes these young men not to serve the Government; offers a bribe of $750 to go home, keep out of the Army, keep out of any danger of being sent out upon the borders or down to Texas, to take the $750 and go home. And right in section 9 the same committee offers a bribe to the officers of the United States Army to retire.

I do not understand these second lieutenancies are full to the extent that you must bribe a young man not to take one of them. I understand to-day when this graduating class leaves West Point there are ninety second lieutenancies, and I think there are only sixty of these gentlemen. How many of them are there?

Mr. McCOOK. Not to exceed fifty or sixty.

Mr. FRYE. Not to exceed fifty or sixty. There are ninety vacancies in the grade of second lieutenant, and why bribe these young gentlemen with $750 to go home when you can put them into second lieutenancies and educate them still further in the active duties of army life?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, this whole proposition goes upon the theory that there is a superabundance of this class of men. And that information, as I understand it, comes from the War Office. I did not have charge of this bill—that is, the entire control of it—in the last Congress, but was a member of the sub-committee on appropriations which did have charge of it, and can state from information received from the chairman of that sub-committee that this section not only met the wishes of the War Department, but that the reason assigned for it was on account of the superabundance of graduated and graduating cadets.

What do you do here? You simply put it within the discretion of these young gentlemen to accept a certain sum of money as an inducement to retire, or they can remain in the service under the law and regulations as they now exist. You leave it discretionary with them; you do them no injustice; you do not, as the gentleman from Maine has suggested, bribe them. They can accept this pay from their employer, the Government, and retire from the service, or refuse to accept it and remain in the service. It is limited also to two years or to the next succeeding two classes graduating at West Point.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, I believe it was, offered to this clause a very wise amendment, which was adopted, that the provisions of this section should not apply in case of the occurrence of war.

And it also seems to me that we might amend it in another respect and make it better still, namely, "that this retiracy shall be by sanction of the Secretary of War." But it all hinges, as I have already stated, upon the theory or original proposition that there is a superabundance of this class of men; and to get rid of them with as little cost to the Government as possible, while we do no injustice to them, we, in a word, propose to pay them a certain sum of money on condition of their retirement, and thereby save money to the Treasury while obliging these young men at the same time.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] moves to strike out the section. That motion indicates that he wants to discharge these men arbitrarily. Now, is that fair? As the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has wisely suggested, "after you have educated these men for a particular service" is it right, is it just to them and just to the Government that they should be arbitrarily dismissed? I am not in favor of any such proposition.

Mr. WEAVER. I do not want to discharge this class, but to provide for doing so hereafter.

Mr. SPARKS. Then the gentleman wants to leave it to the future, to be done hereafter?

Mr. WEAVER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPARKS. I object to that on principle. Why do we want to educate these men at all? It was thought by the statesmen who originated and founded our Military Academy that it was useful and wise for the Government to educate a certain number of its citizens for military life, so that in case of war we can have educated and trained leaders, capable of properly controlling and directing its armies. And as we have had wars in the past in which this class of men have been needed, it is to be presumed that we will have wars in the future for which and in which we will also need them. We in all human probability will some time need this class of men for public service and want them in the country. When the last war came upon us they were at our command everywhere, and the men who most highly distinguished themselves were officers who had retired from and left the service. They are educated at public expense. If they take this bonus and retire they are then no further expense to the Government, but are still in the country engaged in the various avocations of life and subject to be called upon when the Government wants them. We leave this to their discretion under this section. They can take $750 and retire if they want to. I think it would be wise, as I have before suggested, to amend the section further, so that this retiracy shall be by the approval and sanction of the Secretary of War so that they could not do it of themselves without the approval of the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CLYMER. To meet the objection raised by the gentleman from Maine, which I think has some force in it, I move to amend the section by inserting after the word "elect" the words "with the assent of the Secretary of War." Then it will not depend on the mere volition of the cadet. The Secretary of War can exercise a wise discretion. If in his judgment there should be a superabundance of officers in the lower grades, he can allow the graduates to go. If, on the other hand, he thinks they should remain, he is to be judge of that.

With this addition I do say the whole provision in the bill is one in the interest of economy. It is one which will do justice to a large number of those gentlemen who graduate; for I know from various sources of information that the position of these supernumerary officers of companies is one not of comfort to themselves or of benefit to the service. It is a system which crowds companies with officers when they are not needed; and I think it would be a most unwise thing after the advice we have had, after the information we have received from the War Department, after the consultation of the Committee on Appropriations with all the authorities on this question, to strike out this section from the bill. With the amendment I have proposed, I think the section is free from the objections which have been made to it.

Mr. CALKINS. I hope the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not be inserted. It seems to me the section is right as it is now. I cannot agree with the gentleman from Tennessee that the evil at the root of which he says we should strike is the appointing of too many young men at West Point. I have advocated on the floor of the House, and still advocate and believe, that it is in the interest of the country to educate as many young men as possible at this institution, and when so educated to allow them, if they choose, to return to their homes and enter into any other pursuit in life they may find suitable. Having received their education they will be ready in any sudden emergency to enter the Army, assume the position of officers, and lead the troops in case of actual warfare.

Instead of reducing the number of young men to be educated I would increase it. I would give them the privilege, such as is set forth in this bill, to retire after having received their education and go into the peaceful pursuits of life. The section as it stands leaves it just where it ought to leave it, at the discretion of the graduates.

I heard in the last Congress a suggestion with which I am entirely in harmony. A gentleman, not now a member of this body, rose and asked the question why it was that he educated his son at that institution. Was it to keep him in the Army? Not by any means, he said. He did not want him to remain in the Army; he wanted him educated so that he might be well versed in all the arts of war, that he might apply them when the occasion arose. Instead of reducing the number, therefore, I would increase it; and I would give the young gentlemen such a privilege as this section gives them to retire after receiving their education. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not press his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "elected," in the second line of the section, insert "with the assent of the Secretary of War."

Mr. REAGAN. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment. A year or two ago, in view of the large number of supernumerary officers in the Army, and in view of the difficulty of finding places to which to assign the graduates of the classes at West Point, I offered an amendment to a bill like this to reduce the number of cadets one-half; thinking that one hundred and fifty young men regularly educated at West Point by the Government, instead of three hundred, would meet all the necessities of our situation. I recognize the necessity of having a class of men educated in the art of war, and so far as the necessities of the Government go I will gladly sustain that policy. But whenever we go beyond the point that is necessary, and educate men simply to give them education at the public expense, we are doing what we ought not to do; we are unjustly discriminating against some in favor of others.

Why should we educate men at West Point who are not needed for the military service, at the expense of other young men who are working at home, receiving no aid from the Government? Can any one explain it? It is giving exclusive privileges, a thing obnoxious to our Constitution and our form of government. There is no justice in educating at the public expense men not needed for the public service. And it seemed to me strange it should not occur to the Committee on Appropriations that, seeing there is no use for the men we educate, seeing there is such a number of supernumerary officers, they should cut down the number of cadets instead of going on with the education of so many supernumerary officers.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. REAGAN. I will hear the question.

Mr. GIBSON. Does the gentleman know the number of educated military men the country may require in the event of a foreign war?

Mr. REAGAN. In the event of a foreign war, if it be a great war, it is not probable we will have all the men of military education needed to officer the Army, nor is it necessary we should have them, as the wars we have passed through have amply proved. Besides, it has never been the policy of the Government to educate a number of men sufficient to officer an army in the event of a great war. That has never been our policy, and the founders of the system never contemplated such a thing. The object is to maintain a system of military education for a limited number of young men to enter the service and to be prepared by military education to fill such positions as they may be assigned to.

Why, sir, with the supernumerary officers we have, with the surplus cadets we have, still we go on appointing on military commissions men from civil life. You may hire these cadets to quit the service, and it will not stop the giving of commissions to civilians in the service.

But the main object I had was to express my surprise that the Committee on Appropriations can find no other way out of the difficulty than to increase the expenditures of the Government. First, the cadets are educated at the expense of the public, and then you propose to hire them to give up their positions. It seems to me that, having received a most valuable education, that ought to be enough for them; and I hope the House will strike out the entire fifth section.

Mr. ATKINS. I am perfectly surprised at the gentleman from Texas. We reported this section, as I stated in the few remarks I made in opening, in the interest of economy. These cadets if they remain in the service draw a much larger sum from the Government, and it is to get rid of the surplus number of officers that this amendment is put in the bill. I am surprised that the gentleman should say that we are hiring them to resign. They are drawing from the Government a salary, and this is a proposition to relieve the Government of the superfluous number of officers. We must adopt this course, unless the gentleman would retire them without a dollar in their pockets.

The question was taken upon the amendment; and it was agreed to.

The question recurred upon Mr. WEAVER'S motion to strike out the whole section.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 34, noes 60.

Mr. REAGAN. I call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not make the suggestion that there is no quorum, but I simply desire to have tellers. I do not want to suggest that there is no quorum.

Tellers were not ordered, only eleven members voting therefor.

Mr. LOWE. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, then, will order tellers.

Mr. WEAVER and Mr. CLYMER were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 85.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will omit reading section 6, as under the order of the House it will not be considered until the other sections have been disposed of.

The following sections were then read:

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of War shall be authorized to detail an officer of the Army, not above the rank of captain, for special duty in reference to Indian education.

SEC. 8. That section 6 of the act approved June 18, 1878, making appropriations for the support of the Army be, and is hereby, repealed: Provided, That when the economy of the service requires, the Secretary of War shall direct the establishment of military headquarters at points where suitable buildings are owned by the Government.

SEC. 9. That from and after the passage of this act, and until it shall be otherwise provided by law, there shall be no promotions or appointments in the Army above the rank of captain, except in the Corps of Engineers; and the actual time of service in the Army or Navy of the United States shall be allowed all officers in computing their pay; and that no officer below the rank of major shall be transferred to the retired list, except upon the report of a duly constituted board of officers to the effect that such officer is no longer fit for active service; and that any officer hereafter retired by reason of wounds received in action shall be retired upon the highest rank, exclusive of brevet rank, actually held by such officer in the regular or volunteer service before retirement: Provided, That nothing shall prevent the appointment of a Chief of Engineers, with the rank of brigadier-general, when a vacancy shall occur, nor shall it prevent the promotion of any captain who has served twenty years in the United States Army.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I desire to offer an amendment to the ninth section.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I reserve a point of order upon the last section until the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia shall have been acted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order ought to be disposed of before discussion takes place on the merits of the section.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I desire to move an amendment to the ninth section.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order raised by the gentleman from Montana will first be disposed of.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I make the point of order on the section that it changes existing law and does not decrease expenditures, in that it authorizes the appointment of a new brigadier-general in the Corps of Engineers and also that it authorizes the retirement of officers on higher rank than now allowed by law. I raise this point of order for the same purpose and in order to effect the same object for which the gentleman from Virginia proposes to offer an amendment. I have no objection to the promotion of officers in the Engineer Corps or to the appointment of a brigadier-general of engineers in case of a vacancy or to the provisions of the section in reference to the retirement of officers at the highest rank held by them in the regular or volunteer service, but I feel that I owe it as a duty to the officers of the line of the Army on the frontier who are fighting the Indians in my country to stand up for their rights on this floor and to see that no discrimination as to promotion shall be made against them and in favor of gentlemen on the staff corps who have frequent and pleasant communication with the members of Congress and opportunities to urge their rights which officers on distant stations do not possess. I do not think an exception should be made, and this section does make one, against officers on the frontier, captains and lieutenants and field-officers who are fighting the Indians and waiting day by day for their promotion. If promotion in the Army is to go on at all, and I hope it may, let it not be confined to the engineers alone, but let it run through all branches of the service. It is as dear to the cavalry and infantry as to any others, and as well deserved by them, and it is at their request that I make this effort to have promotions opened, which will be effected by striking out this invidious and unjust section of the bill. I insist on the point of order that the proviso changes existing law and does not reduce expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear discussion on that point of order.

Mr. CLYMER. The point of order raised by the gentleman from Montana upon the proviso commencing in the fourteenth line, I understand, is the first portion of the section against which he makes the point of order, but the point of order is, I think, utterly unfounded. The Chief of Engineers now holds the rank of brigadier-general, so that it is not a change of law and not an increase of expenditure. It is the existing law.

Mr. MAGINNIS. If the present Chief of Engineers should die or resign, could another be appointed brigadier-general under the present law?

Mr. CLYMER. There could not.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Therefore I insist that this is a change of law which permits the appointment of a general officer not now authorized. And as to the other part of the section between lines 10 and 16, it does not reduce the number of officers that may be retired, but it does increase the rank, and consequently the pay, on which they may retire, and is therefore clearly out of order.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania who has this bill in charge [Mr. CLYMER] if the law does not now allow officers to be retired on their actual rank and not on their brevet rank, just as this bill provides?

Mr. CLYMER. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. ATKINS] will understand that I have been speaking upon the first point of order raised by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS] against the portion of this section authorizing the appointment of a chief of engineers with the rank of brigadier-general. I have taken the position that the point of order is not well taken against that portion of this section. The other point of order I have not touched upon yet.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask the gentleman's pardon; I desired merely to call his attention to the matter.

Mr. CLYMER. With reference to the point of order raised against that portion of the section which authorizes officers hereafter retired by reason of wounds received in action to be retired upon the highest rank, exclusive of brevet rank, actually held by them in the regular or volunteer service before retirement, I will say that the law now provides that an officer shall be retired upon the highest actual rank which he holds when retired. I believe I can refer to my friend from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY,] who is so well versed in this matter, upon that point.

Mr. HAWLEY. This section proposes to change the present law.

Mr. CLYMER. It proposes to change the law so as to provide that an officer shall be retired upon the highest rank, exclusive of brevet rank, which he may have held in the regular or volunteer service at any time. It is but candid that I should say, and I will not attempt to disguise the matter, that I think this portion of the section is liable to the point of order. Some friend of this provision, some gentleman who may construe it differently, may look at it in another light from what I do. I think, however, it is but fair to the committee for me to say that in my opinion it is liable to the point of order. With reference to that part of the section which prevents the promotion of officers above the rank of captain I do not concede that that is at all liable to a point of order.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I have made no point of order against that portion of the section.

Mr. CLYMER. The gentleman says that he has made no point of order against that portion of the section.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to ask my colleague [Mr. CLYMER] a question.

Mr. CLYMER. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. Has the point of order been made upon that portion of the section which provides "that any officer hereafter retired by reason of wounds received in action shall be retired upon the highest rank, exclusive of brevet rank, actually held by such officer in the regular or volunteer service before retirement?"

Mr. CLYMER. That is the portion of the section which I have said may be liable to a point of order.

Mr. WHITE. And I understand that a point of order has been made against that portion of the section.

Mr. CLYMER. I so understand; and that point of order is now pending.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to say that if it had not been made, I intended myself to make it.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CLYMER. Very well.

Mr. CALKINS. Does the gentleman concede that a point of order will lie against that particular portion of this section?

Mr. CLYMER. While I am not prepared to say definitely that it does, it does seem to me that a point of order would lie against that particular provision.

Mr. CALKINS. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and to the Chair that when officers are retired under this provision they are to be retired on three-quarter pay. Now how can anybody say that because they will be retired upon a rank which they held in the volunteer service, that will necessarily increase expenditures?

Mr. MAGINNIS. They will be retired upon a rank higher than under the present law they are retired upon.

Mr. CALKINS. But you are assuming that there will be a sufficient number of officers retired on the higher rank to make their three-fourths pay greater than the full pay of officers retired under the present law with less rank.

Mr. MAGINNIS. They will be retired on a higher rank.

Mr. CALKINS. The gentleman will see that unless there are more officers retired upon the higher rank whose three-fourths pay will exceed that of the full pay given to officers retired now upon a lower rank, this will work no increase of expenditures.

Mr. MAGINNIS. If retired on a higher rank they will receive more pay.

Mr. CALKINS. That will not necessarily increase expenditures. The gentleman is assuming something which there is nothing here at all to base the assumption upon.

Mr. CLYMER. Allow me to suggest to my friend from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] this state of things: suppose that an officer now holds the rank of captain in the regular Army, but he has formally served in the volunteer or regular service as a brigadier-general.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Or as a major-general.

Mr. CLYMER. Or as a major-general. When the Army was reduced that officer entered the regular service, not in the rank which he formerly held and in which he was wounded, but in the lower rank of captain. Now suppose that, still holding the rank of captain, he is retired by reason of wounds received while he was holding the rank of brigadier-general.

Mr. CALKINS. I grant you that in that particular instance, if there was no other case, there would be an increase of expenditures. But take the case of a large number of officers, because if any presumption is to follow you must take a presumable case.

Mr. CLYMER. I will say this——

Mr. CALKINS. Allow me to finish my statement.

Mr. CLYMER. I am willing to answer a question only, not to have all my time taken up. I will say that in my judgment this provision is liable to a point of order. I am saying that against my own feeling, because, if it is not liable to a point of order, I propose to sustain the provision. I think it but right that a man wounded while holding a rank higher than the one he subsequently took in the Army, if obliged to retire by reason of wounds received in that rank which incapacitated him for further service, should have the benefit of the rank which he held at the time he was wounded.

Mr. McCOOK. In the volunteer service? I am very glad the gentleman makes that concession.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, this section was put in the last Army appropriation bill for the temporary purpose of preventing promotions until the commission appointed by the last Congress to consider the reorganization of the Army should have made a report to Congress, and until that report should have been acted upon. Now, I understand that these appointments and promotions have all been acted upon in the Senate a few days ago, so that the section now practically amounts to nothing. I think, therefore, that there is on both sides of the House a general concurrence in the opinion that we had better strike out the whole section. I hope that will be done; and if in order, I make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order until the point of order is disposed of. The Chair desires to learn from the gentleman from Montana the exact language upon which he raises the point of order.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I make it upon the clause beginning with line 1014. My point is that it does not diminish the number of officers who can be retired, and it increases the rank on which they can be retired.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman makes the point of order he must either make it upon the entire paragraph or upon the proviso, which is a substantive proposition.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I make the point of order upon the section because it contains those clauses.

Mr. SPARKS. If the gentleman will withdraw the point of order we can strike out the whole section.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Very well. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CLYMER. I move to strike out the whole section.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first upon the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] Does the gentleman insist upon that amendment?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I have no objection to withdrawing it, to allow a vote to be taken on the motion to strike out.

The motion of Mr. CLYMER to strike out the section was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule is now concluded; and according to the order of the House the committee will proceed to consider the sixth section, upon which one hour of general debate is to be allowed, one-half hour on each side. The section will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] as controlling one half hour and the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER,] the first member of the minority upon the Committee on Appropriations, as controlling the other half hour.

Mr. CLYMER. I yield the first half hour to the control of my friend from Indiana, to be divided as he sees fit, reserving of course half an hour to be under my own control.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I shall make a motion to strike from this bill the sixth section. I shall make that motion on the same ground on which in another place I made the motion. It is that the bill ought not to be incumbered by a provision which does not make any change in existing laws. I do not believe in the wisdom of putting legislation in bills simply for the purpose of multiplying words where those provisions do not accomplish any change whatever in the constitutional power of the President or of any department of the Government. As I understand the state of the law to-day, the President is not clothed with power, nor has he professed at any time to exercise the power, of placing the troops of the United States around the polls as a mere police force for the purpose of taking the place of the ordinary constables and civil police scattered through the country. It is only where the civil officers are powerless to execute the laws that the military power may be rightfully used. Viewing this provision in that light—viewing it as a mere incumbrance, as mere surplusage, as a mere tub thrown to the political whale, I think it ought to go out of the bill.

Speaking for myself, I shall have said all that I desire to say at this time when I have added that if my motion to strike out section 6 shall be voted down here, as it was voted down elsewhere, I shall feel it my duty to vote for this bill. I shall do so on the distinct ground that it contains provisions for the support of the Army substantially in accordance with the estimates of the Department, and containing nothing abridging the powers of the Executive. I believe these estimates are reasonably sufficient for the maintenance of the Army for the next fiscal year. In making this statement I speak only for myself; I speak only my own convictions, and with these convictions I am not to be deterred from discharging the duty which I owe to the Government under the Constitution of voting supplies for the Army, by reason of the fact that political necessities have seemed to constrain the dominant political party to put in this bill a provision which is mere idle thunder, without any effect in changing any existing law.

I yield now for five minutes to my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I desire five minutes because I find myself concurring so completely with my associate who has just spoken. I did in a previous debate very strongly oppose any declaration of the Congress which would seem to deny to the Chief Executive of the United States the right to make the Federal Constitution and laws respected and obeyed in all times and in all places. [Applause.] There is no inch of space, there is no second of time in this country where when the constitutional laws may not be obeyed we must not compel obedience to them, and when, in the event of the civil authorities failing to command respect and obedience, the element of force, the element of crushing and killing force, cannot be called in. That I asserted previously and endeavored to enforce. It is the doctrine of civil government, indispensable to government. Without it that which pretends to be government is but anarchy. But as to the general limitations within which the military force or the crushing power may be called in I shall concur, I presume, substantially with any good lawyer of any party.

I find no difficulty in coming to a conclusion myself upon reading the history of American legislation and the practice of American executives. In reading the history of the English government in this matter you will find it impossible to derive any precise rules from English practice or law as to the relation between the military and civil power. The precise moment, the exact circumstances under which the military may be called in to compel obedience cannot be very well defined, and a great deal must be left of necessity to the discretion of the civil magistrate and to the discretion of the military officer; but when once called in it is the duty of the military officer to obey and crush the domestic violence, the insurrection, the riot against which he is summoned. [Applause.]

Now, that I may not expend my whole five minutes on that let me make a hasty reference to the bill now under consideration. What is a police force? It is quite natural for us on the republican side to look at this section and wonder whether there be any covert meaning in it, anything which may be interpreted at the polls or in the political canvass otherwise than it is interpreted here. I have satisfied myself deliberately that I have no objection to that clause other than that it is a sort of general legislation out of place on a general appropriation bill. And for this reason I ask again, what is a police force? It is organized civil authority, the sworn constables, the ordinary constables known to the ancient English law, duly organized, if you choose, even into companies, regiments, and brigades. The origin of the modern police force, the metropolitan police force, uniformed, with captains of companies and chiefs of battalions, is to be found in the recommendation of the Duke of Wellington about 1829, in order that he might have a "counterpoise to the Guards," and avoid as far as possible the necessity of calling in the regular army of the kingdom to maintain the peace.

Now, in the event of the metropolitan police of London failing, in the event of the metropolitan police of New York failing, in the event of the marshals and deputy marshals of the United States failing, every government of necessity reserves to itself the right to call in its organized military forces and to forcibly subdue the wicked people who are resisting submission. That I claim for the Federal Government as I claim it for my State, and as every man of common sense must claim it for any government of any description. But that the republican party or any individual or body, or any officer belonging to that party, ever claimed the right to call upon the regular Army in the form of what is known in common conversation or law as police to keep the peace at the polls is a mistake. Take the converse of this proposition, or put it in the affirmative, that the President of the United States shall be directed to use the Army of the United States as a police force to maintain the peace at the polls, and who will support it? [Laughter and applause on the republican side.] I am obliged to my friends in the majority for having put this in the form of a harmless negative, for which a republican can vote, a republican of the blackest dye, who believes in making the Federal laws respected everywhere at all times and at all hazards. [Applause on the republican side.]

Mr. BAKER. I now yield the remainder of the half hour allotted to me to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I may not want all this time. I hope I will not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twenty minutes.

Mr. GARFIELD. Permit me, Mr. Chairman, to recount very briefly the steps which have been taken in regard to this Army appropriation bill in connection with that of the legislative bill. At the close of the last session those two bills were prevented from passing upon the alleged ground that there were three grievances in the form of laws which gentlemen on the other side said must be redressed by repeal before they would vote the appropriations necessary to carry on the Government. One grievance was set forth in a vague, general charge, but not well founded, that there was a law upon the statute-book that authorized military interference with elections. The second was that the jurors' test oath, made necessary by the war, was now a hardship and a grievance. The third was that the several sections of the law relating to supervisors and marshals at national elections were a grievance which must be removed by repeal. And we were told, in the most unequivocal language, by the democratic leaders in both Houses that the $45,000,000 needed for the maintenance of the civil and military functions of the Government should never be appropriated until these statutes were repealed.

In response to these demands we declared our willingness on this side of the House, first, to pass a bill which the Senate, a republican Senate, sent to us repealing that section of the statute which prescribed a test oath for jurors. We were ready then, we are ready now to pass that bill just as the Senate sent it to us at the last session. Second, we said then, and we have frequently repeated the offer this session, and we say now, that we have never voted for a law to make use of the Army to run elections. We have said repeatedly that there never was in this country and there is not now such a law; and we do not desire such a law or such a practice; and that if any act was needed to prevent the running of elections by bayonets we were ready to help to prevent it. These two propositions we offered at the close of the last session in order to remove any real or apparent ground of complaint on those two scores provided that on the other side the third demand, namely, the repeal of the laws relating to supervisors and marshals should be abandoned.

These offers were rejected with arrogant contempt, and the extra session was forced upon the country. A struggle of nearly three months has followed. Nearly all the legislative appropriations have now passed this House without conditions or change of the laws.

With this general review I shall now confine my remarks wholly to the history of the Army appropriation bill. Soon after this session began we were tendered an Army bill that had in it not a repeal of the law of 1865, alleged to be an offense—not that; for we tendered that, and 109 republicans voted to repeal it and not one republican voted against the repeal—and every democrat in this House voted against its repeal. Instead of a repeal it was proposed so to modify the law of 1865 as to enlarge its restrictions beyond the Army and Navy and make it a crime, punishable by imprisonment or fine, for any civil officer of the United States to employ any armed force or soldiers or citizens to keep the peace at the national elections. In other words, we were tendered a proposition which swept the whole circle of the civil powers with its prohibitions, and prevented the civil authorities of the nation from preserving the peace at the elections of our National Legislature or protecting supervisors in the execution of their duties.

That assault upon the law we resisted as one man. But while we resisted we protested that we were not and never had been advocates of running elections by bayonets.

But though that bill, with its revolutionary menace, passed both Houses, it was wrecked upon the rock of the Constitution, and went down, leaving not a spar afloat on the face of all the waters of our political life.

A MEMBER. It met with a veto.

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes; it met the veto with which the Constitution had wisely armed our Chief Magistrate. Then came the second chapter. A short bill of six or eight lines was introduced, not merely repealing military provisions of the law of 1865, but in effect declaring that the Army of the United States should not be used to enforce any of the laws of the Union, anywhere in the Union, at any time when an election was being held. We pointed out the fact that the bill would smite with paralysis the executive authority of the nation during two, three, five, ten, or possibly a hundred days of every year; that under its provisions even the property of the nation could not be protected from destruction at any place where any election was being held. This violent measure was also passed by the solid democratic vote of both Houses; but, like its predecessor, it ran against the rock of the Constitution and went to the bottom, [applause on the republican side,] and only bubbles mark the spot where it went down.

And now we have before us another bill making appropriations for the support of the Army. Before considering its other provisions I turn aside to congratulate the country and the Army that so many gentlemen on both sides have finally consented to strike out the ninth section, which would have been a hardship to the meritorious officers of the Army by stopping promotions for an indefinite period. And I tender my compliments and thanks to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] who made the motion. The country and the Army will not forget it. I believe the appropriations made in this bill are sufficient for the support of our military establishment, and no laws in reference to which there is any controversy are repealed by it.

And this brings me to the consideration of the only provision about which there is any question. It is the sixth section; and I will read it:

SEC. 6. That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State.

My first observation is, that this section does not profess to repeal, and does not repeal any law of the United States. There is not now, and, so far as I know, there never was on our statute-book, a law which authorized the use of the Army "as a police force" at the polls, and even if this section were a repealing clause, there is nothing on which it can operate as a repeal.

But whatever the section prohibits is in the form of a limitation for the coming year on the objects to which the appropriations here made are to be applied. It is declared that this money is not "appropriated for the subsistence, &c., of any portion of the Army to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls." I affirm, without fear of successful contradiction, that this limited and indirect prohibition does not apply to any law or to any practice known.

Mr. HAWLEY. Not since the Kansas troubles.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly, not since the Kansas troubles. And furthermore I do not know of a man in this House who is in favor of using the Army of the United States as an ordinary police force to run elections. [Applause on the democratic side and counter-cheers on the republican side.] There are, I believe, about forty thousand polling places in the United States. If our Army roster was full, officers, soldiers, and camp followers, we would not have over twenty-five thousand in our Army. And if there were a law for using the Army as a police force at the polls we should have about three-fourths of one soldier to each polling place.

Now, if anybody proposes to deploy our Army in that way I do not know where the lunatic lives. I speak for myself, and of course for everybody who thinks as I do, and for nobody else. We hold two things: first, that we will not, if we can help it, let vital and righteous laws be repealed or nullified as the condition of getting an appropriation to support the Government. We have resisted, and will resist to the end, all such measures. And, in the second place, even under the pressure of party feeling and party opposition, we will do no act and cast no vote that will place us really or apparently in any attitude inconsistent with the old and recognized principles and traditions of English and American liberty, namely, that civil, not military force, is the usual, the safe, the American method of keeping peace at the polls.

That no one may misunderstand me, let me put the case thus: suppose some one should offer the following as a substitute for this section:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to use the Army or any portion of it as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State.

Is there a man in this House that would vote to make that a part of our law? If there be one, let him speak. [A pause.]

Mr. FINLEY. Did not the gentleman vote for a proposition substantially that?

Mr. GARFIELD. Never in my life, nor anything like it.

Mr. FINLEY. The vote of the gentleman last session was precisely that in effect.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman is utterly mistaken. Now, if no one would vote to enact into law the thing which this section says is not appropriated for, how can any one hold that the section prohibits anything that ought to be done?

I say, for one, that in so far as this section indicates the relation between the civil and military arm of the Government in the conduct of elections it meets my cordial concurrence; and a vote for the section will put at rest the reckless and false charge that this side of the House desire to run elections by bayonets.

I admit, as my friend from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] has said, that the section is mere surplusage. It does not repeal or change any existing law; but if its framers think that by offering it they expect to gain a party advantage by getting me or those with whom I act to cast a vote that implies that the Army ought to be used as an ordinary police at elections they are greatly mistaken; for they have set a very open trap, baited with a very small piece of very poor cheese.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a word further in reference to the language of the section. Some gentlemen may be troubled about the scope and meaning of the words "to be used as a police force." Let me recall a little history. In 1865, when flagrant war was raging, when eleven States were banded against the Union to destroy it, and the theater of war spread over five or six States that adhered to the Union, there was in fact military interference at elections; it was the military interference of the armed enemies of the United States.

I once voted at an election where there was very serious military interference. In the autumn of 1862 under the heights of Missionary Ridge, near the city of Chattanooga, when 5,000 Ohio soldiers under the laws of that State were permitted to vote, I in company with my comrades voted for a governor of Ohio.

While we were voting, the shells from the batteries of armed enemies of the United States were bursting over our heads, and some of our voters were killed while in the exercise of their right of suffrage as citizens of Ohio. That was the only military interference with elections that I ever witnessed. [Applause on the republican side.] Now, it was to prevent that kind of military interference that the armies of the United States in time of war kept off the armed enemies of the United States in the State of Kentucky and in other border States while elections were being held there. And in order that in the performance of that necessary duty they might not interfere with the freedom of elections and the rights of citizens, the act of February, 1865, was passed while our guns were yet smoking and while we were yet in line of battle. Even in that act it was provided, under the severest penalties of the criminal law, that no officer, civil, military, or naval, should interfere with the right of any man to vote, or should undertake to prescribe qualifications for a voter.

Now, I say that that act of 1865 was in the interest of civil liberty, restraining our armies from doing any wrong or committing any outrage. And in that act there occurs for the first time in the history of our legislation connected with the Army the expression "to keep the peace at the polls." And even there it is used for the purpose of saying that the law does not make it a crime punishable by imprisonment and fine, for an officer of the Government to "keep the peace at the polls" or to repel the armed enemies of the United States. Nothing in that law refers to the use of the Army as an ordinary police force.

The proposition to use our Army as a police, to send them out and station them one by one at the polls to run the elections as a police, is a fiction so absurd that I trust no man on this side of the House will give the least color to the assumption that he favors it by holding that this sixth section repeals, suspends, or modifies any existing statute.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Will my distinguished friend allow me to submit to him one question, which he will understand I put in the utmost good faith.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. It is this: Are you now in favor of using any portion of the Army of the United States at any time, under any circumstances, in any emergency, to keep the peace at the polls?

Mr. GARFIELD. Not in the sense of using that Army as an ordinary police force.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. In any form or manner?

Mr. CARLISLE. This section does not refer to the use of the Army as an ordinary police force.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will refer my friend——

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I do not mean as an ordinary civil police, but in any form whatever. Is the gentleman in favor of using the Army in any form whatever to keep the peace at the polls?

Mr. GARFIELD. I am in favor of using the Army and the Navy and all the militia of the United States to enforce the laws of the United States, any one of them and all of them, everywhere, and at all times when the civil force is inadequate, but not until then.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Including the keeping of the peace at the polls. [Laughter on the democratic side.]

Mr. GARFIELD. If there be any law that authorizes the President to use the Army as an ordinary police force for that purpose I am in favor of enforcing it.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Does my friend think that we have that law, or does he think that we do not have it?

Mr. GARFIELD. I think we have not; that we never have had it, and that we never ought to have it in time of peace.

Under our laws, at the present moment, we have the amplest power to add deputy marshals and assistant marshals in any number that may be needed to keep the peace at the polls, and those marshals may summon the posse, the armed posse of all faithful citizens who will obey the orders of the marshals and keep the peace at the polls. This is the traditional law of English-speaking peoples.

Now, if my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. WILLIAMS] will remember, it was distinctly provided in the law of last year that the Army of the United States should not be used as a part of the posse comitatus in any case except where the law expressly provided that it should be so used. Therefore, in the presence of that restrictive legislation, passed almost unanimously by a republican Senate—although I and my friends voted against it in the House; yet it was finally concurred in here without a division—in the presence of that restrictive legislation, I say there is no law in the United States to which this sixth section can attach itself, either as a repealing or as a modifying clause.

Therefore I say in conclusion that whatever use may be made of this section as party literature, it is evident to me that, in the judgment of lawyers and courts and executive officers of the Government, it is merely and only a stump speech changing no law and having no legal effect whatever. I shall vote for the bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLYMER. Mr. Chairman, I propose—— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that by order of the House one hour was to be allowed for debate on this section, only one-half of which has been consumed. At present there is nothing to be voted upon.

Mr. CLYMER. I do not propose to occupy more than a few minutes myself. I take the liberty to yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I may not occupy more than five minutes in view of the very pleasing division on the other side. Evidently they have not retreated in good order. There is a rout in the camp.

Mr. PRICE. I think we have advanced considerably.

Mr. COX. I did not ask you to speak, my reverend brother. [Laughter.] I like to hear my friend on temperance. I like to hear him on the Moline water-power.

Mr. PRICE. I presume on the subject of temperance I could benefit my friend considerably. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. If I could only infuse a little of the "old Bourbonic" element into him, he would be a wiser and better man. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I admit that I am not in favor of this bill as to the provision for twenty-five thousand men. I did not vote for that provision before. I do not think we need so many, either for the red man or the black man or the white man.

But the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] covers his retreat very handsomely in large rhetoric, with some thunder from on high to help him. His remarks show the mere brutum fulmen, without lightning, for he did not strike anybody except our friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. WILLIAMS.]

I understand the motive of gentlemen. They want, if possible, to keep the Army for one section and for one purpose; and they will do anything, they will sacrifice all that they have said in the extra session, for that particular purpose. They know now that they cannot use the Army in the solid South. They are willing to give up all that they have said; they retreat ingloriously under the shield of the gallant soldier from Ohio. But they supplement the Army North, and perhaps in other places, in the cities, with this rake-helly rout of ragged rascals—the supervisors. Ah, sirs, you mean in 1880! You mean to carry the election then. You want the Army at one point and the supervisors at another. You have no principle at stake. You mean to strike down the right of the citizen to vote. You will do it either by force or fraud; force by the Army where you can use it, otherwise by fraud and "civil" force—all sorts of masks and disguises. By all tricks you propose to carry the election in 1880. I would not give you either supervisors or Army for such a purpose. Election, if it means anything, means the free will of the people.

The gentleman talks here about our Army not being very dangerous and great when distributed among forty thousand voting places. But could you not send them all to one place? It is true, you could not take twenty-five thousand men and distribute them among forty thousand voting places. You would have to make a vulgar fraction of some soldier in order to do it. [Laughter.] That is not the way you did it at New Orleans. That is not the way you tried to do it in New York in 1870, and afterward. That is not the way you did in South Carolina. You struck with your Army. Even with your swagger, your sword-knot, your epaulet, with the insignia of the Republic. Armed with your Federal legislation, you brought the whole power of this Federal Government to bear through the Army at certain places for your purposes. Is not one State enough to carry the presidential election under certain circumstances? One State did it. One county in one State might do it; ay, one man in one county, if organized under radical auspices, might do it! All that is necessary is one vote!

Of course, all your forty thousand polling places cannot be reached by an Army. With all your Army hitherto, you have not reached enough to come honorably and honestly into the possession of the executive department. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] spoke of his voting under some patriotic circumstances, with shells flying around him, for Governor Brough against Vallandigham. I have no doubt he did. I have no doubt that such voting perhaps was sometimes honestly done. But I know that when I ran for Congress in 1864, and when soldiers undertook to vote for me as they did, they could not get their votes in, much less returned. Near the city of Columbus, at Camp Thomas, I was driven out of camp three or four times while trying to rally my friends among the soldiers and the friends of George E. Pugh, then a candidate for Congress in Cincinnati. That camp was filled then with our regiments from all points in Ohio. They were encamped there. When the election was going on I was driven out with the bayonet twice, if not thrice, while writing my tickets there; but the republican central committee, protected by bayonets, wrote out republican tickets under the auspices of force, which the gentleman now deprecates.

But, Mr. Chairman, all this talk to-day of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is as insincere as the laugh of a madman. [Laughter and applause on the democratic side.] All this vaunting from him of our great heritage and of our institutions is like the flight of a bat compared with that of the eagle. [Laughter.] It has no more reference to personal or electoral liberty than whiteness has to the queen of the Hottentots. [Laughter and applause.]

One word more and I am done. We undertook to brush from the statutes certain obnoxious provisions——

Mr. BAKER, (in his seat.) You did not brush them.

Mr. COX. You, sir, rise up and speak if you are a man and let us look at you. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BAKER. I observed that you had not brushed very much. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Indiana spoke yesterday of my sonorous voice. I wish he had spoken up with more sonorousness to-day. [Laughter.] He undertakes to tell me we have not brushed them off. We cannot brush them off so long as you have a fraud in the White House. [Applause on both sides of the House.] Gentlemen cheer "fraud" on the other side; I do not wonder at it. [Applause on the republican side.] True we cannot override the veto under the Constitution. This we know. We have been endeavoring all we could under all sorts of weather, under all sorts of legislative disaster on both sides to vindicate the heritage that I trust we all love so well. We have endeavored to strike down the bad laws which grew out of the war power. We have endeavored to strike down all obnoxious provisions against personal and voting liberty. We have endeavored to give fair and just expression to the popular will, and you of the other side have stood here for months an obstacle in the path.

Now, at last, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio makes a merit of his recreancy to the cause on the other side. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WILLIAMS] puts the knife into him and turns it round. The blood spurts all over the republican side of the House. They become red and gory with their own war. [Long-continued laughter and applause.]

Mr. CLYMER. Mr. Chairman, at this late hour I do not propose to detain the committee but for a few moments; and before proceeding to make any remarks I will only say that I had intended to make a speech of some length on this subject, and now ask permission by unanimous consent to print it in the RECORD as part of the debates.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and leave is granted accordingly. [See Appendix.]

Mr. CLYMER. I would not have risen, sir, save to reply very briefly to some of the remarkable utterances of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] When we came here in March and proposed to remove that in the laws which was a standing menace and threat to the ballot-box and its purity, when we proposed to repeal the law in the United States which authorized the troops to be used to keep the peace at the polls, then it was the gentleman from Ohio, in thunder tones, proclaimed that this side of the House was guilty of revolution.

He said revolution was attempted by the withholding of supplies, as he intimated we would, and that the very foundations of this Government were to be shaken and undermined. Then it was that here and all over this broad land he attempted to excite the feelings, the passions, and the prejudices of all men against the democratic party, because he alleged we were hostile to the Army and wanted to destroy it. It is a matter of profound gratification to me that in these the closing hours of this special session his reason has been restored and that he is now clothed in his right mind. It delighted me to hear him say to-day that he never had, never intended to have, never claimed to have any power to use the Army for this purpose to keep the peace at the polls.

Mr. PRICE. As a police force.

Mr. CLYMER. He said he never had claimed the power. Why, then, did he with his whole party resist to the uttermost in this Chamber and in the other body and finally extort a veto from the President because we repealed a mere clause in the act of 1865 which allowed them to keep the peace at the polls? Why was that done? Was it because there was more of meaning in the phrase in April than in June, or has it been that through this prolonged discussion in its various phases the gentleman has at last discovered that upon him and his party and associates would be the blame if the Army were left without supplies? There never was an hour in this Congress when the democratic side of this House was not willing and ready to vote for appropriations to carry on the Government. In April we were called revolutionists, yesterday we were denounced as nullifiers, but to-day in bland terms the gentleman says that the proposition which we put upon the Army bill, and which in effect is precisely like that put upon the legislative, judicial, and executive bill yesterday, when he denounced us as nullifiers, is meaningless and of no force or effect.

I say to you now, Mr. Chairman, that if the President of the United States be law-abiding and does his duty, never hereafter will you see an armed man at the polls to keep the peace. He has no money under this bill to do it with. He has no law to sustain him. It is true we may not absolutely bind him by the meshes of the law, which are easily broken—when there is a will a way is always found. I for one am willing to go to the people of the whole land upon this issue—the ballot against the bullet. The great question is the freedom of elections from the presence or interference of Federal soldiers. It is the supremacy of the civil over the military power everywhere and in every quarter of this country; the right of men to express their will at the polls freely, without bias, and unawed, and I say to you that when we pass this bill and the bill of yesterday, and those bills shall have become laws, then, sir, we shall have earned the gratitude of all men everywhere for giving them free elections uninterfered with by Federal influence or power. Upon this vital, fundamental principle we took our stand in the past, we maintain it to-day, and will do battle for it in the near future until not a vestige of these odious enactments remain. This is the grand issue to-day. We are victors on this field, and we do not doubt the result when the verdict of the people on this vital issue is rendered at the polls. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE. Before my colleague takes his seat——[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments.

Mr. BAKER. I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out the sixth section. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. There are fifteen minutes still remaining of the time at the disposal of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his side of the House.

Mr. CLYMER. The time that remains, I understand, is not claimed by any gentleman on the other side of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. Then I hope the gentleman will yield that time to somebody who does want to speak.

Mr. CLYMER. I insist on my motion. [Loud cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BAKER. I desire to move to strike out the sixth section.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The Chair will not entertain any motion until gentlemen will resume their seats and be in order.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to make a statement to the gentleman who has the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that one hour having been assigned by the House for general debate on this question, it is not in order, except by unanimous consent, to take the vote on striking out the section until that hour expires.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I cannot agree with the Chair. If nobody desires to speak, will the committee be compelled to sit all that time doing nothing?

The CHAIRMAN. One hour having been assigned for general debate, the Chair is of opinion that it is not in order to vote on the section until that hour has expired.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentlemen on the other side have had their time, and have no reason to complain; and if no one on this side desires to speak, neither will we on our part complain that the vote should be taken at once.

Mr. CLYMER. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBB.]

Mr. COBB. Mr. Chairman, I did not desire to speak upon this occasion at all, and what I shall say will be impromptu of course. I must say that I was very much surprised at the statements of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] who, if I understood him correctly, stated substantially that at no time in the history of this country had the Army been used at the polls except during the war on special occasions. If I understand the history of this country, this statement so made by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio is a very remarkable one. Why, sir, in my own State—it is a historical fact which is true—during the war, in 1864, there was a Massachusetts regiment quartered in the capital of the State when we were in profound peace; and it is a well-known fact and a matter of history that that regiment voted at the polls in the city of Indianapolis. And the further fact is well known and a matter of history that that regiment stationed there, together with men in sympathy with the republican party, drove democrats from the polls and prevented them from voting, who were as loyal as they were.

Mr. BROWNE. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. COBB. I will allow my colleague to ask me a question.

Mr. BROWNE. Do I understand the gentleman to say it is a conceded fact in Indiana that a Massachusetts regiment voted in 1864 or in any manner interfered in the election at the city of Indianapolis?

Mr. COBB. I did not say it was a conceded fact; for I do not suppose my colleague will concede it; but I say it is a matter of history and a matter of fact that this Massachusetts regiment did what I have stated.

Mr. BROWNE. Let me say to my colleague——

Mr. COBB. I cannot allow my colleague to inject a speech into mine. I will answer his question, but I cannot allow him to make a speech which will come out of my time. I will state further that a distinguished gentleman at the other end of the Capitol, whose word for truth will not be questioned, stated in his place in the Senate, and his speech in which he made the statement is on record, that he knew as a matter of fact, which was within his own knowledge and which occurred under his eye, that these facts did take place as I have stated them.

Mr. BROWNE. I am aware of that. But notwithstanding that, I undertake to say it is not a fact that that did occur.

Mr. COBB. I do not yield. I never heard it disputed before; and I say the gentleman does not know the history of his State and of the times, or he would not say that these facts did not take place.

Mr. BROWNE. I put my denial on record here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] has the floor.

Mr. COBB. Now I want to state one other thing. I have stated what is the fact, notwithstanding my distinguished colleague's denial. He was not there nor was I. The history of the times will prove the correctness of the facts I have stated.

Now let us come down to times since the war closed. Take the State of South Carolina. Has the gentleman from Ohio and has my distinguished colleague from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] ever read the evidence taken in the contested-election case of Tillman against Smalls, from the fifth congressional district of that State, from which my friend, [Mr. TILLMAN,] who sits near me, comes? Do these gentlemen not know that the evidence in this case proves that troops were stationed at twenty-two of the voting precincts in this district at the election in 1876, where nearly one-half of the entire vote of the district was cast for presidential electors, member of Congress, and State officers that year?

The law of South Carolina requires that the inspectors of the elections in that State shall, at the place where the ballots are received, and just before they commence receiving them, publicly open the ballot-box and turn it upside down, so as to empty the contents, if any, out of it, so that any person who desires may be present and see that the box contains no ballots before the voting commences. Now, the evidence further proves that when the inspectors at Edgefield box No. 2 were about to perform their duty under the law, and had entered the room through the window of which the ballots were to be received, that a file of troops headed by their commander entered the room, and their commander with drawn sword and the troops with fixed bayonets stood there until the inspectors performed their duty under the law. When this was done these troops were marched out of the room by order of their commander and formed in line in front of the window where the voting was done, and remained there during the day.

And it is further proven that this commanding officer stood there all day and with the point of his sword touched the shoulders of the voters and ordered them to go and vote. There is no contradiction in the evidence as to this fact. The evidence was that at twenty-two different polling places a similar state of things occurred; and yet the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] says the Army has never been used at the polls in time of peace, and that the republican party does not favor interference by troops at elections. This is a very late thing, if so. It is new to the people. That was so in all the districts of South Carolina, as I am informed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I said except during flagrant war.

Mr. COBB. This was not during flagrant war.

Mr. GARFIELD. When was it?

Mr. COBB. In 1876, at the last presidential election, and the same thing occurred in 1872.

Mr. GARFIELD. I shall be glad to hear more testimony on that point.

Mr. COBB. The evidence of it is before the House. I made a report in which the evidence was recited to which I refer.

Mr. HAZELTON. That is what made Indiana democratic, I suppose?

Mr. COBB. No, sir; Indiana is a democratic State and in favor of free and fair elections.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have this to say: Whatever else is gained during this special session, we have gained this much: we have convinced the people of the country that the democratic party is in favor of free and fair elections and that we intend to have free elections in this country if possible. We have striven for it during this extra session. The republicans have used the veto power against us and defeated us.

It is said the sixth section of this bill means nothing. I trust that it does mean something. It means that troops shall not be used as they have been used, to drive democrats from the polls and to force men against their will to vote the republican ticket.

It was said a few minutes ago by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that there were about forty thousand polling precincts in the United States; and that in order to place troops at each poll we would have to divide each soldier into two or three parts in order to make them hold out. This may have been an ingenious way of putting it. All know, however, that this is not the way the troops are used to carry elections. But a few States and congressional districts in the South are selected, and troops are sent into them, a sufficient number to intimidate the colored and other voters, and they are thus carried for the republicans, as South Carolina and Louisiana were carried in 1876; and the people are cheated out of a President, as they were then by this means. But this point was well answered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.] All that has to be done is to distribute your troops where they will do the most good, and you will have accomplished all you desire. You republicans put the man who occupies the presidential chair where he is by carrying a single State.

The smallest State in the Union was sufficient to change the result even under the extraordinary circumstances which then existed. In South Carolina the troops were scattered over the State in 1876, and the evidence shows that wherever they were they intimidated the voters and changed the result of the election. In the first place, the leading republicans down there, as the evidence shows, told the negroes, who had in many cases joined democratic clubs, that General Grant was going to send troops to shoot them down if they voted the democratic ticket. When the troops came the colored democratic clubs disbanded and the men voted the republican ticket. They believed that what they had been told was true, namely, that if they voted the democratic ticket they would be treated thus. That is the way South Carolina was carried.

Sir, I have said more than I intended to say, for I did not intend to participate in the discussion upon this bill at all; but in view of what has been said on the other side I felt that it was due to myself and to this House that I should say what I have said.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The hour for closing general debate has arrived.

Mr. CLYMER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] to move to strike out the sixth section. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BAKER. I move to strike out the sixth section, and on that motion I propose to say a word. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Indiana [Mr. COBB] seems to be affected with a nightmare that has haunted him for the last fifteen years in consequence of some terrible outrages that he claims the voters of Indiana were subjected to by reason of the fact that some "boys in blue" from the State of Massachusetts had the impudence to vote at an election somewhere in Indiana during the war and interfere with some democrats who desired to vote.

I wish to say, with all respect to my colleague, that I do not believe a single word of his story. I never heard of it in the part of the State in which I live. I never heard of it until it was retailed by my colleague on the authority of a gentleman speaking elsewhere. My friend has fallen into error, while laboring under this nightmare, by mistaking for Union soldiers from the State of Massachusetts the "Knights of the Golden Circle" led by Milligan, Horsey, and other democratic leaders of Indiana. [Applause on the republican side.]

I think that if in 1864 there were any outrages perpetrated on the voters of Indiana it was by the twenty thousand men, Knights of the Golden Circle, all democrats banded together by oath-bound obligations for the purpose of liberating the confederate prisoners at Camp Morton, sacking the city of Indianapolis and turning the State over to the enemies of the Union. [Applause and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I have said all I desire to say on that point.

I commend my friends of the majority for having deployed their skirmisher [Mr. COX] who makes sheet-iron thunder for his party in order to cover the democratic retreat, and who when I asked what law was brushed from the statute-book by this legislation, turned around and accused me of impertinence in asking the question.

You came here proclaiming that you would starve the Government unless you could "wipe out" from the statute-book certain obnoxious legislation. [Cries of "We never said that!" from the democratic side of the House.] You may pass this legislation, but it will leave the laws on the statute-book untouched and still remaining in full force.

The distinguished gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] who covers the democratic retreat with his sonorous music, talks about a "fraudulent President" preventing their brushing away these laws. I thank God for such a President as that. [Applause on the republican side of the House.] I trust that we may always have a President who, when revolution and conspiracy are threatening on the floor of Congress, will have the manhood to stand up in the exercise of the veto power and put down all traitors and conspirators by its use. [Applause and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on this section.

Mr. KEIFER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] control the time when we are under the five-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] moves that the committee rise.

Mr. HAWLEY. I rise to a point of order. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] is pending and has not yet been voted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. That does not affect the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER.]

The question was taken on Mr. CLYMER's motion; and it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 2175) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill; and pending that motion, I move that all debate upon the bill and amendments be closed in five minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Allow me to make a suggestion. Some time ago the gentleman made a motion, which was agreed to, to limit debate upon the pending section of this bill to one hour, to be divided equally between gentlemen in favor of and those opposed to the bill. The entire time has been used by those in favor of the bill, and some of us who desire to speak against it have not been permitted to open our mouths.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with what occurred in committee.

Mr. MILLS. It is now about five o'clock, and as we are not through with this bill and it may take some time longer to complete it, I will move that the House adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to; upon a division—ayes 43, noes not counted.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] to limit all debate upon the Army appropriation bill, now pending in Committee of the Whole, to five minutes.

Mr. MANNING. I move to make it fifteen minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. I move to amend so as to make it twenty-five minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make one statement in regard to the debate which has occurred in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Ohio who has just addressed the House [Mr. GARFIELD] sent word to the Chair, pending the discussion, that he desired to speak in opposition to this section, and the Chair supposing that it would be agreeable to that side of the House recognized the gentleman for that purpose. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] now complains that the time has all been occupied by those in favor of this sixth section.

Mr. MANNING. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER,] so as to give twenty-five minutes for debate.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. KEIFER; and upon a division there were—ayes 57, noes 99.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. WILBER called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, there being but 6 in the affirmative; not one-fifth of a quorum.

So the motion of Mr. KEIFER to allow twenty-five minutes for debate was not agreed to.

The motion of Mr. CLYMER to limit debate to five minutes was then agreed to.

The motion of Mr. CLYMER that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2175) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate upon the pending bill and amendments thereto has been limited to five minutes. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] in charge of the bill.

Mr. CLYMER. Four minutes of that time I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER.]

Mr. KEIFER. I cannot enter upon any proper discussion of this important measure in four minutes, or even in five minutes. I simply wish to say that I am one of those who do not indorse all that has been said to-day upon the floor of this House. I apply this remark to the speeches made on both sides of the House. I am now forbidden the privilege of giving my views on the effect of this bill, and especially the sixth section of it.

One hour's time was given for the purpose of general debate for and against the sixth section of this bill, and all of that time has been used in debate by democrats and republicans in favor of it. I have asked time to-day to speak against this bill, which has been refused. Those of us who desire to utter our views in full on this floor against the bill and the objectionable legislation contained in it have been gagged, and we are not allowed to be heard. Gentlemen on this side of the House who favor the bill have all the time they desire.

That is all I need say, except that I wish to emphasize what I have before stated here by saying that I agree with those who claim they are opposed to using troops at the polls as a police force to keep the peace at elections, in so far and only in so far as their use may interfere with the conduct of elections. But I am in favor of using the troops, the Army of the United States if you please, to keep the peace at the polls by driving from the polls the irregular armed bands of men who may be there breaking the peace and interfering with elections. [Applause on the republican side.]

I have never favored the use of troops as an ordinary police force, or as a substitute for the civil police, but only as an aid to the police when there were brought to the polls irregular and unauthorized troops or armed men, such as the ku-klux and white-liners, and others of like character, to drive away the police, overawe the honest voters, and control the elections and stuff the ballot-boxes. In that case I say it is time for the Government to come in and protect its citizens at home and at the polls.

I have on this floor and elsewhere deprecated the use of soldiers at the polls to intimidate the voter or in any way to interfere with the elector or the elections. I still deprecate such use. The United States troops have never been, as has often been shown, used for such purpose. They have never prevented a voter from voting at any election. But while I would not favor such use of United States troops, I am equally opposed to the use of lawless bands of armed men—call them what you may, ku-klux, regulators, white-liners, &c.—to drive from the polls, overawe, and intimidate voters and otherwise take control and conduct of elections. The democratic party never has condemned the use of lawless bands of armed men at the polls, and it has, through many years, favored and justified the use there of such bands. Lawlessness is preferred to lawfulness by that party in the conduct of elections.

Arms at the polls are not objectionable to that party so long as they are not used to keep the peace. If they are to be used at the polls to promote riots, to commit murder, &c., in short, to prevent a full, free, and fair election, as in many instances in South Carolina and Louisiana, they are unobjectionable in the eyes of democrats and should be countenanced and encouraged. Now, I am only in favor of using United States troops at the polls when and where, and only when and where, irregular and unauthorized bands of armed men are first used to interfere with elections and with the right of the peaceable and honest voter to go freely to the polls and peaceably vote for members of Congress, and then only for the purpose of putting down such bands. I would only use United States troops to prevent interference with elections and to protect United States officers, as now authorized by expressed provision of law—section 2024, Revised Statutes—when necessary and required, whose duties require them to see that free, fair, honest, and peaceful elections are held for members of Congress.

I cannot surrender these views by voting for this bill. While the sixth section of the bill repeals no law in force and does not affirmatively prohibit any act to be done which may be done under the Constitution or existing laws, it, fairly construed, denies the right to use any of the money appropriated, to be used to feed, equip, transport, or pay any portion of the Army, if it is at any time to be used to keep the peace at the polls in any emergency. To vote for this bill is to surrender, in principle, all we have so long contended for, in my judgment. The words in the section, "to be used as a police force," have no special meaning in the connection in which they are used. Whenever United States troops are used to aid the civil power to keep the peace they are used as a police force. In no case have United States troops been used in this country to keep the peace at elections or anywhere else in aid of the civil power save as a police force.

While the appropriation made in this bill may be made available, I cannot assent to the terms on which it is made as set forth in the sixth section of it, and hence I must vote against it.

If I have any time left I yield it to my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. WILLIAMS.]

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Of course I can say nothing on the merits of the question in one minute, and will content myself with simply presenting an amendment. I move to amend the pending section by striking out the words "as a" before the words "police force" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "instead of the ordinary civil;" so that if adopted the section will read:

That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used instead of the ordinary civil police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State.

I will only add that if we are in favor of using troops to keep the peace at the polls as a last resort and in cases of supreme necessity, then we should say so in plain unambiguous language. I know I am not, and I do not know anybody who is or ever was in favor, in the inception of an election, when no danger threatened and where the public peace was in no wise menaced, of stationing soldiers with bayonets around the polls to take the place of the ordinary civil police force and conduct the election. I have never heard of anybody who favored that. But when unauthorized bodies of armed men appear there, officered and equipped and too strong to be overcome by the ordinary civil police authorities, and who assume to control and conduct the election, then, instead of depending upon armed men commanded by inexperienced civil officers and armed and equipped in some miscellaneous manner, I would prefer to rely upon disciplined troops commanded by cool and experienced officers, amenable to military rules and accustomed to act in an emergency. And if we possess this power, as I believe we do, then it should be the last rather than the first to be surrendered. And I am unwilling to cast any vote which should cause or even countenance its surrender. It is for this reason that I have offered the amendment, which I hope the committee will adopt.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the section is now exhausted; but amendments are still in order.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, there were—ayes 36, noes 124.

Mr. FROST called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] to strike out the section.

Mr. BAKER. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. WARD. I move to amend by adding to the section the following:

Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall be construed to lessen or interfere with the power of the President of the United States to use the Army or Navy thereof whenever in his opinion such use is necessary to preserve the public peace.

The amendment was not agreed to; there being—ayes 16, noes 120.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 2175) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same with amendments, and with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. CLYMER. I call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. CLYMER moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were severally read and agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill,

Mr. FINLEY, Mr. ROBERTSON, and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 172, nays 31, not voting 83; as follows:

Mr. CLYMER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 12, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BECK. I offer an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, to the bill (H. R. No. 2251) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes. This is an amendment reaching the form more than the substance of the bill, and I think a very important one for the Senate, as its adoption would save a good deal of time. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

Mr. CONKLING. May I understand what this is? Is this a substitute now reported by the Committee on Appropriations for the entire bill reported yesterday with amendments?

Mr. BECK. It is not reported formally from the Committee on Appropriations. I present it, and ask that it be referred to the committee, though I believe I can say that it meets with a good deal of favor from the committee. It does not change the appropriations as agreed to by the House and Senate, but it endeavors to change the form of the bill, so as to make it simple, and, we think, more easily understood.

Mr. CONKLING. Then, if the Senator will allow me, the form, in parliamentary sense, of his report or motion, is a substitute. It is to take the place of the other bill.

Mr. BECK. It is, so far as the form is concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MAXEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to which was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2263) supplemental to "An act to establish post-routes," to report it with amendments. I ask that the amendments be printed and the bill, as amended, laid on the table with the notice I now give to any Senator who desires to present an amendment to the bill, to have it ready.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to state that I shall ask the consideration of this bill at the earliest practicable moment after it is printed.

Mr. WALLACE, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2252) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. Is the bill printed?

Mr. WALLACE. It is printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania when it is his purpose to call up the bill that he has just reported from the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. WALLACE. It is my purpose to call it up to-day and put it on its passage. If Senators are content with that action, I shall call it up and get through with it.

Mr. ALLISON. That is all I desired to know.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1478) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate for the purchase at private sale, or, if necessary, procure by condemnation, a site for a post-office in the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland, reported it with amendments.

IMPRESSIONS FROM PORTRAITS AND VIGNETTES.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1989) relating to printing impressions from portraits and vignettes, to report it with an amendment by way of a substitute. The substitute is the Senate bill which was passed yesterday on my motion. I was not aware when that was passed yesterday that we had a House bill relating to the subject before the committee, and I propose to substitute for it the bill that we passed yesterday. My object is to pass that bill as a substitute for the bill that came from the House, and to have the one we passed yesterday recalled.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Printing, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, at the request of a Senator, Representative or Delegate in Congress, the head of a department or bureau, art association, or library, be, and he is hereby, authorized to furnish impressions from any portrait or vignette which is now, or may hereafter be, a part of the engraved stock of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, at such rates and under such conditions as he may deem necessary to protect the public interests.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ANTHONY. I now move that a message be sent to the House recalling the bill (S. No. 343) relating to printing impressions from portraits and vignettes which was passed yesterday.

The motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF NAME OF A PROPELLER.

Mr. HEREFORD. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report back the bill (S. No. 506) to change the name of the steam propeller Nuhpa to Metropolitan, and I ask that it be placed upon its passage. I will state that there is a certificate here showing that there are no liens or mortgages upon the vessel whatever, and also a certificate and affidavits in regard to the condition of the vessel.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HEREFORD (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 687) for the relief of C. Bohn; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 688) to provide for the appointment of a marshal for the middle district of Alabama and a district attorney for the northern district of Alabama; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CALL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 37) providing for the education of the Indian children at the Normal Institute, Hampton, Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 2175) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SAUNDERS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 2251) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COCKRELL and Mr. LOGAN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 2263) supplemental to "an act to establish post-routes;" which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

CASE OF FITZ JOHN PORTER.

Mr. BAYARD. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Committee on Military Affairs the papers and proceedings in the original trial of General Fitz John Porter, together with all papers relating thereto heretofore sent to the said committee.

I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution. It contains a clause to meet the views of the honorable Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CHANDLER.] I will state to him, as I see he is paying attention to this matter, that the resolution just submitted by me is merely for the printing of the papers and proceedings in the case for the use of the committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to it.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

JAMES H. NORTH.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1841) to remove the political disabilities of James H. North, of Culpeper County, Virginia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 11th instant, approved and signed the act (S. No. 572) to amend an act approved February 24, 1879, entitled "An act to create the northern judicial district of the State of Texas, and to change the eastern and western judicial districts of said State, and to fix the time and places of holding courts in said districts."

The message also announced that the President had this day approved and signed the act (S. No. 516) to extend the time of special postal service until service can be obtained by advertisement.

PENSION TO FAMILY OF GENERAL SHIELDS.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 674) for the benefit of the widow and children of General James Shields.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us hear the bill read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

That payment of the pension of $100 monthly granted to James Shields, late a brigadier-general of United States Volunteers, by an act of Congress approved June 18, 1878, be continued to his widow and children, the full amount of said pension to be paid said widow during her life, and at her death, if the same should occur during the minority of said children, or any of them, then the said pension shall be paid to so many of said children as may then be minors, in equal parts, until they reach respectively the age of twenty-one years.

Mr. DAWES. I do not desire to oppose the passage of this bill by any means, but I desire in the same spirit in which it is offered to offer an amendment of an additional section, to which I trust there will be no objection, as I hope there will be none to the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add the following additional section to the bill:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Caroline S. Webster, widow of Fletcher Webster, late colonel of the Twelfth Massachusetts Regiment, who was killed in the war with the Confederate States at the second battle of Bull Run, Virginia, at the rate of $50 per month; said pension to be in lieu of that she now receives.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri why the language in reference to minor children in the first section of the bill is employed? Are there any minor children of General Shields?

Mr. VEST. General Shields left three minor children. The age of the eldest is twelve years.

Mr. CONKLING. And how old is the youngest child?

Mr. VEST. The youngest child I think is about seven. I am told the age of the eldest is twelve.

Mr. CONKLING. Are they children of a second marriage?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; he never was married until late in life.

Mr. CONKLING. And is the mother of these children aged or youthful?

Mr. VEST. Well, sir, that is a hard question to ask in regard to a lady, but I suppose she would be considered as middle-aged, neither very young nor very old.

Mr. CONKLING. As the Senator indicates, such questions are not those that one would prefer to put or prefer to answer. I ask them because I think they should be asked. This bill is novel, as far as I know, in its provision. If there be a pension act like it, the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] will know it no doubt by reason of his service on the Pension Committee. I do not know it, and I make these inquiries in order that we may understand the length and breadth of the proposed bill. As I understand it, the language will have this effect: the pension which was paid to General Shields during his life and would have continued had he lived, is to be paid to his widow during her life, is also to be paid as long as any child is a minor, and then if I caught the reading aright, I see nothing in it which would confine the payment of this pension to children already born or the children of General Shields. I should like to have the bill read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the bill be reported.

The Chief Clerk again read the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I think on hearing it a second time it does mean clearly the children of General Shields. As I first heard it, I thought otherwise. I should like to inquire of one of the Senators whether there is any precedent for this, the paying of a special pension at any rate—I do not put it on the ground that it is an extraordinary pension of $100 a month—not only during the life-time of the pensioner but after his death to his widow, and after that to any child as long as any child shall remain less than twenty-one years of age?

Mr. VEST. I do not know of any such precedent; I have not examined that question. I do know that this pension of $100 a month is the only pension of that amount ever granted to any person by the Government of the United States. General Shields is the only person who ever received, by special act of Congress or otherwise, a pension of that amount. The object of the bill is simply to continue the beneficence of Congress to both his widow and his children. I presume that the extraordinary nature of this case is sufficiently known to justify this measure, it being the only pension of the kind that has been granted, and all the facts and reasons in regard to the granting of that pension having been considered when the original act was passed. This bill continues that pension to his widow and children. I admit that I know of no precedent, but I say at the same time that I know of no such pension having been granted to any person except to General Shields.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I know, and so does the Senator in the chair, of instances in which special pensions (whether of $100 a month or not I will not say) have been granted by act of Congress. In reply to the Senator from Missouri, I think it should be said,—of course not in disparagement or impairment in any sense of General Shields or his merits or his claims upon the country; it disparages no man to say of many other men who live and of many other men who have died that they too did all that men could do to deserve a favorable and flattering recognition from Congress. Whatever, therefore, is to be done in the case of General Shields or in any other case, however meritorious, should, in consistency, find its parallel in many other cases. Therefore, as we yield to a very natural and I presume universal inclination in the Senate to make any suitable recognition in the case of General Shields, it is right that we should bethink ourselves of the answers to be given in other such cases. To-morrow and to-morrow and to-morrow other generals, other officers, who served with distinction in the late war, in the war before, lay down; they leave children, and families and kindred. It seems to me that we should take care in this case to keep within such limits as may enable us to do something for others.

I know how ungracious it is to make any suggestion which looks like opposition to a bill such as this; but I said to one Senator, as he will remember, who did me the favor to consult me about this some days ago, that I thought, if this extension went to the widow during her life, it would be as far as it was wise to go. I think so, and I say that again. Not being a member of the Committee on Pensions and having no charge of this matter, and no mission in regard to it more than any other Senator, I will not move an amendment; but I think this bill is going too far. I think it is going so far that we should refuse utterly any such legislation in many other meritorious cases, whereas if it went not so far other cases might fare better.

Mr. VEST. I move to amend the bill by striking out in the eighth line, after the word "her," the word "life" and inserting "widowhood."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In the twelfth line I move to strike out the word "twenty-one" and insert "sixteen;" so as to make it conform to the general pension law in reference to the ages of the children.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let it be read now.

The CHIEF CLERK. If amended the bill will read:

That payment of the pension of $100 monthly granted to James Shields, late a brigadier-general of United States volunteers, by an act of Congress approved June 18, 1878, be continued to his widow and children, the full amount of said pension to be paid said widow during her widowhood, and at her death, if the same should occur during the minority of said children, or any of them, then the said pension shall be paid to so many of said children as may then be minors, in equal parts, until they reach respectively the age of sixteen years.

Mr. CARPENTER. I move to amend by inserting after the word "death" the words "or marriage."

Mr. VEST. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to strike out "twenty-one" and insert "sixteen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] after the word "death," in line 8, to insert the words "or marriage."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. In the eighth line of the amendment I offered I should like to strike out the words "in the war with the Confederate States," so as to leave it "killed at the second battle of Bull Run." That will be sufficiently definite. There is no occasion to perpetuate the words now there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendment will be made. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is made.

Mr. BLAINE. I move that the amount granted in the second section be made the same as in the first. I do not in the least derogate from the honor and merit of General Shields. I have always voted for everything that has been done for him, but I think the descendants and the dependents of Mr. Webster have as large a claim and that they ought to be put upon the same basis. I move to make that fifty dollars one hundred dollars.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I hope the Senator will withdraw that; I fear it will kill the bill. The Senator from Massachusetts only asks $50. I hope the Senator from Maine will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the honorable Senator from Illinois think that is a fair disposition of the national bounty?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Senator from Massachusetts is satisfied with it. One hundred dollars is an extraordinary pension, and it was granted specially to General Shields. I am afraid the amendment would affect the passage of the Shields bill, against which there is nobody.

Mr. VOORHEES. I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine will be adopted. I do not think a pension of $100 a month to the bereaved descendants of Daniel Webster would be a profligate use of the public money. Strange as it may seem, while Daniel Webster was a man devoted to the arts of peace, with no warlike tastes, no spirit, so far as known, for martial pursuits, yet it is a fact that every son he left died on the field of battle fighting in defense of the flag of his country. That is a great historic fact.

Mr. HOAR. It is hardly worth while to interpose; but the Senator is stating a fact, and by mere inadvertence he has used the language "every son Mr. Webster left." Edward Webster was killed in his father's life-time in the Mexican war.

Mr. VOORHEES. Every son who was born to Mr. Webster; I may have used the word "left," and I thank the Senator for his correction; but the two sons who sprang from his loins fell in battle, in the face of the public foe, under the American flag. One of his grandsons died in the Navy in the same cause. His last grandson bearing the Webster name died last winter; and the name of Webster is now extinct in his own lineage. This pension will go to the widow of Fletcher Webster, who died almost in sight of this Capitol, and in its defense, on the bloody field of the second Manassas. It will go to her and to her daughter, the grandchild of Daniel Webster and an orphan of the war. I hope I commit no impropriety in stating that they are in need of this assistance. I think, Mr. President, there is not a Senator here who will cavil as to the difference between $50 and $100 a month under all the circumstances.

I know how dangerous it is thought by many Senators to set precedents, but I do not share such fears. Whenever another case is brought here embodying such a state of facts as this, with such a family, with such numerous and heroic sacrifices, I will do as I am doing now, I will vote then as I am voting now.

I shall vote with great pleasure to extend to his family the pension that was granted to General Shields a year ago. I gladly support the bill offered by the Senator from Missouri. A year ago, with the members of the Pension Committee, I thoroughly investigated the circumstances of General Shields, the services he had rendered to his country, and the disabling wounds under which he labored, and we thought it was right (and in that judgment the Senate concurred, and the House likewise) to give him a pension of $100 a month. We then expected and hoped he would live to enjoy that pension many years. In that expectation and hope we have been disappointed. Sitting in his chair, after having delivered a lecture in a small western town for the purpose of earning money to buy bread for his family, without warning, as I see it stated, the old wound in his breast, received from a Mexican ball more than thirty years ago, terminated his life in thirty minutes. The pension he has enjoyed has run about one year. I am glad of the opportunity to vote that it shall be extended to the wife and children he left behind him. I would have voted that it might run through the woman's life-time, and I would vote that it might run to the children until they arrive at twenty-one years of age; but I accept the bill as amended by the author of the bill itself.

Coupled with that, it affords me infinite pleasure to support the amendment offered first by the Senator from Massachusetts and now the amendment to that amendment offered by the Senator from Maine. I think we could not do a more grateful or acceptable thing than to pass the bill with these amendments.

Sir, the name of Webster adds honor to the American name wherever it is spoken beneath the skies. Men differed as to his position in relation to public questions when he died. To many it seemed that a cloud rested upon the going down of his sun, but his fame is full of light and glory in the eyes of all. It was only this morning that I read a paragraph from a speech delivered by him at Buffalo in which he said that if he was too old when the conflict of arms came to defend his country he hoped his children would do it for him, and they did. They did it with their lives, and proved to the world that the blood in their veins, drawn from the great parent fountain, contained that high heroic element which furnished heroes in trying hours.

I hope the bill as amended will pass.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, I am in favor of the bill to continue this pension to the widow and children of General Shields. I want the bill to pass pure and simple. I do not want it to pass by anything that will look in the statute-book like log-rolling for any support. When the bill shall come up to pension the descendants of Daniel Webster, I want that to pass the same way. Neither of these great names needs any help or support from any other. Let them both pass, and let them stand in the statute-book not the effect of log-rolling or combination, but let it appear that each man's name carried the pension to his own posterity. I will vote for both bills.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. A remark made by the Senator from New York makes it proper for me to say, on behalf of the Committee on Pensions, that neither the proposition to pension General Shields's family nor the proposition to pension Mrs. Webster has been before that committee. The measures do not come from the committee. The bills were offered in the Senate, and have remained here.

Another remark on behalf of that committee I feel called upon to make, and that is this: there has been a tendency within the last two years—I cannot speak for a longer period than that—to increase by special act, beyond the amounts allowed by the general law, pensions in individual cases; and each precedent adds to the labor of the Pensions Committee, because each precedent induces others whose pensions are circumscribed by the existing law to appear before the Pensions Committee and claim that their cases are exceptional as well as those in which exceptional amounts have been granted, and each addition strengthens the claims of these persons and increases the numbers of them.

Now, it is a matter, I think, that should be carefully considered by the Senate whether or not we shall go on thus increasing pensions beyond the amounts allowed by law to individual pensioners. Take the case of Mrs. Webster. Her husband died as a colonel in the service, I believe. The general law allows to the widow of a colonel a certain sum by way of pension. The proposition now is to increase that sum largely. Why? There were a great many colonels that died in the service who left widows and children who are drawing the sum the law allows them. When they see that the widow of Colonel Webster has had assigned to her a much larger sum than that amount, you encourage them to come before Congress and ask for an increase of their pensions as well. If they apply to the Pensions Committee for such increase and are refused, they ask why, and the answer will have to be, because the father of the deceased soldier was not as distinguished a man as the father of Colonel Fletcher Webster. That is the reason, and the only reason, I apprehend, that can be given.

I believe it should be carefully considered by the Senate whether we will continue to drift in this direction or whether we will not. It looks as if we were drifting in the direction of establishing a system of civil pensions and not a system of pensions for military service merely.

I have done my duty, I believe, in the matter.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, there would be great weight in what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] said in regard to joining together pensions for separate pensioners in ordinary cases; but in the present case both of these pensions depend upon matters of history well known to all members of the Senate and not upon any investigation to be made by a committee, and so far as the sentiments of the different Senators have been expressed neither bill is in the slightest degree in doubt. Every Senator who has spoken agrees to the propriety of both these pensions as originally proposed. Therefore the putting them together is a mere matter of convenience and not in the least for the purpose of obtaining votes for either by reason of the support of the other; and the amendment which my colleague proposed was adopted by the Senate before the observation of the Senator from Wisconsin came in. I trust, therefore, he will not regard his objection as serious enough to insist upon it under these circumstances. The amendment having been adopted, it would be very invidious to strike it from the bill now.

Mr. CARPENTER. I was not aware when I made the remarks I did upon this bill that the amendment had carried. I understood the question pending was, should the bill be amended by making the provision for Mrs. Webster. Of course I shall not vote against this bill because it is to be done in that way, although I regret it. If I want to do a handsome thing, I would always prefer to do it in a handsome way.

Mr. WITHERS. I was accidentally called away from the Senate Chamber a few moments ago when this matter was brought up before the Senate. I find it here on my return. I wish to state, as chairman of the Committee on Pensions, that when the bill was offered by the Senator from Missouri providing a pension for the widow and children of General Shields, and it was proposed to lay that upon the table, I made no motion that it should take the usual course and be referred to the Committee on Pensions, because the case in my opinion was sui generis, and all the facts were within the knowledge of Senators present, and I thought they could be prepared to act upon it just as well by taking it from the table and voting directly upon it as by referring it to the Pension Committee.

With regard to the bill providing a pension for the widow of Colonel Webster, that bill was referred to the committee, and I think has not been reported back, simply in accordance with the general agreement of the committee to report back to the Senate no pension bills during the present session.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I did not know that had gone to the committee.

Mr. WITHERS. I think it went there.

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, it was referred; I have it.

Mr. WITHERS. I will say, however, in my judgment that that case comes very nearly within the provisions of the Shields case, so far as regards the peculiar and exceptional circumstances surrounding the case, and I would suggest the propriety of taking some action by the Senate to get the bill out of the hands of the Pensions Committee before acting upon it. It seems to me that would be necessary. As chairman of the Committee on Pensions, I will state that I presume there will be no objection on the part of the committee to being relieved of its further consideration, in order that the Senate may take proper parliamentary action upon it.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will allow me, as I made this motion, I want to state that it was not out of the slightest desire to interfere with the arrangements of the Committee on Pensions, which had been publicly announced here, not to report any bills. That announcement was not understood as having any special reference to this bill. The reason this bill was suggested as an amendment to the other bill was not from any such idea as was hinted at by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER.] Nobody on this side, nobody in the Senate I think, had the slightest idea of opposing the bill proposed by the Senator from Missouri. Everybody was for the passage of that bill, and ought to be, I think. I have no doubt the feeling is substantially the same in reference to the other. That suggested the idea to me of moving the amendment, not for the sake of interfering with the arrangement which the Committee on Pensions had made, and not to take it away from the committee, and I hope the Senator from Virginia will so understand it. No one has any higher respect for the action of the Committee on Pensions than myself, and nobody more readily agrees with the conclusion to which they came, that it was not best to go into legislation on the subject of pensions generally at this session. When Mrs. Webster's bill was brought in I made some suggestion of that kind, and I had a conference with the Senator upon that same subject.

Mr. WITHERS. The only reason I called attention to the fact was that it would appear that the action proposed would take up a bill which is not within possession of the Senate, but is really in possession of the Committee on Pensions. To relieve the parliamentary difficulty was the only object I had in calling attention to it, because I never entertained the suspicion that any reflection was designed on the action of the Pensions Committee.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to assure the Senator that there was none.

Mr. WITHERS. I accept the assurance.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I am in favor of this bill as it has been amended by the Senate; and in answer to a remark that fell from the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KIRKWOOD] in reference to the precedent that it might set I will say that if Senators will examine the various acts that have been passed by the Congress of the United States in reference to the pensioning of different parties, they will find that frequently the widows of officers of the Army have been pensioned when the officer did not die from disease contracted in the Army as contemplated by the law granting pensions, or from any wounds received in battle, but from old age. It has become rather common to grant pensions to the widows of deceased officers where they are not within the pale, purview, or meaning of the statutes granting pensions, and each case when presented must stand upon its own merits. It does not become a precedent for any other case unless one be found precisely similar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. VOORHEES. I hope there will be no objection to disposing of this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moves that the further consideration of this bill be continued notwithstanding the close of the morning hour. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. LOGAN. I was remarking that each case should stand upon its own merits, not forming a precedent for any other. Taking the propositions in this bill, granting a pension to the widow and orphans of General Shields, and to the widow of the son of Daniel Webster, I think the two cases present to the Congress of the United States such circumstances that the bill is not likely to become a precedent for other cases. So far as the amount is concerned, I will not hesitate for one moment in reference to that. I think that General Shields for his service to this Government ought not only to have been pensioned as he was, but should have been placed upon the retired list of the Army, as a bill proposed to do that was before the last Congress. If there is a case in this country where merit demands a recognition for loyalty to this Government, for devotion to his country, for brilliant and gallant conduct in battle, his case in my judgment is one. I knew this man, General Shields, when I was but a child. He and my father were friends tried and true; from the same country they adopted this as their country and home. He dandled me on his knee when I was small; he encouraged me, flattered me in my boyhood. I learned to love and revere him. I have seen nothing in his course during all my life that has made that attachment to him less strong.

When the war with Mexico came upon this country, he went forward, and in every contest where he was present the bright sword of General Shields gleamed and glistened as he led his unconquered warriors to the conflict. He was wounded twice, once nigh unto death; in fact it was announced throughout the whole country that he was killed in battle. Recovering, however, he again resumed his command and was again severely wounded. After that he was tried in many positions, in civil positions not necessary to enumerate, but there was none in which he was ever tried where he did not prove himself an honest and a faithful citizen and servant of his country. In the last unfortunate war General Shields came forward unsolicited, presented himself to the President of the United States, said "Here am I to tender my services, whatever they may be, to my country." In that war again he performed gallant service, was again severely wounded.

The war passed; his friends came before Congress presenting the question whether or not in his old age, having served his adopted country so faithfully and truly, he should not be placed, as others were, on the retired list of the Army. That was refused; but as a substitute for that this pension was granted to him. It is only a few weeks ago since he retired from this Senate Chamber, honored by the State of which he had recently become a citizen, and within a few days past he quietly and peacefully passed away in death, leaving a wife and three children in almost destitute circumstances. If there is a case in this country or ever will be that will appeal to the generosity of the people of this land to grant that which will at least support the family of a true and gallant man, I think this is one.

Then, sir, in reference to the amendment that is made to this bill, to pension the widow of the son of Daniel Webster, I agree with the remarks of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] that that is a case where we should not hesitate. We should not inquire as to the amount or as to the length of time that the pension should be paid. Daniel Webster was one of the great intellectual luminaries of this great nation of ours. As a lawyer I might say he had scarcely an equal in this country; as a statesman and expounder of the Constitution he stood a head and shoulders above all other statesmen. His only son fell doing battle for his country with his face to the foe, and if there is anything that can appeal to us it does seem to me that when the last son of Daniel Webster fell in battle, at least the widow of that son should be pensioned by the Government of the United States.

Now, sir, in conclusion let me say that this bill, taking the two cases together, ought to pass. General Shields, whatever may be said of him, was a bright and shining ornament of patriotism and valor; his conduct as a patriot can be held up to future generations for their admiration, and in fact as a model for those coming from foreign shores and adopting this country as their own to make themselves citizens devoted heart and soul to this Government of ours. It is an encouragement to them. Take the two together, then, and there has been no case presented to the Congress of the United States, in my judgment, where we can more readily afford to comply with the promptings of a generous spirit than in this.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the word "minority" as used in this bill as presented was used in respect to the age at which the pension of the children of General Shields was to cease. That age has been changed to sixteen years. The word "minority," as I understand, is a technical word, and therefore after the change made to sixteen years the word "minority" would be inapplicable in this bill. I suggest, therefore, that the bill be changed in line 9, after the word "occur," by striking out "during the minority of" and inserting "whilst;" in line 10, after the word "them," by inserting "are under the age of sixteen years;" in line 11, after the word "children," by striking out "as may then be minors" and inserting "under the age of sixteen years;" in line 12, by striking out the word "the," after "respectively," and inserting "that;" and then striking out all after the word "age" in line 12.

Mr. VEST. There is no objection to that amendment.

Mr. MAXEY. I am in favor of the bill. My only object is not to use an inapplicable word in the bill.

Mr. VEST. A single word in answer to the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. KIRKWOOD.] The suggestion made by the Senator in regard to this bill is that the precedent established is a bad one, that there may grow up in the United States what is known as a civil pension list. For one, I should have no objection to such a list if the facts that might arise in regard to any other distinguished citizen in civil life warranted the grant of the pension. The United States to-day is the only government in existence that does not reward civilians as well as soldiers for distinguished services rendered to the Government, and reward them in substantial and ample form; and if General Shields when living had been a citizen of any nation in Europe, his breast would have glittered with the stars and emblems and rewards of his heroism. Coming from a nationality which has been unfortunate enough to pour out its blood like water in defense of every country except their own, there is not an Irish heart in these free United States that will not beat with gratitude to this Congress for this sincere evidence of their appreciation of the services of their heroic countryman; for, sir, he was a knight without fear and without reproach. And in passing this bill there is one incident which, without violating the confidence of private life, I am permitted to state, coming from the lips of General Shields himself. The lady who is now the object of this bounty, his widow, nursed him during the terrible illness that followed the wounds that he received upon the plains of Mexico; and at his own house, at his own fireside, with tears in his eyes, he told me that during the long vigils of that anxious watch, when life hovered betwixt two worlds like a star, gratitude ripened into love, and the nurse became the deity that presided over his household circle. It is then eminently fit and proper that she who lost a protector whose heart and arm were ever ready to defend her and her children should receive this pension, she having saved a life to the Republic that all over illustrates and adorns it and makes it a model for the world.

I have nothing else, sir, to say on the bill.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. President, I have not indicated, perhaps, to the Senate what my vote will be upon this bill. When I was up before I sought to draw the attention of the Senate to the direction in which we were moving, so that it might not be said in the future that we had acted unadvisedly.

I agree with all that has been said in regard to General Shields; I agree with all that has been said in regard to Daniel Webster; I agree that his son, Fletcher Webster, died in the service of our country, that another son had died previously in the service of the country. That is all true; but still it leaves remaining the question whether or not we shall inaugurate the system toward which we are tending.

If we set out to award extraordinary rewards to all the men who deserve well of their country, I am afraid that our Treasury will be exhausted. I know a man, a citizen of the State in which I live, who served in the Florida war, did just precisely as much as any other man could do, did his whole duty as a soldier, and was honorably discharged after that war was over. When the war with Mexico occurred he went into the United States service and served during the war, doing all that any man could do or can do, his whole duty. When the war of the rebellion occurred, although perhaps beyond the period of life when he could have been called upon to go as a soldier, he went in again and remained until his bodily ailments compelled him to leave the service. He is to-day a watchman in one of our squares here. He did not do as much as some distinguished gentlemen have done, but he did all he could do. He was not in a position to do as much as others did, but all he could do he did. I want the Senate to consider the question whether or not he is to have a special bill put in in his favor. I shall be glad to report it, and if the precedent is to be established I shall be glad to support it; but I want the Senate to consider how far this thing is to go. We ought to have some system, some order, some rule by which we will proceed, and not drift along from case to case until you have piled up precedents so high and made them so strong and so powerful that you cannot avoid following them.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the honorable Senator if he voted against or rather would vote against the appropriation for a monument to mark the birthplace of General Washington or the burial-place of Jefferson, on the ground that it was impossible exactly to draw the line between them and other distinguished citizens for whose grave-stones we do not provide?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I voted for that yesterday, I would vote for it again very cheerfully, but I do not think that touches the case. The question before the Senate is this substantially, and I do not think we can get out of it; whether after we have done the same thing heretofore—and I have been just as active I believe as any other man in doing it until I saw where it was drifting—we shall to-day substantially establish a civil pension list in our country. We may say we do not want to do it; we may say we do not intend to do it; we may say we do not think we are doing it, but it becomes us to consider very carefully whether we are or are not, and whether if we are we intend to do that thing.

Mr. BLAINE. At a moment when I was quite unadvised of the situation of the bill, I made a suggestion of an amendment. I think the amendment I submitted is not in order at this time in Committee of the Whole, because that section had just been inserted. I withdraw the amendment and when the bill comes into the Senate I will reoffer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be in order then. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas, [Mr. MAXEY,] which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The proposed amendment is in line 9, after the word "occur," to strike out the words "during the minority of" and insert "whilst;" in line 10, after the word "then," to insert the words "are under the age of sixteen years;" in line 11, after the word "children," to strike out "as may then be minors" and insert "under the age of sixteen years;" in line 12, to strike out the word "the" after "respectively" and insert "that;" and to strike out all after the word "age" in line 12; so as to make the first section read:

That payment of the pension of $100 monthly granted to James Shields, late a brigadier-general of United States volunteers, by an act of Congress approved June 18, 1878, be continued to his widow and children, the full amount of said pension to be paid said widow during her widowhood, and at her death, or marriage, if the same should occur whilst said children or any of them are under the age of sixteen years, then the said pension shall be paid to so many of said children under the age of sixteen years, in equal parts, until they reach respectively that age.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. "So many of said children" is not good grammar.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest, as the Senator from Illinois has done in his seat, that the phraseology should be changed so as to read:

To such children so remaining under sixteen years.

The words now in the bill I think would leave an ambiguity in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from New York send his amendment to the desk?

Mr. CONKLING. I will venture to read the bill as I propose to amend it.

The full amount of said pension to be paid said widow during her widowhood, and at her death or marriage, if the same should occur while said children or any of them are under the age of sixteen years, then the said pension shall be paid to such of said children as may then be under the age of sixteen years.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest instead of the phrase "at her death or marriage" the words "at the expiration thereof."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas accept the amendment?

Mr. MAXEY. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas as modified at the suggestion of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I suggested an amendment which the Senator from Missouri is willing to accept. After the word "widowhood," instead of using the words "at her death or marriage," the words should be "at the expiration thereof."

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. That is better.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words "her marriage" were inserted by a vote of the Senate. By unanimous consent, however, the change may be made. The Chair hears no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts being entertained. The amendment is to strike out, in line 9, the words "her death or marriage" and insert "the expiration thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. CARPENTER. I want to hear that bill reported. As far as I can understand it, the best way I can read it from the form it is in now, the pension to these children will run forever.

Mr. VEST. Then the bill has been distorted so that it does not mean what I intended.

Mr. CARPENTER. Of course: that is why I want it read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as amended.

Mr. CARPENTER. I take it that would run during their natural life if they are under sixteen now.

Mr. VEST. There is a part of the bill omitted:

Until they arrive at the age of sixteen years, respectively.

On my motion the bill was amended by striking out "twenty-one" and inserting "sixteen," and by mistake a part of it has been erased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves to add the words he has indicated.

Mr. CONKLING. May I make a suggestion? Now I suggest to the Senator from Missouri to let this bill lie aside informally a few minutes while he or some other Senator takes it and goes through it and re-writes this section. It has been so changed and interlined that it is very difficult to read it; and it is a very easy thing to put in plain language what is meant.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to that.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator can fix the bill and call it up in five minutes.

Mr. VEST. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be informally laid aside.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. THEODORE F. KING, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 2046) to authorize a compromise of the claims of the United States under the will of Joseph L. Lewis;

A bill (H. R. No. 2175) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2264) to amend section 1, page 234, volume 20, of the United States Statutes at Large, Forty-fifth Congress.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 5,000 copies of volume 2 of the geological series of the reports on the geographical and geological survey of the Rocky Mountain region entitled "The Geology of the Henry Mountain," with the necessary illustrations and charts.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. No. 678) relating to vinegar factories established and operated prior to March 1, 1879; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

USE OF TROOPS.

Mr. BLAINE. While the pension bill is being put in shape, if it be agreeable to the Senate, I will call up the bill introduced by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MCDONALD] for the purpose of submitting some remarks. I shall be very brief.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves to take up Senate bill No. 621.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 621) authorizing the employment of the militia and the land and naval forces of the United States in certain cases, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL] in his remarks yesterday seemed to lay a charge at my door that I had spoken in reference to himself when he was seven hundred miles distant. It was not my fault that the Senator was seven hundred miles away. He made a lengthy speech on the then pending bill, and I did not make the remarks to which he takes exception until the day before that bill was finally passed. I inquired of his colleague when he was coming back and could get no definite information; it was not indeed known; so that if I was to have any opportunity at all to review his remarks, I must do it then or let it pass. But that is of no especial consequence. The graver charge which he lays at my door is that in quoting his record in the secession convention of Georgia I suppressed some very important part, and that important part he supplies himself in this way; I will read from the Senator's remarks of yesterday:

It was agreed that Judge Nisbet should bring forward the test resolution in favor of secession, and Ex-Governor Herschel V. Johnson should offer for that the substitute agreed upon by the opponents of the resolution for secession; and we put that substitute in the strongest form possible, by simply providing that the question whether the State should secede or not should be postponed until after an effort should be made to secure a convention of the Southern States for the purpose of acting and consulting together upon the subject.

Further on the Senator quotes the resolution of Mr. Nisbet, and then says:

The substitute thus offered by Governor Johnson was the one to which I have alluded, on which the opponents of immediate secession had all agreed as in our opinion the strongest ground upon which we could stand with hope of success. It is long and I will not trouble the Senate to read it, but it is precisely of the character I have stated.

The Senator having stated that it was simply a motion to postpone the question of secession, the record will show whether it was the Senator from Georgia or myself that was guilty of an act of suppression. I have the resolution in my hand, and as the Senator from Georgia well said it is lengthy; and while its length may have deterred him from reading it, it will not deter me, for the Senator is fond of presenting himself in the attitude of one who was doing all he could to maintain the Federal Union, and who consented to secession only as the last possible resort. The substitute which the honorable Senator from Georgia himself moved, it first being suggested by Herschel V. Johnson and afterward moved by the Senator himself, he adopting all its phraseology and all its intendments, was as follows; I will omit a large part of the preamble as not essential. The conclusion of the preamble is:

Therefore, while the State of Georgia will not and cannot, compatibly with her safety, abide permanently in the Union, without new and ample security for future safety, still she is not disposed to sever her connection with it precipitatedly nor without respectful consultation with her southern confederates—

No proposition to confer with the States of the Union generally—

she invokes the aid of their counsel and co-operation, to secure our rights in the Union, if possible, or to protect them out of the Union if necessary. Therefore,

First. Be it ordained by the State of Georgia in sovereign convention assembled, That Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, North Carolina, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Tennessee, and Missouri, be, and they are hereby, respectfully invited to meet with this State by delegates in a congress, at Atlanta, Georgia, on the 16th of February, 1861, to take into consideration the whole subject of their relations to the Federal Government, and to devise such a course of action as their interest, equality, and safety may require.

SEC. 2. Be it further ordained, &c., That the independent republics of South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, and Mississippi, be, and they are hereby, cordially invited to send commissioners to said Congress.

Those four States had seceded a few days before and instantly in the judgment of the Senator from Georgia they were "independent republics," I suppose to send embassadors, or possibly some higher title, because we find now that merely a Senator is an embassador from a sovereign State here! But these "independent republics" were invited to send delegates or commissioners.

SEC. 3. Be it further ordained, That inasmuch as Georgia is resolved—

Here comes the proof of the honorable Senator's deep and abiding attachment to the Union of the States, the Union in which Webster had lived and died and for which he had spoken so many great words!—

Be it further ordained, That inasmuch as Georgia is resolved not to abide permanently in this Union without satisfactory guarantees of future security, the following propositions are respectfully suggested for the consideration of her southern confederates as the substance of what she regards indispensable amendments to the Constitution of the United States, to wit.

The Senator agreed to state on what grounds they would stay in, and those grounds were that the following amendments to the Constitution were indispensable:

1. That Congress shall have no power to abolish or prohibit slavery in the Territories or any place under their exclusive jurisdiction.

And then he added a second condition:

2. Each State shall be bound to surrender fugitive slaves; and if any fugitive slave shall be forcibly taken or enticed from the possession of any officer legally charged therewith for the purpose of rendition, the United States shall pay the owner the value of such slave, and the county in which such rescue or enticement may occur shall be liable to the United States for the amount so paid, to be recovered by suit in the Federal courts.

That was a magnificent condition; that would not, however, satisfy the Senator; he demanded another:

3. It shall be a penal offense, definable by Congress and punishable in the Federal courts, for any person to rescue or entice, or to encourage, aid, or assist others to rescue or entice any fugitive slave from any officer legally charged with the custody thereof, for the purpose of rendition.

Still a fourth he demanded:

4. Whatever is recognized as property by the Constitution of the United States shall be held to be property in the Territories of the United States, and in all places over which Congress has exclusive jurisdiction; and all kinds of property shall be entitled to like and equal protection therein by the several Departments of the General Government.

And still the Senator would not be satisfied to remain in the Union with these four conditions. He demands more:

5. New States formed out of territory now belonging to the United States, or which may hereafter be acquired, shall be admitted into the Union with or without slavery, as the people thereof may determine at the time of admission.

Here comes still another condition:

6. Congress shall have no power to prohibit or interfere with the slave-trade between the States, nor to prohibit citizens of the United States passing through or temporarily sojourning in the District of Columbia from having with them their slaves and carrying them away, but it shall be the duty of Congress to provide by law for the punishment of all persons who may interfere with this right in the same way as is provided for in the foregoing third proposition.

And still the Senator was not satisfied; he demanded—

7. No State shall pass any law to prohibit the citizens of any other State traveling, or temporarily sojourning therein, from carrying their slaves and returning with them; and it shall be a penal offense, definable by Congress and punishable by the Federal courts, for any person to entice away, or harbor, or attempt to entice away or harbor, the slave or slaves of such citizen so traveling or temporarily sojourning.

It has passed into a proverb—I do not know but what Mr. Toombs himself denies it—that he once boasted that he would call the roll of his slaves at the foot of Bunker Hill Monument. The Senator from Georgia demanded that he should have the right to do that, and that it should be put into the Constitution as an amendment.

And I beg especial attention to the eighth condition, for all the seven I have read would not satisfy him to remain in the Union:

8. The obligation to surrender fugitives from justice as provided for under the Constitution of the United States extends, and shall be held to extend, as well to fugitives charged with offenses connected with or committed against slavery or slave property as to any other class of offenses, and for the purposes of this proposition, whatever is defined to be a criminal offense in one State shall be deemed and held a criminal offense in every other State.

That is, the Mississippi slave code or the Georgia slave code shall be the rule of action in the courts of Maine and Illinois. Still the Senator was not satisfied; he would not agree to remain even then. He would not agree to remain in the Union if we would give them the privilege of bringing their slaves into the District of Columbia; he would not agree to remain if we gave them the right to carry them into all the States of the Union; he would not agree to remain if we gave them a constitutional provision that the slave code of his own State should be the rule in every Northern State. He still demanded another:

9. The Supreme Court having decided that negroes are not citizens of the United States, no person of African descent shall be permitted to vote for Federal officers, nor to hold any office or appointment under the Government of the United States.

Why, from the foundation of the State of Massachusetts negroes had voted; from the separation of Maine, in her original constitution, no distinction was made in regard to suffrage on account of color. That had been interwoven as the very common law of the State and common right of the people. But the Senator said he would not agree to remain in the Union unless we were compelled to give that up by constitutional amendment, and that no colored man under any constitution of any State should be permitted to vote for any Federal officer—for a Representative in Congress or a Presidential elector.

SEC. 4—

Those nine points were what the honorable Senator from Georgia demanded should be incorporated into the Constitution of the United States, and this is the ordinance which he described in his speech yesterday as a mere motion on the part of Herschel V. Johnson to postpone the consideration of secession on the part of Georgia:

SEC. 4. Be it further ordained, &c., That refraining from any formal demand upon those slaveholding States which have passed them of the repeal of the personal-liberty and other acts in any wise militating against the rendition of fugitive slaves or fugitives from justice, yet the State of Georgia hereby announces her unalterable determination not to remain permanently in confederation with those States unless they shall purge their statute-books of all such acts.

SEC. 5. Be it further ordained, &c., That if, between now and the time of final action upon the question of her continuance in the Union, the General Government should attempt to coerce any one of the States that have recently withdrawn, or shall hereafter withdraw therefrom, the State of Georgia will make common cause with such States, and hereby pledges all her resources for their protection and defense.

This was a resolution postponing the question of secession and looking to Georgia remaining inside the Federal Union! It is so said here by a Union man, by an honorable Senator who boasts that whoever else may have faltered by the wayside or grown faint in support of the Federal Union, he always bore aloft the standard even when he was voting for the secession of Georgia!

And still further the Senator moved:

SEC. 6. Be it further ordained, &c., That the State of Georgia will continue to hold, until her final decision in the premises, the possession of Fort Pulaski and all other Federal property within her borders, which have been seized under the direction and authority of his excellency the governor of this State.

That was the language of a man claiming to have been loyal to the Union, in absolute and open rebellion that day and that hour to the Union; having seized Federal property, having taken possession of the forts of the Union, and standing there defiantly threatening the Government of the United States that unless we consented to nine amendments to the Constitution Georgia would walk out. That was the honorable Senator's position.

SEC. 7. Be it further ordained. &c., That a commissioner be appointed by this convention to each of the slaveholding Stasts, now members of the Federal Union, to inform them of the action of Georgia, and to urge their conformity to the policy herein indicated, and that in response to the request of Alabama, this convention will also appoint a commissioner to the convention which she has invited at Montgomery, on the 4th of February next, who is hereby instructed to urge upon that convention so to shape their action as to conform to, and co-operate with, that of the proposed congress at Atlanta, on the 16th day of the same month.

As my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] well suggests, this was in direct, contemptuous defiance of the prohibition in the Constitution of the United States that no State shall make a compact with any other State.

And the Senator from Georgia was not yet satisfied. He added:

SEC. 8. Be it further ordained, &c., That if all effort fail to secure the rights of the State of Georgia in the Union, and she is reluctantly compelled to resume her separate independence, she will promptly and cordially unite with the other Southern States similarly situated, in the formation of a southern confederacy upon the basis of the present Constitution of the United States.

And here is his last:

SEC. 9. Be it further ordained, That this convention will adjourn, to meet again on the 25th day of February next, to take such action in the premises as may be required by the proceedings of the congress at Atlanta and the development of intervening events, keeping steadfastly in view—

What? Keeping what "steadfastly in view?" Any one would suppose from the lofty point of independence and patriotism which the Senator from Georgia assumed and from which he looked down on us all yesterday, that it must be the Union of the States that was to be kept steadfastly in view. Not at all.

Keeping steadfastly in view the rights, equality, and safety of Georgia, and her unalterable determination to maintain them at all hazards, and to the last extremity.

That is what the honorable Senator accused me of suppressing. Well, I have read it all now. That, the honorable Senator describes as a simple motion to postpone action on secession. Why, Mr. President, it is not for any northern man to make apologies about secession, nor to say what he would do; but I frankly declare that if I had been a southern man, I would a thousand times rather have voted for the direct ordinance of secession than for the substitute moved by the Senator from Georgia. The direct ordinance of secession contained not a disrespectful word to the Union or to any sister State; but this substitute laid down humiliating, insulting, degrading, contemptuous conditions, an open, defiant, flagrant insult to every man in the Northern States. It carried with it all the insult that could be compressed in language, and the honorable Senator from Georgia had better have let his record as voting for the secession ordinance stand than to have that record paraded as the thing which he preferred. Did the honorable Senator from Georgia in his wildest dream ever suppose that those conditions would be accepted by this country? He laid them down as "indispensable" conditions for Georgia remaining within the Union, and those "indispensable" conditions involved making slave territory of every foot of free territory in this country, of the District of Columbia, of all forts, arsenals, and dockyards, and of every State in this Union; and it involved more, as I have already said: it involved the infinite degradation of saying to another State that "the criminal code which we choose to adopt in Georgia shall be the rule of action in your State." Nothing more insulting was ever conceived or aimed at a free people. The honorable Senator from Georgia will not hereafter accuse me of suppressing that part of his record.

And yesterday the memory, which the distinguished Senator from Georgia could not call to his aid in the House three years ago, suddenly came to his relief, and he did remember that he did offer in totidem verbis the very same provision which I asked him in the House if he had offered, with the simple correction that it was in the form of a bill, and not a resolution; and now the honorable Senator proposes to slide off on the construction that this bill which he offered was aimed at somebody else than the soldiers of the United States, which "somebody else" he failed exactly to describe, or at least to so describe as to bring it within my humble comprehension. I will read the bill. Mark you, this was offered in October, 1862. The question of belligerent rights had long before been settled and the cartel for exchange of prisoners had long been agreed upon, of course with some infractions, but it had been acknowledged and prisoners by the thousand had been exchanged. This was directly after the preliminary announcement by Mr. Lincoln of the emancipation proclamation, and this is what the honorable Senator from Georgia offered in the confederate senate:

1. That if any person singly, or in organized bodies, shall, under pretense of waging war, kill or maim, or in any wise injure the person of any unarmed citizen of the Confederate States, or shall destroy, or seize, or damage the property, or invade the house or domicil, or insult the family of such unarmed citizen; or shall persuade or force any slave to abandon his owner, or shall, by word or act, counsel or incite to servile insurrection within the limits of the Confederate States, all such persons, if captured by the forces of the Confederate States, shall be treated as criminals and not as prisoners of war, and shall be tried by a military court, and, on conviction, suffer death.

The second section of the bill offered by the Senator from Georgia was:

That every person pretending to be a soldier or officer of the United States, who shall be captured on the soil of the Confederate States, after the 1st day of January, 1863—

That was the day on which Mr. Lincoln declared there should be a formal proclamation issued—shall be presumed to have entered the territory of the Confederate States with intent to incite insurrection and abet murder, and unless satisfactory proof be adduced to the contrary, before the military court before which the trial shall be had, shall suffer death. This section shall continue in force until the proclamation issued by Abraham Lincoln, dated at Washington, on the 22d day of September, 1862, shall be rescinded, and the policy therein announced shall be abandoned, and no longer.

The honorable Senator from Georgia says that that did not mean the Army of the United States. He was only seeking to legislate against some predatory bands who were going around robbing henroosts and corn-cribs, I suppose. Why, on the face of it it is intended as a retaliatory measure. On the very face of it it is intended as a defiance to the United States and a menace to their troops that they would not hereafter be regarded as entitled to the rights of war, to be treated as prisoners, but that they should suffer death. The Senator had his memory restored by finding in the Encyclopedia that the bill was withdrawn and that it was left to the discretion of the president of the Confederate States. Very wisely withdrawn! Very foolishly—I do not use the word in any unnecessarily offensive sense—very foolishly offered, because neither side dare attempt any such thing as that. It was war, and war on a gigantic scale, and the rights of war must be maintained. Men captured in battle must be treated as prisoners of war with humanity; and every measure like that offered by the Senator from Georgia was either brutum fulmen, as he denounced the proclamation of Mr. Lincoln, or it was very malignant cruelty. I will not accuse the honorable Senator of malignant cruelty.

Mr. President, I did not rise to prolong the discussion, only to correct the record which the honorable Senator said I had suppressed; but I cannot take my seat without calling the attention of the Senator to some very strange passages in his history. In his speech of yesterday he said, in alluding to his own record, which he elaborately unfolded to us—

> You will find much against secession, you will find much against the republican party, you will find much against the war, and you will find burning words against reconstruction. All that is true; but against the Union of these States partly national and partly federal, against this confederate nation as explained by Madison and expounded by Webster, I have had no feeling but one of perpetual adoration from the time I understood it to this hour; and upon that subject I defy criticism and challenge malice.

Turning to the next page of the RECORD, in the same speech, I get a sufficient criticism and answer to what I have just quoted, for the Senator said:

> No man doubted my fidelity to the confederacy, because at that very moment and for two months before I had been the only public man in the confederacy on the stump trying to rally the people against unconditional surrender.

He was the loudest, bravest, boldest defender the Union of the States ever had, as construed by Webster; and at the last gasp of the confederacy, after four years of struggle, he was the one who cried never surrender to the Union. And these two declarations appear in the same speech of the Senator, uttered within five or ten minutes the one of the other.

The only other extract which I will make from the Senator's speech is this:

> Mr. President—
> He said—
> I have another duty to perform which I take some pleasure in performing and yet feel some pain in performing, for it is always painful to have to refer to myself.

If that be the case the honorable Senator from Georgia is the victim of the most limitless punishment, self-inflicted, of any man, either in the confederacy or within the bounds of the Union. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. WITHERS. Will the Senator from Georgia yield a moment?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I will not take five minutes.

Mr. WITHERS. I want to ask that the Army appropriation bill, just now received from the House of Representatives, be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CARPENTER in the chair.) It will be so ordered if there be no objection.

Mr. CONKLING. No, Mr. President, I object to the Army bill so called being read more than once to-day.

Mr. WITHERS. Of course that settles it.

Mr. CONKLING. Later on I may withdraw the objection, but I should like to know what the bill contains.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, I have no thought of replying to the Senator from Maine, for he has said nothing that a sensible man could reply to. He has been talking upon subjects of which he knows quite as much as a jay-bird knows of the science of music, and no more. It would be certainly ridiculous for me to undertake to satisfy the Senator of the wisdom, or the propriety, or the patriotism of those gentlemen who were in the trying ordeal of 1861 in the conventions of secession. I say it would be entirely ridiculous for me to attempt to satisfy that gentleman, and I am not here to do it.

There were two parties in that convention: one in favor of the immediate secession of the States, as I explained yesterday; another opposed to the immediate secession and doing all they could to postpone the act, hoping for time and returning reason to do the balance. Whether they acted wisely, whether they acted considerately, whether they offered propositions to get a postponement that were reasonable in their character, it is nothing to the Senator from Maine and nothing to this Senate. I think the Senator has made a speech that no other man in this Senate is capable of making, simply because the Senator does not see himself as others see him. If he did it would save him from many blunders, and very foolish notions.

Mr. President, I do not choose either to undertake before this body to satisfy the Senator from Maine as to what was my motive, what was the character of my action in the confederate senate. The Senator stated on a previous occasion that I had introduced a resolution which I had not introduced, and I brought forward the facts on yesterday supposing they might satisfy even the Senator from Maine. It does seem that nothing in the shape of the truth can ever satisfy that honorable Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the remarks of the Senator are very personal.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I am not talking of the Senator's motives, only of the facts.

Mr. BLAINE. To what resolution does the honorable Senator refer?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia has the floor.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator admit a question? To what resolution does he refer?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator must address the Chair.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I was speaking of the resolution the Senator said I offered in the confederate senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator must address the Chair.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I am addressing the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator was addressing the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Perhaps I was; I beg pardon.

Mr. BLAINE. I understand the Senator from Georgia to yield to me for a question. I merely want to have the fact stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. BLAINE. To what resolution does the honorable Senator refer?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I have stated the only resolution involved that could be referred to. I said that I was not going to attempt to satisfy that Senator as to the motive or propriety of my conduct in the confederate senate in relation to what he called a resolution introduced by me years ago, but which turned out not to be a resolution, which the Senator has read.

Mr. BLAINE. It was a bill?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes, and I explained the fact touching it fully on yesterday.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator wants——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia has the floor.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I supposed——

Mr. BLAINE. I understand that. I am speaking by the courtesy of the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the rule, as he understands it, is, when a Senator is on the floor it is optional with him to be interrupted or not. If he yields to an interruption, then the interrupting Senator has the floor until the first rising Senator reclaims it by addressing the Chair; but conversation backward and forward is no more proper after an interruption has been permitted than it was before, and is forbidden by the rule.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not understand the rule to be as the honorable presiding officer at the moment suggests.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands it.

Mr. BLAINE. Oftentimes the mere nod of assent of the Chair will create more facility of business than for the Chair to be compelled to pronounce more words under such a construction of the rule than the colloquy between the two Senators would consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must perform the duty which the rule imposes upon him.

Mr. BLAINE. I beg to differ with the Chair. Such a construction of the rule, the Chair cannot but see himself, must lead to obstruction of debate rather than to facility when enforced in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rules are provided by the Senate for their own government and should be enforced.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I was going on to say that I was not going to attempt to satisfy that Senator. It is unnecessary to attempt to satisfy him after the facts that I stated yesterday. I was not alluding to the personal motives of the Senator; I did not have any such intention when I said nothing like the truth would satisfy him. He seems ambitious to make an issue with me about something, I do not know what, I do not know why, and I do not care. It makes no difference whatever. I supposed that when the facts were brought to the attention of that Senator he might recognize the fact. He does not seem to do so, and really it excites only pity for him and not regret for myself.

The Senator quotes from my speech of yesterday, and he seeks to involve me in a contradiction. He quotes the language where I spoke of devotion to the Union as expounded by Webster and Madison, and then he quotes another sentence where I spoke of the fact that I tried to rally the people against unconditional surrender. Is there any inconsistency there? I had made an elaborate argument to try to show to the Senate that the war was not between the Southern States on one hand and the Union of Madison and Webster on the other, but that it was a war provoked by two extremes—a war between the believers in secession and the believers in consolidation, in which the consolidationists had the advantage in that they had the possession of the Government. Does anybody in this Senate fail to understand that, except the Senator from Maine? Certainly in a sectional war I sided with my section. Certainly in a sectional war a great many men in the North sided with their section who did not agree with the republican party. These things are palpable to every intelligent man and to every thinking man. As to whether the Senator from Maine has improved his condition in relation to the statement I made yesterday, after these expressions of the Georgia convention, I am unable to say. Surely if that Senator is satisfied with his position in this matter I am, and if he will seek to pursue this further I will not. The Senator's condition excites my pity more than my anger, and I decline to make any answer further to his remarks.

PENSION TO FAMILY OF GENERAL SHIELDS.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of the bill (S. No. 674) for the benefit of the widow and children of General James Shields.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Secretary to read the bill as now amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as amended, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That payment of the pension of $100 monthly, granted to James Shields, late a brigadier-general of United States Volunteers, by an act of Congress approved June 18, 1878, be continued to his widow and children, the full amount of said pension to be paid said widow during her widowhood, and at the expiration thereof, if the same should occur while said children or any of them are under the age of sixteen years, then the said pension shall be paid to such of said children as may then be under the age of sixteen years, in equal parts, until they respectively arrive at that age.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Caroline S. Webster, widow of Fletcher Webster, late colonel of the Twelfth Massachusetts Regiment, who was killed at the second battle of Bull Run, Virginia, at the rate of $50 per month; said pension to be in lieu of that she now receives.

Mr. BLAINE. I move to increase the Webster pension to $100 a month, the same as the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 9, section 2, after the word "of," it is proposed to strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred;" so as to read "at the rate of $100 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, as amended, were concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the benefit of the widow and children of General James Shields, and to increase the pension of Mrs. Caroline S. Webster."

MEMORIAL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Several Senators rose.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask to make a report from a committee, if the Chair will receive it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will receive morning business, if there be no objection.

Mr. VOORHEES presented the memorial of a delegation of the Cherokee Nation, protesting against the demands of certain citizens of the State of North Carolina, of Cherokee descent, against the Cherokee Nation; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 625) for the relief of the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank, Paris, Texas, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GROOME asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 689) for the relief of Charles Collins; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. GROOME (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 690) for the relief of George W. Maher; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 2252) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PATRICK DORAN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further business moved, the Secretary will report the first bill on the Calendar.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BAYARD. I think we had better have an executive session.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will give way to a motion for an executive session.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator from Rhode Island withdraws his motion, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOUSTON. I appeal to the Senator to withdraw the motion in order to enable me to ask the Senate to consider a joint resolution from the House embracing a very small amount.

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to ask the Senate to pass the joint resolution (H. R. No. 95) to pay Patrick Doran for services as messenger, House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that this joint resolution has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOUSTON. I did not know that it had been referred; but it involves a very small amount and should be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can move to release the Committee on Appropriations from the further consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. HOUSTON. If there is no objection to that, I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama moves that the Committee on Appropriations be relieved from the further consideration of this joint resolution. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The joint resolution will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution; and by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Clerk of the House to pay to Patrick Doran, for his services as messenger to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department during last session of Forty-fifth Congress $291.60, in full and final settlement for such services.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS LANGTON.

Mr. GARLAND. I move, with the permission of the Senator from Delaware for a moment, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 594) for the relief of Thomas Langton, of Dundee, Michigan. The bill was reported from the Judiciary Committee.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GARLAND. I am willing that the bill be laid aside informally for the motion of the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be laid aside informally.

Mr. GARLAND. It will be the unfinished business for to-morrow, I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. BAYARD. I now renew my motion for an executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With the leave of the Senator the Chair will lay before the Senate some bills from the House of Representatives for the purpose of reference.

The bill (H. R. No. 2175) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The second reading of this bill being objected to, it will go over until to-morrow.

The bill (H. R. No. 2046) to authorize a compromise of the claims of the United States under the will of Joseph L. Lewis was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. No. 2264) to amend section 1, page 234, volume 20 of the United States Statutes at Large, Forty-fifth Congress, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONKLING. The Chair announced that one bill, being once read, would lie over until to-morrow. Which bill was that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the Army appropriation bill. The Chair was informed that the Senator from New York objected to its second reading.

Mr. CONKLING. I did not hear the Chair. I had no doubt that was so; but I wanted to know.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator make the objection?

Mr. CONKLING. The Chair was quite right. I objected to the bill being read more than once to-day, and I only wanted to know that that was the bill which the Chair announced as lying over.

GEOLOGY OF THE HENRY MOUNTAIN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 5,000 copies of volume 2 of the geological series of the reports of the Geographical and Geological Survey of the Rocky Mountain Region, entitled, The Geology of the Henry Mountains, with the necessary illustrations and charts; 3,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, 500 for the use of the Department of the Interior, and 500 for the use of the survey; the illustrations and charts to be made by the Public Printer, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Public Printing.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION.

Mr. LAMAR. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to move the consideration of a bill?

Mr. BAYARD. I withdraw my motion to allow the Senator from Mississippi to bring up a bill.

Mr. LAMAR. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1847) to provide for the appointment of a "Mississippi River commission" for the improvement of said river from the head of the passes, near its mouth, to its headwaters.

Mr. FERRY. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not press the consideration of the bill at this time. I understand the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] who is now absent serving the order of the Senate at another place, who has not only taken a great deal of interest in this bill but in the general subject of transportation, desires to be present when the bill is considered. I will state to the Senator from Mississippi that it is with no hostility to the bill that I thus interpose, because in the main I am in favor measurably of a bill of this kind; it is simply out of courtesy to an absent Senator who has expressed a desire to be present when the bill is considered, and I trust the Senator from Mississippi will accord that courtesy.

Mr. LAMAR. I am fully assured of the kindly feeling of the Senator from Michigan to this measure, and also of the Senator from Minnesota. I am quite confident that the amendments which the committee have reported to the bill are those which meet his concurrence. I would dislike to take the responsibility of postponing a measure of this kind upon my own motion unless I could be assured certainly of the time when the Senator from Minnesota will be here.

Mr. FERRY. I cannot assure the Senator, but I understand the Senator from Minnesota will return as soon as he has discharged his duties at West Point, and certainly he must be here very soon. I hardly think that it will hazard the passage of the bill. If I thought so I should not interpose any objection at the present time. The Senator will see, and he knows from what interchange has passed, that I have no disposition to prevent the passage of the bill, but only to accord to an absent Senator that courtesy which is usually given, and especially to the Senator from Minnesota, who has taken the interest to which I have already made allusion.

I appreciate the Senator's desire to have the bill taken up, and in order that there may be no embarrassment in its way, I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business. Then the subject can be further considered.

Mr. COCKRELL. When will the Senator from Minnesota be back?

Mr. FERRY. I stated to the Senator from Mississippi, in answer to a similar question, that I could not tell exactly, but he will return as soon as he closes his duties at West Point.

Mr. ALLISON. He will be here to-morrow or the next day; during the present week.

Mr. FERRY. I suppose he will be here during the week. I understand the exercises are over already, and I think he will be here to-morrow or the next day.

CHINESE RESIDENTS AND VISITORS.

Mr. SLATER. I give notice that on Friday, or as soon thereafter as I can get the floor, I shall call up the bill (S. No. 622) regulating intercourse with the subjects of the Chinese Empire visiting or residing in the United States, and for other purposes, in order that I may address the Senate on the subject.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FERRY. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 12, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. ALFRED H. AMES, McKendree Methodist Episcopal church, Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEELE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. VANCE. I ask my colleague to yield to me that I may offer a resolution for reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later in the day for that purpose. The morning hour begins at seventeen minutes past twelve o'clock, and reports from committees are in order, the call resting with the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

THE TRADE-DOLLAR.

Mr. STEPHENS. I announce to the House that to-day, not in the morning hour but at some time thereafter, I shall report from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures the bill (H. R. No. 913) relating to the trade-dollar. I will not consume the morning hour with the consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The committee has leave to report at any time.

Mr. STEPHENS. And under that privilege I will make the report later in the day.

CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. MURCH. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to inquire into all matters pertaining to the preparation and furnishing of all material for the construction of public buildings and the manner of constructing the public buildings of the United States under the different systems adopted by the Government of the United States, and to report to this House, by bill or otherwise, what legislation is necessary to secure good material and good and suitable work at fair and reasonable compensation to the mechanics and workmen employed on public works; and said committee are further instructed to inquire into all expenses pertaining to the erection of the public buildings of the United States, and to make all such further inquiries as they may deem proper. And said committee are authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths. And said committee are further authorized to employ a stenographer at a fair compensation. And said committee are authorized to appoint a sub-committee of its own members for the purpose of pursuing these investigations; said committee when appointed to have all the powers conferred by this resolution. And said committee or its sub-committee may make their investigations either at the city of Washington or at any of the cities or other places where public buildings are being erected or material prepared, as they may deem proper. And said committee or its sub-committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of Congress; and the expenses attending the carrying out of these investigations shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, not to exceed $5,000, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized and directed to pay the same.

Mr. BREWER. I believe that resolution is subject to a point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order on the resolution that it involves an appropriation of money and should go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BREWER. It certainly cannot be carried without an expenditure of money.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause Rule 112 to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

112. All proceedings touching appropriations of money and all bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, shall be first discussed in a Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. It never has been held that an authority to spend money to execute an order of the House out of the contingent fund came within the purview of Rule 112. It is not technically an appropriation.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the Speaker's ruling. I think there has never been a ruling upon this rule regarding the expenditure of money already appropriated. Now, money in the contingent fund has been appropriated in a general way, but this requires the use of money already appropriated into the contingent fund.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman need not proceed further; the Chair thinks the point is a well taken one. It never has been the practice to object.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Before the Chair finally decides upon it, let me say a word. Let us see where the adherence to the intimation of the Chair would lead the House. The House is like an individual in his own household. It proceeds daily to use money to meet the requirements for the use of money in the conduct of its daily business. The enforcement of the rule now to refer this matter to the Committee of the Whole takes it away for the time being from the House. To be sure the House may resolve by a majority to go into the Committee of the Whole at any time it sees proper, or when it is in order, but the matter is delayed by objection here, and the point of order being entertained leads to delay and embarrassment. That is its purpose when it is made here. It is a purpose that cannot be concealed from the Speaker or the House.

Now, shall we in our daily life, in our daily proceedings, put it in the power of any one to delay, embarrass, or defeat the daily life, so to speak, of the House? and therefore the custom or the practice of the House has, in my judgment, at least some reasonable showing; and it is better, I submit deferentially to the Chair, for the House to observe the practice and custom of the House heretofore than to delay this matter upon the technical objection now made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with the purpose in view in making the objection. It is the right exercised by a member, inherent in himself, to take advantage of the rules of this House, and this rule in particular. The point of order being taken, the Chair will read the language of the rule:

All proceedings touching appropriations of money and all bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, shall be first discussed in a Committee of the Whole House.

The words are clear and distinct, and the Chair thinks are in harmony with the other rule which requires that any bill fixing a tax upon the people, or taxing the people, shall first be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The Chair sympathizes with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] in his argument.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Allow me to ask right there, what is the object and purpose of the contingent fund? It is to meet emergencies which may arise.

The SPEAKER. The same majority which has a right to pass and could pass this resolution can with equal facility under another rule reach it in Committee of the Whole after the morning hour of to-day. For instance, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] might move to go into Committee of the Whole, and if the majority concur with him, the resolution would be reached any day after a morning hour. The Chair thinks, therefore, there is no great hardship involved in that particular; but the Chair cannot evade the distinct words of the rule, if the point is made.

Mr. GARFIELD. As this is the first ruling, specifically, upon the subject, I would like to state a further view of the case.

Mr. McMAHON. I suggest to the Chair that such a ruling as is intimated would be a very unfortunate ruling.

The SPEAKER. That may be. The language of the rule may be an unfortunate——

Mr. McMAHON. I do not think the rule was intended to apply to the appropriations for the contingent fund. I served upon the Committee of Accounts at one time, when the great bulk of the expenditure was at the close of the session, when the committee reported, and if this point of order be sustained, you might as well do away with the contingent fund at once.

The SPEAKER. The House had better change the rule, then.

Mr. McMAHON. Put it one way or the other.

The SPEAKER. While the rule stands the Chair must decide upon the language of the rule.

Mr. McMAHON. It is spending the money of the House and therefore stands in a different position.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but it is public money nevertheless.

Mr. McMAHON. But it has been once voted and put in possession of the House.

The SPEAKER. Here is the particular language of the rule; the gentleman does not seem to take cognizance of said language:

Or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, shall be first discussed in a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McMAHON. Does the rule read "all bills."

The SPEAKER. It reads: "All proceedings touching," &c.

Mr. McMAHON. I know nothing about this particular case, but I think the ruling of the Chair would be an unfortunate one.

The SPEAKER. The two Houses are required to make appropriations and the President to approve them before the contingent fund gets any credit at the Treasury, and the Chair thinks that if the rule is a hardship then the remedy is for the House to change the language of the rule; but the point of order being raised, the Chair must decide on the words of the rule, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. As this is the first decision made under this rule, the Chair will allow me to make a single further suggestion. I think there are two clauses in the rule that warrant and require the decision made by the Chair. First, the one on which the Speaker has already made the ruling "authorizing payments out of appropriations already made." There is another clause which I will read, omitting the intervening words: "All proceedings * * * requiring appropriations to be made."

We have a certain fund appropriated by law called our "contingent fund." If by a proceeding of the House we authorize expenditures to be made from that contingent fund it will require a further appropriation in order to make good that fund. This proposed proceeding would be one requiring further appropriation, because it will be taking the contingent fund for a purpose not named or understood at the time the contingent fund was made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the first point a clear and strong one, and rests his decision upon that.

Mr. McMAHON. I would suggest to the Speaker, as chairman of the Committee on Rules, that that rule should be amended within a short time.

The SPEAKER. No harm can result in this instance, because a majority of the House in about half an hour to-day, or on any subsequent day after morning hour, can go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and reach this proposition by a majority vote.

Mr. McMAHON. That cannot be done near the close of the session.

The SPEAKER. That may be. The resolution will go to the Committee of the Whole.

EXTENSION OF HOUSE RESTAURANT.

Mr. KIMMEL. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have instructed me to report a bill directing the Architect of the Capitol to remove the bath-rooms of the House for the enlargement of the restaurant.

The bill directs the Architect of the Capitol to remove the bath-rooms of the House across the corridor to a room directly south and opposite their present location, and to prepare and turn over to the keeper of the House restaurant the room now occupied by the baths of the House, the transfer to be made at a cost not exceeding $2,000.

Mr. CONGER. Is that a report from a committee?

The SPEAKER. It is; from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that as the bill requires the expenditure of money it should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill (H. R. No. 2265) was received, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONGER. Is there a report accompanying this bill?

Mr. KIMMEL. There is a letter from the Architect setting forth the cost of the proposed change.

Mr. CONGER. Is there a report from the committee? I would like to know if the committee have given any reasons why the baths of the House should be removed from the Capitol and whisky vaults substituted

Mr. KIMMEL. There is no report.

Mr. WHITE. Of course there is to be no whisky vault there; the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] will see to that. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The bill has gone to the Committee of the Whole.

ADDITIONAL FORCE FOR SERGEANT-AT-ARMS.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I have a report to make from the Committee of Accounts.

The Clerk read the following:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ, in addition to force in his office now authorized by law, one clerk and two messengers for the present Congress, and until further order, at a salary to be fixed and determined by the Committee of Accounts; the duty of said messengers being, among other things, to assist in keeping order upon the floor of the House; all salaries herein mentioned to be paid monthly by the Clerk of the House out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. WHITE. I make a point of order upon that resolution. It is not respectful to the House or the Chair, for it intimates that the House and the Speaker do not preserve order. It also makes an appropriation, or requires payment to be made out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. The first point of order is not recognized by the rules.

Mr. WHITE. I do not make it as a point of order, but as a statement; I make it out of respect for the Speaker of the House, because I think we are an orderly body.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the last point of order made by the gentleman, and the resolution will therefore go to the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk also read the following resolution:

Resolved, That Isaac R. Hill be employed as a messenger on the floor of the House of Representatives for the present Congress, and until further order, under direction of the Sergeant-at-Arms, at $1,800 a year, to be paid monthly by the Clerk of the House out of the contingent fund.

Mr. WHITE. I make the same point of order upon that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the resolution will go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHITE. Where does the person referred to come from?

The SPEAKER. What person?

Mr. WHITE. From what State does the person come from named in the resolution?

The SPEAKER. The resolution has gone to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHITE. I want to know if he is from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the person named is from the State of Ohio.

Mr. WHITE. Then I make the point of order on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. It has already gone to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HENRY. The resolutions which have been read at the Clerk's desk are not reported from the committee for adoption. Those resolutions were referred to the committee, and some days ago the committee directed a substitute for both to be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not advised of that fact. The substitute will be read.

Mr. CONGER. Have not the original resolutions been referred to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk having read the resolutions, the Chair supposed that they were reported from the committee for action; but the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HENRY] states that the committee did not authorize those resolutions to be reported, but a substitute for them, which will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ, until otherwise ordered by the House, in addition to the force in his office now authorized by law, one clerk, at $1,800 per annum, and one messenger, at $1,600 per annum; said messenger to assist in preserving order on the floor of the House in the absence of the Sergeant-at-Arms, to serve subpœnas, and to perform such other duties as may be assigned to him; and the salaries herein ordered shall be paid monthly out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. CONGER. That is subject of course to the same point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this substitute, introduced by the committee in lieu of the two resolutions referred, is liable to the same point of order, and must go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] make the point of order on the substitute? I understood him to make it on the original resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] makes the same point on the substitute, and not the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WHITE.]

Mr. CONGER. I do. The substitute does not change the character of the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does not. The resolutions, with the substitute, will be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS BY PUBLIC OFFICERS, ETC.

Mr. HOSTETLER. The Committee on Civil Service Reform, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 293) to prohibit officers of, and claimants against, or contractors under, the United States from contributing money for political purposes, have directed me to report back the same, with a substitute, (H. R. No. 2266,) which the committee unanimously recommend as an amendment.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall not be lawful for any officer, clerk, or employé of the Government of the United States to contribute or pay to any committee or person, or into any fund, any money, property, or other valuable for any political purpose whatsoever, or to pay any assessment or percentage upon the income or emoluments of his salary or compensation for any political purpose, or give, lend, advance, or pay any money, property, or valuable thing with the intent, assent, permission, knowledge, or understanding that the same may be applied to such purpose; and any of said officers, clerks, or employés who shall violate any of the provisions of this section shall be immediately dismissed from the office, clerkship, or employment which they may hold.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of each of the heads of Departments of the Federal Government to issue and keep posted a standing order in their respective Departments prohibiting the officers, clerks, and employés in said Departments from violating any of the provisions of the first section of this act.

SEC. 3. That it shall not be lawful for any head of Department or other superior officer of the Federal Government to collect or permit or allow any other person to collect or receive from any officer, clerk, or employé in his Department or under his supervision any assessment, percentage, contribution, gift, loan, or advance of any money, property, or other valuable thing with the knowledge, intent, understanding, or permission that the same shall, or may be, used for any political purpose; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section or any head of Department who shall fail or refuse to promulgate the order as mentioned in the second section of this act or who shall fail or refuse to dismiss from office or employment any officer, clerk, or employé in his Department who shall violate any of the provisions of the first section of this act on the same coming to his knowledge shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment for a period of not less than one month nor more than six months, and in the discretion of the court by a fine of not more than $5,000.

SEC. 4. That any person having a contract with the United States or any officer thereof or who shall have had such contract within three months previous, or who shall have such contract within three months thereafter, who shall pay or contribute either directly or indirectly any money, property, or other valuable thing for any political purpose shall be deemed to have forfeited all rights and the same shall thereby be rendered null and void; and all officers of the Government are hereby prohibited from executing any contract with any party so offending, and that any person having any pending claim against the United States or before any Department, or officer of the Government thereof who shall pay or contribute any money, property, or other valuable thing for any political purpose shall thereby forfeit said claim and all right to recover or receive anything on the same.

Mr. GARFIELD. I reserve all points of order on this bill till I can examine it.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the reading of the original bill for which this is a substitute.

Mr. WHITE. I call for the reading of the first section of the substitute.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Did I understand the chairman of the committee [Mr. HOSTETLER] to state that this is presented with the unanimous approval of the members of the committee?

Mr. HOSTETLER. Of all the members present.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I was not present at the meeting of the committee when this measure was agreed on. I certainly have no sympathy with it.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I will say this——

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the reading of the bill for which this is a substitute.

Mr. WHITE. I ask that the first section of the substitute be again read.

The first section of the substitute was again read.

Mr. HAYES. I wish to put a question to the chairman of the committee. Did I understand him to say that this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Civil Service Reform?

Mr. HOSTETLER. I understand now there is one exception.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to say that there was no minority view.

Mr. HAYES. I wish it distinctly understood that I was the only republican member on the sub-committee of three which had this bill under consideration. I opposed it most emphatically in the sub-committee; but I was not present when the sub-committee reported to the full committee, as I was obliged to attend another committee that met at the same hour.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Where was the balance of the committee?

Mr. HAYES. I do not know. I should have been present had not another committee of which I am a member met at the same hour.

The SPEAKER. The original bill will be read for information.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall not be lawful for any person holding any office under the United States to contribute or pay to any committee or person, or into any fund, any money, property, or valuable thing for any political purpose whatsoever, or to pay any assessment or percentage upon the income or emoluments of his office for any political purpose, or to give, lend, advance, or pay any money, property, or valuable thing with the intent, or with the assent, permission, or understanding that the same may be applied to or for any political purpose whatsoever, or to himself apply the same to any political purpose. No head of a Department or other superior officer shall himself collect, or permit or allow any other person to collect or receive, from any officer in his department or under his supervision, or from any other officer whatsoever, any assessment, percentage, contribution, gift, loan, or advance of any money, property, or valuable thing with the intent, understanding, or permission that the same shall or may be used for any political purpose.

SEC. 2. No person having a contract with the United States, or any officer thereof, or who shall have had such a contract within three months previous, or who shall have such a contract within three months thereafter, or who shall have furnished within three months previous, or who shall, within three months thereafter, furnish any supplies, materials, work, or labor to or for the use of the United States, and no person having any pending claim against the United States, or before any Department or officer of the Government thereof, shall pay or contribute any money, property, or valuable thing for any political purposes.

SEC. 3. Any person who shall violate any provision of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, and, in the discretion of the court, by a fine of not exceeding $5,000. Any officer of the United States who shall violate any provision of this section shall, in addition to such imprisonment and fine, be deemed and taken to have vacated the office by him held.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendment.

Mr. HAYES. I wish to ask a question on the subject before this is put through. Who reported this substitute?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana reports it as chairman of the committee.

Mr. HOSTETLER. It was reported by the sub-committee to the committee who were duly notified to attend, and on the meeting of that committee the substitute was adopted instead of the original bill.

Mr. HAYES. I wish to state this fact to the House——

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CONGER. But, Mr. Speaker, there is a question whether this has been properly reported from the committee.

The SPEAKER. That is a question for the gentleman who reported the bill to decide, and not for the Chair.

Mr. HAYES. I wish to state, as the republican member of that sub-committee, that this substitute was never reported to me; that my attention was never called to the meeting of the sub-committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to state that he was notified to attend, but was not able to be present because he was on another committee.

Mr. HAYES. That was the full committee and not the meeting of the sub-committee. I claim this sub-committee has no right to meet and adopt a substitute of this kind without notifying every member of that sub-committee to be present. I was not notified at all, and I now ask this subject go over until the minority can have something to say about it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Indiana to deny general debate if it is desired.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Every member of the committee was notified to attend at that sitting and every other sitting of the committee. They were properly notified of the fact that this bill was pending, and when it came up with a substitute the substitute was adopted by the members who were present. A quorum of the committee was present, and the substitute received every vote save one, that of Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York.

Mr. HAYES. But here is the point, Mr. Speaker: I said that I was notified to attend the meeting of the full committee, but I was not notified to attend the meeting of the sub-committee to which this subject was referred and which reported it back with this substitute.

Mr. KENNA. The statement of the gentleman from Illinois in reference to the minority of the sub-committee can have no influence on the action of the House, because it was within the power of the majority of the committee to discharge the sub-committee from the further consideration of the subject, and to recommend that the substitute be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WHITE. I move that this be referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make such motion, if the previous question is not sustained.

Mr. HAYES. I wish to ask this question: whether the minority of a sub-committee of this kind has any rights the majority are bound to respect?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read from the Manual on that point, as the gentleman speaks as to the rights of a minority of a committee:

A minority of the committee cannot make a report, a minority not being the committee.—Journal, 1, 24, p. 562. [The common practice, however, is to permit the minority to submit their views in writing, which are usually printed and considered with the majority report.] And when such views are accompanied by a resolution or bill, such resolution or bill is not thereby brought before the House for its action, but must be submitted by some member.—Congressional Globe, 1, 31, p. 1345.

Mr. HAYES. Is it not fair and right that the minority of a sub-committee should be notified when that committee is to meet?

The SPEAKER. That is a matter of practice and courtesy in committees with which the Chair has nothing to do.

Mr. CONGER. It is not the usual practice, I believe.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I demand the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the bill be printed, so members may read it. I ask that the gentleman from Indiana consent to have the bill printed and to call it up at some other time.

Mr. KENNA. If the gentleman from Indiana should consent to this postponement for that purpose, would the gentleman from Michigan give the House any assurance that when that time was reached the question would be taken up and acted on without any filibustering on that side of the House?

The SPEAKER. What time does the gentleman from Michigan propose to call it up if its consideration should be postponed?

Mr. CONGER. Let it come up in the morning hour.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Say to-morrow after the morning hour and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. CONGER. Oh, no; I object to any special order. Let it go over in the morning hour, where it belongs.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I wish to ask whether this bill would prohibit the employés of the House and Senate making contributions for political purposes?

Mr. HOSTETLER. It does prohibit the employés of the Government of every department from contributing to any fund for the purpose of carrying elections.

Mr. CONGER. So the gentleman declines to have the bill printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has demanded the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. I wished to notify the gentleman that until this bill is printed we cannot have a quorum here to vote on it.

Mr. WHITE. I move the bill be laid on the table.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move the House adjourn. [Laughter.] I mean it.

Mr. HAYES. I want the privilege of offering some amendments to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The House has control of amendments, not the Chair.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear it.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is whether this bill is to affect the gentlemen who are elected to this House, requiring them to pay back the money used in their districts to elect them, or whether it operates only in the future.

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the inquiry in the way of a suggestion that gentlemen have no right to vote on a question in which they are directly interested.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I insist on my motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has entertained the gentleman's motion.

Mr. WHITE. I have moved to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain that motion in due course.

Mr. BREWER. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That motion is now pending. The gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOSTETLER,] the chairman of the committee, demands the previous question, pending which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] moves to lay the bill and substitute on the table; and thereupon the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HUMPHREY] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BREWER] both rise to move that the House adjourn. The question is first on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BREWER. Pending that motion, I move that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Saturday next.

Mr. KEIFER. Say Monday.

Mr. BREWER. Very well; I will say Monday next.

The question being taken on Mr. BREWER's motion, that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Monday next, there were—ayes 53, noes 83.

Mr. BREWER. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BREWER and Mr. CRAVENS were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 29, noes 92.

Mr. CONGER. A quorum has not voted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to have this bill referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and printed.

Mr. NEAL and Mr. CONGER objected.

The SPEAKER. Is the objection made to printing?

Mr. CONGER. I object to any reference of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand any objection to be made to printing the substitute.

Mr. CONGER. I object to this going on in the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The order to print the substitute does not affect the bill one way or the other, except that a few moments ago gentlemen on the left of the Chair expressed a desire to have the substitute printed.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose no business of that kind can be done in the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONGER. I object.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to the printing?

Mr. CONGER. No, sir. I object to business being done contrary to the rule. I demanded the printing of the substitute repeatedly.

The SPEAKER. That was the motion, that the substitute be printed.

Mr. CONGER. If that can be done I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated before that that does not affect the status of the bill, and can be done by consent.

Mr. CONGER. I do not object to that.

The SPEAKER. The objection being withdrawn the bill will be printed. The point of order was made that a quorum had not voted. Tellers were ordered, and no quorum has voted.

Mr. FRYE. I move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The only motions that are now in order are a motion to adjourn and a motion for a call of the House.

Mr. FRYE. And I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. STEPHENS. How long will it be before the morning hour expires?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour will expire in five minutes.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the House adjourn.

The question being taken on Mr. GARFIELD'S motion, there were—ayes 66, noes 75.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. STEPHENS. I suggest that the vote be taken by tellers.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were, ayes 33 more than one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. ACKLEN. Let the other side be counted.

The negative vote was counted, and there were noes 71.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEPHENS. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion to adjourn would proceed to decision, notwithstanding the expiration of morning hour.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 71, nays 114, not voting 101; as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ACKLEN. I believe the morning hour has expired.

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. DIBRELL. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. McGOWAN. I call up the special order, the bill (H. R. No. 1378) known as the pleuro-pneumonia bill. It is a continuing order from day to day. On that bill I have the floor and I ask to be recognized.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask the gentleman from Michigan to yield to me that I may report a bill from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. McGOWAN. I think but little time will be occupied with this bill. It can be very soon disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The motion to go to business on the Speaker's table has always been held to be as it were a priviledged motion, from the fact it can only be made at the end of the morning hour.

Mr. DIBRELL. I believe there is very little business on the Speaker's table, and it will occupy but a little time.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is in order under the rules at the expiration of the morning hour to move to go to business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. SPRINGER. And by a majority vote the House can go there.

Mr. CONGER. Does not a special order after the morning hour exclude that motion?

The SPEAKER. The House, at any rate, has the control. And the point can be reached in another way, by raising the question of consideration, which has already been done to the interruption of this special order on a former day.

Mr. McGOWAN. This bill will occupy but a short time; it can be finally disposed of under the direction of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. DIBRELL. But I cannot then make my motion to go to business on the Speaker's table. I therefore do not yield at present.

The SPEAKER. The remedy is with the House. If a majority of the House want to go on immediately with the bill to which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McGOWAN] refers, then they will vote down the motion to go to business on the Speaker's table, and that bill will then come up. But if the Chair should now entertain the motion to proceed with the unfinished business, then, if that is agreed to, the motion to go to business on the Speaker's table would hardly be in order again to-day. Rule 54 provides as follows:

> After one hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees and resolutions, it shall be in order, pending the consideration or discussion thereof, to entertain a motion that the House do now proceed to dispose of the business on the Speaker's table.

The Chair will direct the Clerk to read a decision under that rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

> The "hour" known as the "morning hour" is construed to begin from the announcement by the Speaker to the House that reports of committees are in order, and it is not necessary that resolutions shall have been called for. It is an invariable practice, too, to permit a member, upon the expiration of the morning hour, to take the floor, even though another may be occupying it, to make the motion to proceed to business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair entertains the motion to proceed to business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. McGOWAN. This bill having been fixed as a special order, and a continuing order from day to day——

The SPEAKER. It will come up after the business on the Speaker's table has been disposed of, if the House so directs.

Mr. McGOWAN. Should the bill be taken up now and be disposed of within an hour, could not the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DIBRELL] then submit his motion to go to business on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. The Manual states that the invariable practice, which the Chair is bound to recognize, is to entertain the motion to go to business on the Speaker's table at the expiration of the morning hour, "even though another (member) may be occupying the floor."

Mr. McGOWAN. Then I appeal to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DIBRELL] to withdraw his motion.

Mr. STEPHENS. Let us go to the Speaker's table; it will not take ten minutes probably.

Mr. McGOWAN. And will you then antagonize my motion?

Mr. STEPHENS. I will not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman immediately after the business on the Speaker's table has been disposed of.

The motion of Mr. DIBRELL was then agreed to.

POLYGAMY.

The first business on the Speaker's table was a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting certain petitions received by the Prasident in favor of legislation to make effective the anti-polygamy law of 1862; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PAY OF COMMITTEE CLERKS, ETC.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the joint resolution (H. R. No. 85) fixing the date on which the pay of committee clerks, pages, and laborers of the House of Representatives, who are paid during the session only, shall begin for this session, returned from the Senate with amendments.

Mr. HENRY. I am instructed by the Committee of Accounts to move that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in, and that a committee of conference be asked upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon this joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

TRANSIT OF VENUS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the following Senate concurrent resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

> Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That 250 additional copies of the Observations of the Transit of Venus, made under the direction of the Navy Department in December, 1874, be printed for the use of the Naval Observatory.

COLONIAL CHARTERS AND CONSTITUTIONS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the following Senate concurrent resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

> Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, directed to deliver to the Secretary of the Interior ten copies of the Colonial Charters and Constitutions of the United States from those remaining in his possession.

JOSEPH B. COLLINS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 595, to amend an act for the relief of Joseph B. Collins, approved March 3, 1879; which was taken up and read a first and second time.

The bill provides that the act for the relief of Joseph B. Collins, approved March 3, 1879, shall be amended so as to strike out all after the words "mustered out" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

> Provided, That he shall receive no pay or allowance whatever for the time he has been out of the military service.

Mr. DIBRELL. On the last day of the last session of Congress a bill was passed authorizing the President to restore Mr. Collins to the Army and place him on the retired list. In accordance with that act his nomination was sent to the Senate. It was ascertained that by an omission, or from some other cause, the act was in such form that if his nomination was confirmed it would give him about $20,000 pay for the time he was out of the Army. It was the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Military Affairs that no officer restored to the Army should receive pay for the time he was out of the service. I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. CONGER. I think this bill had better go to a committee.

The SPEAKER. The bill, as the Chair understands, proposes to save money, not to expend it.

Mr. CONGER. But it is claimed on information I have that the bill is an injustice to this officer. I think it ought to be considered by a committee.

Mr. WHITE. In behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, that reported the original bill, I will say that the intention never was to give this gentleman back pay. To do so would be an unfair discrimination against other officers who are restored. The object of this bill is to prevent this gentleman from being paid for time during which he rendered no service to the Government. It is right that he should be reinstated, but the intention was to exclude him from the reception of back pay. This exclusion is in the line of the precedents in almost all other cases. I appeal to the record to sustain my position. If this bill be not passed, an injustice will be done to the Government in enabling this officer to get a large amount of money to which he is not entitled by the deliberate judgment of the American Congress. I am in favor of the immediate passage of the bill.

Mr. DIBRELL. The bill ought to be passed at once. I demand the previous question on its passage.

Mr. CONGER. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SPARKS. The same subject-matter has already been before that committee.

Mr. CONGER. I have information which has been sent to me on this subject which I desire to lay before the House, though I have it not at hand to-day. There can be no harm to anybody in having the bill considered and reported upon by the appropriate committee.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. CONGER to refer the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs, it was not agreed to.

Mr. DIBRELL. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. That motion cannot be entertained until the House determines whether the previous question shall be ordered.

Mr. CONGER. I know nothing personally about the facts, but——

Mr. DIBRELL. I do. The gentleman ought not interfere when he does not know anything about the case.

Mr. CONGER. I have a letter stating that this bill will do great injustice to a gallant officer. If that be the object, then let the bill be pressed through.

Mr. DIBRELL. I will state that when this officer retired the Government paid him $3,500, which he accepted. He went to Wisconsin, engaged in milling, and failed. He now comes back and asks Congress not only to reinstate him, but to give him $20,000 for the time he was out of the service.

Mr. WHITE. This bill is right and ought to be passed.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DIBRELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL LORD, JR.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 62) for the delivery to Samuel Lord, jr., receiver, of certain bonds now in the Treasury of the United States; which was taken up, and read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to deliver up to Samuel Lord, jr., receiver of the president, directors, and company of the State Bank of Charleston, South Carolina, the following bonds, now in the Treasury of the United States, to wit: bonds numbered 812, 821, 836, and 837, each for the sum of $1,000, being coupon bonds issued by the State of South Carolina in aid of the Blue Ridge Railroad Company, and signed by R. F. W. Allston, governor, and T. G. Pickens, comptroller-general, under an act of the General Assembly of South Carolina, ratified on the 21st day of December, 1854, which were the property of the said the president, directors, and company of the State Bank, to be administered by the said Samuel Lord, jr., receiver, as he may be directed by the proper court in South Carolina, under which he holds his appointment of receiver as aforesaid. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the said receiver of said bank, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $479, collected of the coupons for interest on said bonds, and heretofore covered into the Treasury of the United States, to be administered by said receiver as hereinbefore provided.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CONGER. Is not this bill liable to a point of order?

Mr. DUNNELL. Has the bill been referred to any committee?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. EVINS] is recognized.

Mr. CONGER. But I make the point of order that the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EVINS. A bill similar to this was passed by the Senate in the last Congress. The reason I ask that this bill be put on its passage at once is that under the act of the Legislature of South Carolina the time for consolidating and funding these bonds expires next month. I hope there will be no objection to the consideration and the passage of the bill at the present time.

Mr. DUNNELL. Has the gentleman the report of the Senate committee?

Mr. EVINS. Yes, sir, I have it and will have it read. I have also a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury which I shall ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Senate Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1235) for the delivery to Samuel Lord, jr., receiver, of certain bonds now in the Treasury of the United States, having had the same under consideration, report as follows:

That the State of South Carolina, by virtue of a law passed in 1854, issued bonds to the amount of $1,000,000 in aid of the Blue Ridge Railroad; that, upon such issue being made, the president, directors, and company of the State Bank of Charleston, South Carolina, a corporation created under the laws of that State prior to the year 1854, purchased one hundred of such bonds, each being for $1,000, and indorsed and numbered from 801 to 900, (both inclusive.) The bonds, so purchased, continued the property of the bank, and in the possession of its officers, from the time of their purchase until 27th of February, 1865. On the day last named the bonds, with other papers and property of the bank, were in the custody of its cashier (Benjamin M. Lee) for safe-keeping, at a country house near Lynch's Creek, Kershaw District, South Carolina, and were then taken from him by a detachment of the forces of the United States under the command of General W. T. Sherman.

In April, 1866, D. Heaton, a special agent of the Treasury Department, transmitted from New Berne, North Carolina, to the Secretary of the Treasury, four of said bonds, numbered 812, 821, 836, and 837, stating that they had been turned over to him (Heaton) as captured property by the provost-marshal of New Berne, North Carolina.

The bonds are now in the Treasury Department; and the sum of $479, which has been collected of the coupons for interest on the bonds, has been covered into the Treasury of the United States.

In 1869, the said corporation being insolvent, a receiver of its property and effects was appointed, and Samuel Lord, jr., is now such receiver.

The committee is of the opinion that the receiver is entitled to such bonds, and to the amount collected for interest thereon and covered into the Treasury.

They therefore report to the Senate, with an amendment, the said bill, and recommend its passage.

Mr. EVINS. I ask now that the letter of Secretary of the Treasury Sherman and the letter of Ex-Secretary of the Treasury McCulloch be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 21, 1879.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 14th instant, inclosing a draught of a bill (S. No. 1235) "for the delivery to Samuel Lord, jr., receiver, of certain bonds now in the Treasury of the United States."

In answer to your request that I will inform you as to the propriety of the passage of the above bill, I send you herewith copy of letters from D. Heaton, late special agent in North Carolina, to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated April 18 and April 27, 1866, respectively, relative to certain bonds of the State of South Carolina received by the agent from a provost-marshal; also copy of a letter of the Secretary to the United States Treasurer, dated January 6, 1868, inclosing those bonds.

The records and files of this Department show that there was collected of the coupons due on the bonds and covered into the Treasury on the 13th of July, 1869, to the credit of the "captured and abandoned property fund" the sum of $479 for coupons due on January 1, 1868, July 1, 1868, January 1, 1869, and July 1, 1869. No other sums have been collected on coupons overdue, which, with the bonds, are in the custody of the Treasurer.

The bonds were never sold under the provisions of the captured and abandoned property acts of March 12, 1863, and July 2, 1864, and the sum collected for the coupons was received in the Treasury after the time had expired within which a suit might be instituted in the Court of Claims under the above acts for the return of the money.

As the Secretary of the Treasury has no power to restore the bonds or the avails of the coupons collected, any rights or equities of the original owner at the time of the seizure can be recognized and relief given by Congress only.

Respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

Hon. FRANCIS KERNAN,
United States Senate.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 6, 1868.

SIR: Inclosed herewith you will find four one-thousand-dollar bonds of the State of South Carolina, with coupons attached, payable to bearer, six of them past due, which were forwarded to me from North Carolina in April, 1866, by Supervising Special Agent David Heaton as captured property turned over to him by a provost-marshal.

You will please receive and hold them as a special deposit, collecting the coupons, if practicable, and reserving the bonds for further instructions.

I should be happy to receive at any time a report of any information you may collect concerning the salable character and market value of these bonds.

Respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

F. E. SPINNER,
Treasurer United States, Special Agent.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, I have here affidavits substantiating this claim of the officers of the State Bank of South Carolina. The State Bank of South Carolina is a different institution from the Bank of South Carolina, in which the State has no interest whatever. These bonds were all the private property of the bank. They were hypothecated for a debt to a bank in Liverpool, and the object of the receiver in recovering these bonds is to apply them to the debt for which they were hypothecated. I can see no real objection to the passage of the bill, and I hope no objection will be made.

The point of order my friend raised the other day, that the bill makes an appropriation, I suppose would carry it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union if the point be insisted on; but it seems to me these bonds never were the property of the Government of the United States, and therefore the bill is not liable to the point of order, but that it provides merely for the return to these parties of money which actually belongs to them.

Mr. CONGER. The remarks of the gentleman from South Carolina of course have been made subject to the reservation of the point of order, and I wish to make one or two inquiries subject to the same reservation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will so consider them.

Mr. CONGER. I expect to make the point of order unless I change my mind. I understand this property was seized as property belonging to the confederate government, the business being transacted through this bank. These bonds were hypothecated in Liverpool.

A MEMBER. No; by a bank in Liverpool.

Mr. CONGER. I understand that to have been one of the modes by which means were procured to purchase arms and equipments and other war material for the confederate government. It was one of the means of exchange. I may be mistaken, however, about that. This is the fact, that under the law this property could have been prosecuted for in the Court of Claims within sufficient time to have brought the suit and recovered it if it were not of a character which could not be recovered in that court. Now, at the end of many long years, without investigation, a bill is introduced here to pay out of the Treasury these bonds or to pay money out of the Treasury collected upon them.

Mr. EVINS. In answer to the gentleman, if he will allow me to interrupt him just here——

Mr. CONGER. I wish to say one word further, and then I will yield. I have so uniformly opposed the payment of war claims of this class that I should be untrue to myself if I did not try to ascertain whether this was a war claim, whether it was a claim to recover property once belonging to the confederate government and which now of right belongs to this Government. If it be so, that it does belong to this Government, having once belonged to the confederate government, we would do a great wrong in allowing the bill to pass without examination.

I reserve the right to make the point of order, and unless I am satisfied the confederate government has no claim of title to this directly or indirectly, I shall insist on that point of order.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, during the last session this same bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and I examined into it very closely and became satisfied that the confederate government had nothing in the world to do with it; that these bonds were taken from the agent of the bank, who was captured by some of the Federal troops, and turned over to the Federal Government. I cannot see any good reason why this bill should not be passed and these bonds restored to their proper owners. I had not time to make the report at the last session, or I would have done so.

Mr. EVINS. As the gentleman from Alabama has just stated, this bill passed the Senate during the Forty-fifth Congress, came here and was referred to the Judiciary Committee, of which the gentleman was a member, and after examination he was prepared to report it back to the House favorably but did not have an opportunity to do so. All the facts have been examined into very thoroughly by the committee of the Senate and by the gentleman from Alabama. Besides that, I have the affidavits of the officers of the bank setting forth the confederate government had nothing to do with this property, that it was private property of the State Bank of South Carolina, and if the gentleman desires to have those papers read, though they are voluminous, I will send them up to the Clerk's desk for that purpose. But I can assure the gentleman from Michigan that the confederate government had nothing whatever to do with these bonds, and if that be his sole ground of objection I hope he will withdraw the point of order and let the bill be put upon its passage.

Mr. CONGER. I was a member of the Judiciary Committee at the last session of Congress, and do not remember having been absent a moment from any session of that committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 506) to change the name of the steam-propeller Nuhpa to Metropolitan; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 30) for the relief of Dr. C. W. Brink, bearer of dispatches from the United States minister at Mexico in 1869.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 1841) to remove the political disabilities of James H. North, of Culpeper County, Virginia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 1989) relating to printing impressions from portraits and vignettes.

The message also announced that the Senate insisted on its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the fourth amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 1) to repeal certain clauses in the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1879, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia, Mr. WALLACE, and Mr. ALLISON the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate requested the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. No. 343) relating to printing impressions from portraits and vignettes.

SAMUEL LORD, JR.

The House resumed the consideration of Senate bill No. 62.

Mr. CONGER. I was about to say, Mr. Speaker, that if I understood the gentleman from Alabama, he stated this had been examined by the Judiciary Committee of the Forty-fifth Congress. I think he must be mistaken in so stating.

Mr. FORNEY. I will state to the gentleman that this was referred to Mr. Hartridge. On the decease of that gentleman it was referred to me. I examined the case but did not have time to report it back to the committee. I inquired of the Treasury Department to ascertain whether in their opinion it should pass, and they wrote to me the information which the gentleman from South Carolina has had read to the House. I made up my mind to report the bill favorably to the committee, but I did not make that report because I had not time.

Mr. CONGER rose.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman from Michigan allow me to make a statement?

Mr. CONGER. I think this bill should go to the Committee of the Whole. There are so many ways in which property of the ex-confederate government is sought back by individuals, that I must say I am suspicious of all those bills until they have undergone a very searching examination.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This is not property which belonged in any way to the confederate government; and it would be equivalent to spoliation if it should remain in the Treasury of the United States.

I was a referee appointed in 1867 by the court in Charleston to investigate the affairs of the State Bank of Charleston, then an insolvent corporation. I investigated this matter thoroughly and made a report of the facts. These bonds to the amount of $100,000, issued by the State of South Carolina and owned by the State Bank, a private corporation, were taken from the cashier by a detachment of the forces of the United States under the command of General Sherman. The State Bank, after the war, advertised to the whole world that the whole of these bonds were lost property. They have recovered a large portion of the $100,000 of bonds; these four bonds which have got into the Treasury of the United States being among those not recovered.

Now, I can assure the gentleman from Michigan that the State of South Carolina never had any claim to this property; nor did the Confederate States government have any such claim. These $100,000 of bonds were hypothecated by the State Bank to Mr. Molyneux, the British minister resident in Savannah, Georgia, as collateral security for an open letter of credit which the Royal Bank in Liverpool gave to the State Bank of Charleston authorizing it to draw on the Royal Bank of Liverpool for $100,000.

Mr. CONGER. Given for what purpose?

Mr. O'CONNOR. It was given prior to April, 1861, in the ordinary current business of the bank, which had been in existence as a corporation for thirty-five years.

Mr. CONGER. To be drawn against when?

Mr. O'CONNOR. It was an open credit.

Mr. CONGER. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Was not that the usual way in which funds from the confederate government got to England for supplies and for everything that could be bought and obtained there?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from South Carolina stated that this was before the war.

Mr. CONGER. He said it was in 1861.

Mr. SPRINGER. And the war began in 1861.

Mr. CONGER. So I have been told.

Mr. KEIFER. Was it after the passage of the ordinance of secession?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The State Bank of Charleston was the regular correspondent of the Royal Bank of Liverpool, and that bank was the regular financial organ of the State Bank for carrying on its business in Liverpool. I understand that some of the drafts which were drawn by the State Bank on the Royal Bank of Liverpool are held in Charleston to-day. They are held by private citizens. William S. Hasty, a resident of Charleston, did hold some of the protested drafts drawn by the State Bank on the Royal Bank of Liverpool. The fund derived from the credit on these bonds was not used in any way for the purpose of carrying on the war against the Government.

Mr. CONGER. There are a good many instances where through consuls of Her Britannic Majesty's government funds came to this country to aid the confederate government. And I do not know of any more natural way than this, and through such agencies, to transfer money between the banks in Britain and the confederate government. Now, this is a matter which can be proved to be clear and free from suspicion if such be the fact. But here is a man fleeing before our Army and fleeing with the confederates who were carrying off all their property. It was got just as the money-chest of the confederate government was got away up in the mountains, hiding in the mountains away up from our Army and our forces, as I understand it.

Mr. EVINS. Not in the mountains, by any means.

Mr. CONGER. If it was honest money belonging to citizens, why was the money then perambulating the forests and hills of South Carolina?

Mr. CLYMER. And the sand-banks.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, and the sand-banks.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CONGER. Perhaps the gentleman can tell why that was done.

Mr. SPRINGER. I can tell the gentleman one thing which he does not seem to understand, and that is that if this money went to Liverpool it to that extent depleted the confederacy; that they were drawn against in Liverpool, and got their price in Liverpool, and that weakened the confederacy to that extent.

Mr. WHITE. I understand the point of order is pressed.

Mr. EVINS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the point of order. My reason for pressing the bill now is, that these bonds under the law of South Carolina are required to be funded by the 1st day of July. They belong to a bankrupt corporation, and unless they get them now they will be of no avail. It is not necessary to overhaul all the affairs of the confederacy in order to ascertain what is right in this matter. I have told the gentleman over and over again that according to the papers I am satisfied on my honor as a member of this House, and I have been assured by others, that the confederacy had nothing whatever to do with these bonds; had no interest in them or in the bank. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. Does not the gentleman see how easily what he says can be shown in Committee of the Whole? It is a better place for it.

Mr. EVINS. I should have no objection if I could be assured that the bill would be considered in Committee of the Whole during this extra session.

Mr. CONGER. No court would permit the receiver to settle up such a matter as this while this question was pending before Congress, and there cannot be any loss by a little delay.

Mr. EVINS. The law requires the bonds to be refunded by the 1st day of July, or else the parties would be put to a great expense and loss, and the parties who are entitled to have the assets arising from the sale of these bonds will be deprived of the benefit of that sale. The receiver has no interest whatever in this money; he simply asks that it be put to his order, so that it may be placed to the credit of the bank.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist on the point of order?

Mr. CONGER. I think the bill had better go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that if he understands this bill correctly it proposes to take from the custody of the Treasury four bonds of $1,000 each, in all $4,000; and, in addition, proposes to take from the Treasury of the United States $479 that has been actually covered into the Treasury, the proceeds of coupons due. The fact that this money is in the Treasury of the United States, even though it does not belong properly to the United States, about which there is a dispute, the fact that it has been covered into the Treasury is not in dispute, and hence the necessity arises for an appropriation, and that fact brings the bill under the rule.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

RETURN OF A BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Senate:

JUNE 12, 1879.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. No. 343) relating to printing impressions from portraits and vignettes.

There being no objection, the request of the Senate was granted.

JURORS IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 375) in relation to juries, and to repeal sections 801, 820, and 821, and part of 800, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

That the per diem pay of each juror, grand or petit, in any court of the United States, shall be $2.50; and that the last clause of section 800 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which refers to the State of Pennsylvania, and sections 801, 820, and 821 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, are hereby repealed; and that all such jurors, grand and petit, including those summoned during the session of the court, shall be publicly drawn from a box containing the names of not less than three hundred persons, possessing the qualifications prescribed in section 800 of the Revised Statutes, which names shall have been placed therein by the clerk of such court and a commissioner, to be appointed by the judge thereof, which commissioner shall be a citizen residing in the district in which such court is held, and of good standing and a well-known member of the principal political party opposing that to which the clerk may belong, the clerk and said commissioner each to place one name in said box alternately until the whole number required shall be placed therein. But nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any judge in a district in which such is now the practice from ordering the names of jurors to be drawn from the boxes used by the State authorities in selecting jurors in the highest courts of the State. And no person shall serve as a petit juror more than one term in any one year, nor be compelled to serve as such juror more than two weeks at any term unless it be necessary in order to complete the trial of a cause in which he may have been impaneled; and all juries to serve in courts after the passage of this act shall be drawn in conformity herewith. All general and special laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. HERBERT. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. CONGER. Is that a House bill returned from the Senate?

The SPEAKER. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. CONGER. I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] states that he offers an amendment to the bill by the authority of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONGER. That does not preclude my motion.

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. CONGER. Then I move the reference of the bill.

Mr. HERBERT. I have the floor.

Mr. CONGER. I move to commit the bill.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not yield the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is on the floor, was recognized by the Chair, and refuses to yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to make the motion he indicates.

Mr. CONGER. And I move to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot take the floor from the gentleman from Alabama for that purpose.

Mr. CONGER. But I made my motion before the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] uttered a word.

The SPEAKER. Not before he was recognized by the Chair and presented the amendment.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter of fact which can be determined by reference to the record. [After a pause.] The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] rose and submitted his amendment on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary before the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] submitted his motion to refer.

Mr. HERBERT. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask that the amendment be read.

The Clerk read the amendment; which was to insert in line 22 of the bill, after the word "therein," the following:

In selecting said names the clerk and commissioner shall in no wise have regard to political affiliations, but shall look solely to the qualifications prescribed by law. Citizens possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law shall be competent to serve as grand or petit jurors without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude. But no officer or employé of the United States or of any State shall be competent to serve as such juror: Provided, That this act shall in no way impair the force and effect of section 4 of the act of March 1, 1875, entitled "An act to protect all citizens in their civil rights."

Mr. HERBERT. I now call the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. And I move to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not entertain the motion to refer pending a demand for the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. When will the motion be in order?

The SPEAKER. If the previous question shall be voted down, then the Chair will recognize the gentleman to submit his motion.

Mr. CONGER. Then I will make a motion which I can make. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HERBERT. I had not got through with my motion.

The SPEAKER. There can be no motion beyond the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HERBERT. I had the floor, and claim the right to be heard, and to finish my motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion did not need any finishing.

Mr. HERBERT. My motion is for the previous question, with the understanding that the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary shall have the right to offer an amendment to this amendment if they see proper. I demand the previous question with that understanding.

Mr. CONGER. And I move to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] must yield for an amendment before he calls for the previous question. Should the previous question be seconded, that will cut off any other amendment.

Mr. HERBERT. Well, I will call the previous question now on the bill and pending amendment.

The SPEAKER. And pending that demand for the previous question, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] moves to lay the bill and pending amendment on the table.

Mr. ROBINSON. As I see no other member present of the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary, if I might be allowed a word in regard to the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] that the minority have leave to move an amendment to this bill——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will listen to any parliamentary suggestion from the gentleman.

Mr. ELAM. There is a motion to lay the bill on the table, and that is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. ELAM. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. By consent the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ROBINSON,] as a member of the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary, asked to make a parliamentary statement.

Mr. COX. I hope unanimous consent will be given for that purpose. There was no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will take but a moment. The Committee on the Judiciary anticipated that there would be action on this bill in the House without its reference first to that committee, and it was understood that the minority of the committee, if they desired it, should have the privilege to offer an amendment at the time the bill should be called up for action. The House will remember, however, that it has already substantially acted upon the same proposition in connection with the judicial appropriation bill passed day before yesterday. I think, therefore, the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary do not at the present time desire to offer any amendment to this bill. The House having already passed upon these provisions in the judicial appropriation bill, the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary believe that they have passed their limit for action.

Mr. CONGER. I withdraw my motion to lay the bill on the table, and we will see whether there can be obtained a second for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon seconding the demand for the previous question upon the bill and pending amendments.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 79, no 1.

Mr. CONGER. No quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HERBERT and Mr. CONGER were appointed.

Mr. COX. What has become of the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call?

The SPEAKER. That is pending; but the motion to adjourn, even though there be no quorum present is in order.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 13, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

FONTAINE'S HYDRAULIC ENGINEERING.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 6) accepting from Professor Edward Fontaine, of Louisiana, certain maps, drawings, and explanations of the same, to report it with an amendment, and to recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It accepts the maps and drawings, with the explanations thereof, of Professor Edward Fontaine's improved methods of hydraulic engineering and controlling water-currents, which he proposes to give to the Government of the United States on condition that they be printed.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Printing with an amendment to add:

SEC. 2. That the regular number of these maps and drawings, with the explanations, be printed in quarto form; and that 100 additional copies be printed for the use of Professor Fontaine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PENDLETON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 691) for the relief of Jared Gardner; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SAUNDERS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 692) for the relief of Robert A. McMurray; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 693) for the relief of William Murry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 694) for the relief of J. W. Miller; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JONAS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 695) for the relief of Michael Granery, Nicholas Wax, and Moliere Lange; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

PRINTING OF MEMORIAL AND BILL.

On motion of Mr. JONAS, it was Ordered, That the memorial and bill for the relief of the State National Bank of New Orleans, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, be printed.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 2251) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN BALTIMORE.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask the consent of the Senate to take up House bill No. 1478, which was reported yesterday by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It makes a small appropriation of $4,000 simply for the purpose of inaugurating some proceedings in Maryland with a view to obtain an act for the condemnation of property for a post-office site at some future day. It appropriates no money for a building.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no objection to this bill being taken up; I think it ought to pass; but if it leads to debate I shall have to call up an appropriation bill; and I feel it my duty to so state now.

Mr. WHYTE. This bill will lead to no debate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Two of the appropriation bills are now before us. While I make no objection to this bill, yet it is my duty to state that if it leads to debate we must ask that the appropriation bills be taken up, as soon as the morning hour is over at the farthest.

Mr. MORRILL. I presume that this bill will not occupy five minutes of the time of the Senate. It is notorious, I presume, to nearly all Senators that complaint has long been made about the public buildings in Baltimore. While all other large cities, or nearly all, have been provided with public buildings suitable for the public business, Baltimore has been very long neglected. This proposition is recommended by the Treasury Department; it has been very thoroughly examined; it only proposes that the Secretary of the Treasury may make a contract that is hereafter to be approved by Congress or it amounts to nothing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1478) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate for the purchase at private sale, or, if necessary, procure by condemnation, a site for a post-office in the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 4, after the word "negotiate," to insert the words "and contract;" in line 5, before the word "purchase," to insert the word "conditional;" and in line 11, after the word "post-office," to insert "court-house, and other public offices;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to negotiate and contract for the conditional purchase, at private sale, or, if necessary, procure by condemnation, in pursuance of the statutes of the State of Maryland now in force, or any statute of said State which may hereafter be passed by its Legislature for that purpose, a suitable piece of ground or site in the city of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland, for the erection of a building to be used for a post-office, court-house, and other public offices, the cost of the same not to exceed the sum of $500,000: and the sum of $4,000 is hereby appropriated, or so much as may be necessary therefor, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the costs and expenses of condemnation of said ground or site, if proceedings of condemnation are, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, required to procure the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 21, after the word "site," to insert the words "until the purchase and contract for the same shall have been approved by Congress, nor;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no money except the sum hereinbefore appropriated for expenses of condemnation be expended for purchase of said site until the purchase and contract for the same shall have been approved by Congress, nor until a valid title to such ground or site is vested in the United States, and the State of Maryland shall have released and relinquished jurisdiction over the same, and exempted from taxation such site and such buildings as may hereafter be erected thereon, so long as the same are the property of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

DUPLICATE DRAFT.

Mr. MAXEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 625) for the relief of the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank, Paris, Texas. I will state that it will take no time whatever. It is simply designed to authorize the proper authority to issue a duplicate of a draft issued by the pension agent at Knoxville, Tennessee, on the assistant treasurer at New York and lost in the mail. It requires special legislation to issue a duplicate. The bill comes from the Committee on Claims, having been reported unanimously from that committee by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL,] its chairman.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the amount of the draft?

Mr. MAXEY. Eleven hundred and odd dollars.

Mr. COCKRELL. Eleven hundred and fifty-nine dollars and sixty cents.

Mr. MAXEY. When the amount lost is over a thousand dollars the law does not allow a duplicate to be issued unless by special act of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas, to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MAXEY. In line 12, I move to insert "A" after "Minerva," so as to read "Minerva A. Davis." That is the name of the lady who was the payee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection that amendment will be made, being merely verbal.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WITHERS. I move to take from the table the bill (H. R. No. 2175) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, for a second reading and reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia, to proceed to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill, so that it may have its second reading and be referred.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be considered as read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SUPPLEMENTAL POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. MAXEY. If there be nothing now before the Senate, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2263) supplemental to "An act to establish post-routes." It is very short, and will take no time.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with amendments.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask that the amendments of the committee be considered together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question on agreeing to the amendments will be taken as one question, if there be no objection. The amendments will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment is, after line 8, to insert:

ARKANSAS.

From El Dorado to Calhoun.

The next amendment is, in line 19, to strike out "Walkins" and insert "Watkins."

The next amendment is, after line 22, to insert:

MINNESOTA.

From Willmar, via Fahlen, to Lake Lillian.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to these amendments reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY. I move as an additional amendment, after line 32, to insert:

Uvalde to Follett to Montell to Camp Wood and thence to Bull Head.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. At line 27, under the head of "Missouri," I move to insert:

From Brush College, Missouri, to Fort Scott, Kansas.
From Billings to Laurenceburg.
From Pierce City to Flat Creek.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY. There are some other amendments which were acted on by the committee but are not printed, which I send up and desire to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The further amendments of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

After line 16 insert:

IDAHO.

From Oneida to Oxford.
From Swan Lake Station to Oxford.
From Franklin to Weston.
From Weston to Oxford.
From Rock Creek to Reynold's Creek.

After line 22 insert:

LOUISIANA.

From Wildwood to Lamarque Store.
From Columbia, via Davis, Funny Louis, Jena, and Rhinehart's Ferry, to Troy.
From Floyd, via Bastrop, Ouachita City, Downsville, to Vienna.

After line 30 insert:

SOUTH CAROLINA.

From Brighton, via Greenfield, to Lawtonville.
From Manning Court House, via Jordan, Wright's Bluff, Panola, Fulton, and Packsville, back to Manning Court House.
From Manning Court House, via Oakland, to Sumpter.
From Manning Court House, via Midway, New Zion, Bethlehem, and Sardina, back to Manning Court House.

After line 32 insert:

From Weatherford, via Millsap and Cokelan, to Graham.

After line 16 insert:

ILLINOIS.

From Fayetteville to Mascoutah.
From Venice to Six Mile.
From Girard to Morrisonville.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to these amendments, recommended by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, returned, in compliance with the request of the Senate, the bill (S. No. 343) relating to printing impressions from portraits and vignettes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 595) to amend an act for the relief of Joseph B. Collins, approved March 3, 1879.

The message further announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 85) fixing the date on which the pay of the committee clerks, pages, and laborers of the House of Representatives who are paid during the session only shall begin for this session; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. D. M. HENRY of Maryland, Mr. E. L. MARTIN of Delaware, and Mr. A. HERR SMITH of Pennsylvania, managers on the part of the House.

PAY OF CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYÉS.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 85) fixing the date on which the pay of the committee clerks, pages, and laborers of the House of Representatives who are paid during the session only shall begin for this session, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

On motion of Mr. WALLACE, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said joint resolution disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. WALLACE, Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia, and Mr. BLAINE.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE OF A BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I ask that the bill (H. R. No. 2264) to amend section 1, page 234, volume 20, of the United States Statutes at Large, Forty-fifth Congress, which was read twice yesterday and referred to the Committee on Commerce, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, it being a matter relating to an appropriation bill. I think there is no objection to that change.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The change of reference will be made if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BECK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2251) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it the wish of the Senator from Kentucky that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations shall be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill?

Mr. BECK. I hardly know what to ask on that subject. I expect the bill had better be read so as to give time to consider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the suggestion that it had better be read through before the amendments are acted on?

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky before he begins whether or not it is his purpose to offer a substitute which I find on my desk and marked an "amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. BECK?"

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill sent to us from the House with the amendments added by the Committee on Appropriations; but I am not authorized by the committee to offer the amendment which I propose to offer as a substitute for it. I desire to say before the bill is read, if the Senate will allow me, that the Committee on Appropriations of the House, instead of pursuing the usual form of presenting a detailed bill, thought it best to send House bill No. 2251, which makes this provision as its principal operative clause:

That for the purpose of providing for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same sums of money and for the like purposes (and continuing the same provisions relating thereto) as were appropriated for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1878, (except as hereinafter declared,) subject to all the limitations and conditions in respect to the disbursement of the appropriations hereby made that were imposed by said act and the other laws of the United States upon or in respect to the appropriations made by said act.

Then follow first a number of exceptions, from line 20 to line 46; then from line 47 to line 57 are provisions affirmatively changing the act of June 19, 1878, saying that no more than the sums stated respectively are appropriated; and from line 58 down to the close of section 1, on line 121, are amendments to that act.

Section 2 provides for the salary of certain offices created by acts of 1879, and for matters provided for in other acts, and for the mints and assay offices, and "the following additional sums are hereby appropriated;" then follows a list of them running through each of the Departments, with two other sections at the end making general provisions.

Therefore, Mr. President, as I was directed to take charge of this bill and present it to the Senate, I desire to say to Senators first that before they can understand the bill intelligently they will have to obtain the act approved June 19, 1878, being public act No. 135 of the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress, which I suppose can be obtained in the document-room; at least I obtained a few copies there. As that is the act which the House has re-enacted in substance, without that act no Senator can very well know what he is doing or what he is voting for in the House bill now before us.

I have endeavored in the amendment I offered to present the bill of the current year as now amended in a form to be easily understood. Therefore it was that I thought the House bill as amended by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate ought to be read at length, with my amendment in the hands of Senators, as it differs in its form so essentially from the bills ordinarily presented. In that way each Senator may see, as he goes along with the first reading of it, what changes have been made, what documents he will have to refer to; and, above all, he will see the importance of obtaining and considering carefully the act which I hold in my hand for the current year. It is proper to say that the House have only re-enacted the provisions of this law so far as appropriations are concerned.

There are some provisions in the law for the current year that do not pertain to appropriations, that are general legislation, as, for instance, the reorganization of the government of the Territories, changing the time of meeting of the territorial Legislatures. Then there are other provisions of the law stating what power the Secretaries and others should have over the funds appropriated, which I suppose perhaps apply to the provisions of the law for the next fiscal year.

Quite a number of difficult questions occurred to me as being presented by the bill. I desire that the Senate understand it all and hope Senators will attend to its reading carefully. With that view and with the view of understanding what the bill meant myself, I took the pains (and I assure you it was a great deal of trouble) to go over the whole of the appropriation bill for the current fiscal year, clause by clause, and to go over and examine carefully the amendments that the House had added to it, striking out, amending, and inserting, as was done here and there, also all those that the Senate committee had added, and to embody it all as an amendment in the form of a bill such as had been usually presented to the House and Senate. The result is the amendment printed and now on the desks of Senators. I think that whatever confusion may appear in the bill of the House as amended by the committee, which I am now required to present, I can dissipate by referring to the amendment prepared by me which I hold in my hand. I can by that, I think, tell with perfect accuracy what each provision means. I did not alter anything in this amendment; I took the act of June 19, 1878, took the amendments of the House and the amendments of this committee, leaving out what was general legislation in that bill for 1879 and inserting whatever seemed to bear on the use to which any appropriation might be applied; so that the amendment prepared by me, if it has no other merit or effect, will at least enable Senators to know what this bill means and will enable me to explain what the provisions of it mean.

Mr. WINDOM. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky whether the bill which he has drafted is the bill of the House put in a different form only?

Mr. BECK. It is the bill of the House with the Senate committee's amendments, put in a different form and put in the usual form of appropriations.

Mr. WINDOM. What I meant to ask—I was not present in committee—was whether there is anything different in the Senator's amendment from the bill of the House except a difference in form?

Mr. BECK. Nothing at all; or if there is it is a mistake.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not understand the bill as it came from the House; I think it would require a corps of clerks to get at its meaning.

Mr. BECK. The clerk of the committee and myself for several days have been at work seeking to make it precisely what the House passed with our committee amendments. If the Senator from Minnesota will listen to me for a minute—a great many changes had to be made growing out of this fact: in the last section of the bill of the House as now sent to us this provision is made:

That the pay of assistant messengers, firemen, watchmen, and laborers provided for in this act, unless otherwise specially stated in particular cases in the act of June 19, 1878, which it continues and makes available, (except as declared in the first section of this act,) shall be as follows: For assistant messengers, firemen, and watchmen, $720 per annum each; for laborers, $660 per annum each; and a sufficient amount to meet the provisions of this section is hereby appropriated.

In the bill for the current fiscal year the pay of all watchmen is $660. The House has increased the pay of all watchmen to $720. Therefore in each Department of the Government wherever there was a watchman the act of 1878 providing for the present fiscal year had to be so far changed in every footing as to make the $660 to watchmen the amount now proposed, to wit, $720. Thus the footings all vary to that extent wherever there is a watchman. The alteration was caused by the section of the bill I have just read.

There is no change intended by the amendment I prepared except in the form of legislation. As I said, the work was so great and the amount of accuracy required was such that I am not prepared to say that there may not be some mistake somewhere. There is in the last section of my amendment—section 3—a mistake by incorporating bodily a section from the House bill, part of which I ought to have stricken out, after the word "cases," in line 3, down to the word "act," in line 6; so that the section would read:

That the pay of assistant messengers, firemen, watchmen, and laborers provided for in this act, unless otherwise specially stated in particular cases, shall be as follows.

Leaving out all reference to the former act which in this amendment I do not propose to re-enact or incorporate. That is a slight error of the clerk, who failed to strike out the reference to that act. I will correct that, of course.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator from Kentucky be good enough to state the committee's reason for changing the pay of watchmen, changing them all in the same measure from the bill of last year?

Mr. BECK. I think that with the exception of the current fiscal year the watchmen have always had $720.

Mr. CONKLING. It is the restoration of the old pay?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir. They were reduced for the current year, and we put them back to the old rate, many of the watchmen having very arduous duties and especially those who serve at night, and it was believed by the committee of the House, and the Senate committee concurred, that $720 was not too much.

This is all that I care to say except perhaps this: the Senate committee have made very few changes in the bill as it came from the House as far as adding items are concerned, and as they are very few I will explain to the Senate what they are.

On a very urgent letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, as we had cut down the clerks in the Treasurer's office with his consent some twenty or thereabout, we agreed to increase five clerks in the Secretary's office which the House had failed to do; it was also done in the vetoed bill, if I may designate it in that form. We added five clerks there, and we added one clerk in the Comptroller's office. We added some clerks in the Land Office. The pressure from the Land Office was very great and the facts were made very apparent that we ought to give them additional help there.

We inserted "for works of art, $5,000," which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] moved as a part of the last bill, and which I believe the Senate with great unanimity passed. We gave the Treasurer a few clerks in his office proper out of those taken from another division. We have added $1,500 for the depositary at Tucson, to his pay as postmaster. We have given a stenographer to the Secretary's office of the Department of the Interior, and we have added a good deal of force upon very urgent letters from the Secretary of the Interior, which I will read when the proper time comes, to the Patent Office. The Secretary sent letters to several Senators, which many gentlemen may have seen, saying that it was impossible, unless he had more help, properly to carry on that department. So, too, in the Solicitor's office in that department, and elsewhere. But I will not go into detail.

The total that we added is $68,000, and we have reduced the House bill in the contingent expenses of the Patent Office $15,000, making it the same as in the vetoed bill; the Official Gazette, $8,000; and for the contingent expenses of the Adjutant-General's Office, $1,000, making a reduction of $24,000. There is a net addition, therefore, of $44,000. The reason why those three last amendments were made was because in copying the bill of last year the House had failed to strike them down to what the Departments themselves seemed to want for the coming year.

Mr. WINDOM. Having been absent from the city by order of the Senate, or at least by appointment of the Vice-President requiring my presence elsewhere, I was not present at the deliberations of the committee on this bill, and I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky why it is that the bill which was agreed upon by both Houses at the present session is not reported. It seems to me it would very much have facilitated the business of the session, both Houses having carefully considered that bill, and having agreed to it in all its details except as to the political features. It appears to me the Senate would much more readily understand it if it had been reported in that form; and the House having agreed to it in that form almost unanimously, I do not understand why it has not been so reported. I like the other bill, I must confess, much better than this so far as I know.

Mr. BECK. I can only say that I very much regret that it was not so reported. I agree with the Senator from Minnesota that it would keep up the uniformity of our appropriation bills better; that our efforts for the last twelve or fifteen years, as I know, have been (and I suppose they were even before that) to simplify appropriations and to keep them in regular form, so as to be referred to year by year, and year after year we go more in detail, so that the appropriations should be kept within and confined to the particular bureaus and purposes for which they are made, so that accountability can be had and maintained. But the bill now sent by the House, while not put in that form, when you come to examine the act of the current year, which is in that form, and its amendments, is susceptible of being so carried out in detail, and I suppose it will be construed to mean that it is carrying out exactly the system we have been carrying out heretofore. I will not defend the form of the present bill, but after careful investigation I am prepared to defend and maintain the substance of it.

I am not advised as to why the House preferred this form except that it has been said to me that they believed they could pass it much more rapidly than in the ordinary mode. They seemed anxious to avoid delay. A quorum of the House was difficult to be held, and the bill was passed with great unanimity by the House under a suspension of the rules, I believe without much consideration, very few voting against it on either side of the Chamber. I believe the reason why the Senate committee deemed it best to adhere to the present form was that the House had passed it with so much unanimity; and there being some anxiety among Senators to get away, and the House having sent a resolution for adjournment at a very early day, it was thought—and I believe that was the objection to the amendment I offered—that if we went into all the usual questions in detail again perhaps it would consume more time than Senators were willing to devote to it. If it is likely to do so I am willing to let my amendment go if the Senate can see their way clear to pass the bill in its present form, which, I must repeat, I do not approve.

Mr. WINDOM. I am not asking questions to embarrass the Senator, but to get facts for myself. Perhaps I may have misunderstood him. Which bill is it that the Senator proposes to put on its passage, the House bill as amended, or the substitute?

Mr. BECK. The House bill as amended by the committee. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to insist on the consideration of that bill and put it on its passage. The Senator knows that I obey orders when I cannot have my own way. I am not authorized to offer the amendment that I prepared and had referred to the committee, and therefore I shall be obliged to vote with my committee for the bill in the form in which it is presented. I prefer my own amendment, however, but cannot sustain it against the orders of my committee.

Mr. WINDOM. I would prefer to agree with the committee if I could; but I cannot vote for the bill in the form in which the committee has reported it. It seems to me unquestionably clear that, as he says, in order to understand it, we shall have to have another bill before us all the time.

Mr. BECK. That is true.

Mr. WINDOM. And when passed no one can understand it without reading one or two House bills passed in former years. Even that will be an impossibility, the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] suggests.

It does seem to me that both Houses having agreed upon every item in detail in that bill at the present session, composed of the same members in both Houses of Congress, that is the short way of getting out of this difficulty. That bill was considered very carefully when it was in committee; it was considered very carefully in the Senate; it went to the House amended, and the House, I believe, unanimously agreed to all the Senate amendments. So, then, at the present session, leaving out the political features of the bill, both Houses have agreed upon every item of detail for the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriations, and it does seem to me that it is a mere formal matter to pass it if we could take it up and act upon it, as we have already considered it, and in the form in which we have considered it. I certainly dislike extremely the bill as reported from the committee.

Mr. BECK. Perhaps it would be proper for me to say a word in order that the Senator from Minnesota, who knows all about these things, having been chairman so long himself and now an active member of the committee, may understand our position. There are some important things in the House bill which were not in the vetoed bill—I will call it that to be understood—for instance, in the Internal-Revenue department, this:

To meet a deficiency in the appropriation for salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors' fees and expenses of gaugers, salaries of storekeepers, and miscellaneous expenses, being for the present fiscal year, $150,000.

The department made us understand very clearly that from the very large number of distilleries that were compelled to start, this money must necessarily be expended.

Their is another matter of some difficulty, I understand, in the House, if I have a right to speak of it. The Senate will remember that in the bill passed before they increased the salaries of six or eight officers, I thought properly. Quite a number of others thought they ought to be increased, and a complaint was made that if we increased any we should increase others equally meritorious. We declined to do that, limiting ourselves to a very few of the most urgent, and perhaps, the most meritorious cases; among others, I remember Mr. Kimmo, the chief of the Bureau of Statistics, his pay was increased. I remember that we refused to increase the salary of an Assistant Attorney-General, who seemed equally as deserving, to that of the other Assistant Attorneys-General, when they were getting a thousand dollars more than he. In order to get over that difficulty, the House failed to consider anything in regard to an increase of salaries at all, but left them all out for further consideration at the next session of Congress; and they got clear of quite a serious difficulty by not interfering at all with salaries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) The morning hour has expired. Is there objection to continuing the consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINDOM. At that point I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is the bill (S. No. 594) for the relief of Thomas Langton, of Dundee, Michigan. Is there objection to continuing with the legislative bill?

Mr. GARLAND. That bill, on my motion, was made the unfinished business for to-day. I will not obstruct this appropriation bill, but give notice that I will call up the unfinished business after this bill is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will so follow, of course. There being no objection, the appropriation bill is under consideration.

Mr. WINDOM. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question. There seems to be several changes, as now suggested by him, between the bill reported and the vetoed bill, to put the shortest mode of describing it. Would it not be much easier to take the vetoed bill, on which we all agreed, and make it the basis of action, and then make the changes that are required from that? It seems to me, taking that as the basis, we get rid of all the details of the bill, and there would not be more than half a dozen or a dozen distinct amendments to be acted on, which everybody could understand. But if you take the bill as reported by the committee nobody will know when the bill passes the Senate—unless the members of the committee who were present when it was considered—what it does mean, or what changes are made. I think it would be very much better to take the bill on which we agreed, and then make the changes, omitting, if you choose, the increase of salaries, and making the other change in reference to the internal revenue. Then we can discuss these separate questions, and act upon them as we like. It seems to me this is the most roundabout and difficult way we can possibly get at the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BECK. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that my instructions are to present the bill as passed by the House with the amendments of the committee. I suppose the Senate will determine for itself. I think it can be explained so as to show that it is a bill that provides almost identically with the provisions of the vetoed bill, except as to salaries and the addition of the deficiency for the Internal Revenue department and some improvements made in regard to the Pension Office; for we have allowed in the Pension Office quite an additional force over what the vetoed bill gave it, because of the very urgent reports of the Commissioner of Pensions growing out of the very large number of applications. I think we have improved the service in the Patent Office somewhat, and I think we have in the Land Office somewhat; in the Pension Office very largely.

Mr. WINDOM. It always furnishes a great deal of information to the Committee on Appropriations to be able to compare the bill of the last year with the bill we are considering, and I think that the forms we have adopted are, for that reason, very much better than any new forms we shall be likely to agree upon in the hurried moments of this session. Now, for the purpose of restoring this bill to the form in which such measures have been placed, without materially changing the result, I wish to test the sense of the Senate by a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, for the purpose of enabling that committee to report a bill in the usual form, so that somebody can understand what is meant by it. I confess I cannot, and I do not think the Senate will understand this bill when it gets through. I do this without consultation with anybody, solely on my own motion.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not see any great good to grow out of either the recommitment of this bill or the adoption of the substitue which has been indicated by the Senator from Kentucky. I do not understand that there is any complication in it, although I have not had an opportunity of examining it yet. The present bill was reported by the House committee and passed by the House, and is here. It makes the usual appropriations, making such amendments as the House saw fit to put upon the bill which has been spoken of as the vetoed bill. There are one or two additions which the House thought it essential to make. There cannot be any complication if you adopt the House bill, because it is framed on the existing law, is a re-enactment of the existing appropriations with very slight modifications as I understand. If you adopt the proposition spoken of as a substitute, you will have the whole appropriation bill referred to a conference committee, and then the Senate will never know what is put into it and what is put out of it.

We are here at a time when we ought to have adjourned; and why not take the bill of the House with the modifications this committee have proposed to it? Why not take that bill and those amendments and agree to them, and let it go back to the House and see if the House will not concur in the amendments? Why shall we pursue a course that will complicate, or tend seriously to complicate, the whole of the appropriations in this legislative, executive, and judicial bill? I think it is wrong, because, if you adopt the substitute, or if you return the bill to the committee and the committee adopt the substitute substantially, it will have to go to the House practically as a new bill, and the entire investigation and examination will have to be made again by the House committee and the House, and the result will be a delay of action on the part of the two Houses for several days.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the Senator from Alabama a question. There is a provision made for the mint at New Orleans, Louisiana, in the bill of June 19, 1878, re-enacted by the present bill. I would be obliged to him if he would take the House bill and tell me what appropriation is made for the mint at New Orleans, Louisiana?

Mr. HOUSTON. I stated in the first portion of my remarks that I had not had time to examine it. The bill and amendments have been just laid on the table; but I have too much confidence in the integrity and intelligence of the House and of the House committee to suppose they would make a stupid or confused recommendation of an appropriation bill; and, in my judgment, it is not doing that committee and the House the most ample justice when we make implied allegations of their stupidity in preparing an appropriation bill.

I have not had time to compare the bills; but I understand that the bill which the House proposes is substantially a re-enactment, with some slight modifications, of the existing appropriation law upon these very points. We understand what it is; the Departments all do; the various bureaus and officers understand it; all those who have to execute the present law certainly understand it, because they are living under it to-day. Then, where is the confusion to grow out of it? Out of what will it grow? There cannot be any confusion at all.

This bill from the House, as I understand, curtails the expenses upon some points, cuts down some appropriations; and do gentlemen propose that we shall go into a critical and minute investigation and examination? Then we shall want a little more time than seems now to be in the minds of Senators as available at this session. My own judgment is that we take up the bill from the House with the amendments of our committee here, and see if they suit us; and if so, adopt them, and pass the bill.

Mr. BECK. I do not intend that the Senator from Alabama shall intimate on this floor that I am attacking the intelligence of the committee of the House or the action of that body, by offering or preparing an amendment for the use of the Senate which sets forth the meaning of the bill clearly and distinctly. I do no such thing.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Senator will allow me to say that I could draw no other inference from what he said, because he will remember that he said if I were to turn to the appropriations for a certain mint he would like me to tell him what the sum appropriated was. That, if true, is a reflection upon the character and integrity of the proposition, or it is an implied reflection on the action of the House or of the House committee, for if the bill is in such confusion that the Senator from Kentucky and I cannot understand it, the House must have been exceedingly stupid.

Mr. BECK. To begin with, the House passed the bill under a suspension of the rules, and never looked at it. So much for the House. The Senate committee took the bill of last year, and they amended this bill, and it is only wonderful that they amended it as well as they have, considering the way in which they tried to amend it; and therefore it is in no spirit of reflection upon the House that I prepared an amendment which I think sets forth clearly and distinctly what the bill means, and it was in no spirit of criticism, except of fair criticism, when I asked the Senator from Alabama if he could tell what was appropriated by the bill sent from the House for the New Orleans mint. The Senate have a right to know every item, and to have it in a shape that they can know it; and it is not good legislation for us to send a number of questions of construction to the comptrollers and auditors of the Government or to bureau officers, who the Senator says all understand the bill. They are not legislators; they merely execute laws, and they put constructions upon them if they have any opportunity to do it, sometimes not very much in the interest of economy. If we expect to keep them under our control, which is the object of Congress, we should make our appropriations so plain that they cannot misunderstand them.

While I may not have prepared an amendment that suits the Senator from Alabama, and while it may have been a very useless job as far as he is concerned, I desire to say that I prepared it with a view of simplifying this bill, to enable Senators to understand just what it meant, and now I will tell the Senator that I asked him the question if he could turn to the House bill and state what the amount was that was given by the bill for the mint at New Orleans. If Senators will pay attention, they will see from the brief statement I shall make——

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to say one word.

Mr. BECK. I decline to yield until I shall conclude. When I have concluded my statement on this point, I will yield to any one. But I asked the question, and the Senator seemed to think it was a very remarkable one. Now I wish to show why I asked it. There is an appropriation for the current fiscal year of $57,000 "for wages of workmen and adjusters;" then there is an appropriation in the bill for the current fiscal year "for repairs and machinery" of $75,000.

Now, the House bill re-enacts all the provisions of the act approved June 19, 1878, for the service of the current fiscal year. That re-enactment of course continues in force the provision of $57,000 on page 17 of the bill "for wages of workmen and adjusters" and of $75,000 "for repairs and machinery." The second section of this bill as it comes from the House and as reported by the Senate committee provides:

> For salaries of certain offices created by acts of 1879, and for certain expenses rendered necessary by the removal of the offices of the War Department and of the Navy Department, and for matters heretofore provided for in other acts, and for the mints and assay offices, and for other purposes, the following additional sums are hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

And among the "additional sums" thus appropriated, on page 10, lines 101 to 103, is:

> Mint at New Orleans, Louisiana: For wages of workmen and adjusters, $18,000; for repairs and machinery, $5,000.

That, standing alone, would make the wages of workmen and adjusters $75,000. That is right; we meant to make it that. It would make for repairs and machinery $75,000 and $5,000, $80,000, for these are additional sums appropriated for that purpose. Page 1, page 6, and page 10 of the bill develop these facts. Now you have to go back to page 2, at the bottom, and there among the things stricken out and excepted from the bill of the current fiscal year is this item:

> For repairs and machinery at the mint at New Orleans, Louisiana.

So that all repairs were stricken out. The $5,000 on page 10 is given as additional when all had been stricken out and there was nothing to add to; so that you have to look to page 1, to page 2, to page 6, and to page 10 of this bill and then look at the old act before you can fairly find out what is meant. It is true it is all right when done, and when once understood there is no difficulty about it, and that is the reason I said that the amendment I prepared merely simplified the bill and put in a single line almost, as is done here, in regard to the mint at New Orleans:

> For wages of workmen and adjusters, $75,000.
> For repairs and machinery, $5,000.

That is what the House did; but they had to do it, by the very form of the bill, in such a variety of ways as to make it extremely difficult to find out; and it requires very careful examination to find out in that and several other instances what is the exact state of the fact.

If the Senator from Alabama desires to ask further questions, I am ready to answer.

Mr. HOUSTON. My purpose was not to propound another question to the Senator; but he referred on two or three occasions in his remarks to the fact that I had characterized his amendment as a reflection on the House. I did no such thing as that, and I cannot imagine why the Senator should have supposed I so stated. I spoke of his amendment and said I thought we had better not agree to it, but take the House bill with the committee's amendments.

The gentleman has already referred to what I thought was rather a reflection upon the House committee, and it was his remark in reference to the mint at New Orleans. I have not had an opportunity to examine this bill with care, but I understand from the Senator himself that there is no sort of difficulty in saying—he said so himself—that the appropriations in the bill are all right and proper; but there is some trouble in getting at them, he thinks, because you have to refer to one bill and then to another. That is a very unimportant view of the case, I think.

The great point with us is to make the proper appropriations, to guard them properly, to see that there shall be no appropriation not intended to be put in the bill, and not take them by wholesale. I propose to take the bill of the House that the committee have examined and agreed upon. Certainly I never said that these laws would have to be construed alone by executive officers of the Government. They are not legislators, as the Senator said. Nobody else has said they were. They have acted under these appropriations, as I understand, precisely as they are in the House bill. That is what I said before, and I understood from the Senator that they executed the law under these appropriations, and so acting now they understand them and can so act for the ensuing fiscal year. That was all I said. I made no reflection upon the amendment the Senator had prepared. I only preferred the House bill; so expressed myself; and Mr. President, with all respect to the Senator from Kentucky and his committee, I repeat my expression that instead of leaving these various and multiplied appropriations to be settled and adjusted and arranged by a conference committee, about which I know a good deal, I prefer that the Senate shall arrange them. I prefer, therefore, that we shall vote upon the committee's amendments to the House bill and let it go in that way.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say a word or two on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota, and in the beginning I will say that I quite agree with the Senator from Alabama in one thing, and that is that we should take such methods in the adjustment of this bill as will secure its speedy consideration, and it is for that reason that I support the motion of the Senator from Minnesota to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

When this House bill came to the Committee on Appropriations, as the Senators on the committee well know, it was exceedingly difficult for us to get at the true meaning of the bill; and we decided—if I may state what occurred in the committee about the original bill—that it ought to be put in a different form, and it was so amended by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.] I speak only for myself when I say that it then seemed almost impossible to ascertain what the character of these appropriations was and in what respect they differed from the bills we had passed heretofore; and therefore it was that I suggested, or rather the Senator from Kentucky asked my advice with reference to the propriety of taking the whole bill of last year and appropriating in detail. I concurred with him that it would facilitate our operations to do so, and hence, if this bill is not to be recommitted, my judgment is that the best way to consider this question is to take the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky, rather than the amendments proposed to the original House bill by the committee. There can be no difficulty in this course. We have spent nearly two months of this session and the last session in the consideration of the legislative bill, and the House has spent nearly two months in the consideration of the same bill, and every feature of it, every item of it, is familiar to the Committee on Appropriations in the House. I cannot understand why it was that they took as the basis of their appropriations the bill of last year, instead of taking the substance of the vetoed bill, which had four times been considered by the House and by the Senate, and finally agreed to, with the exception, of course, of the political legislation.

It is perfectly easy for the Senate to understand the bill, which has twice passed the Senate, which has twice been passed by the House, and make that the basis of our action now. If the Senate wants to act intelligently it seems to me it would so act by taking up the bill which we have recently considered, and considered at great length and detail; and there is no trouble in reference to a committee of conference, as suggested by the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON.] The question before us is whether or not these appropriations that have been agreed to by both Houses shall be passed substantially as they have been passed heretofore. That is all the question there is involved. We could in one day take up the vetoed bill and eliminate from it the political legislation put on it by way of rider, and eliminate from it what appears in what is entitled the supplemental civil bill, to wit, the appropriations for the judicial expenses of the Government, and it ought not to take three hours to consider the regular legislative bill. Yet if we take up the House bill now before us we shall have to consider first in detail what were the appropriations of last year, and then see how they compare with those in the vetoed bill, and then ascertain what omissions have been made in the House bill, and so on.

Now, with due deference to the House, it must be considered that this present bill passed the House under a suspension of the rules. It has in fact never been considered in the House, and it could not in the nature of things have been very fully considered in the Committee on Appropriations of the House. Therefore, in the interest of economy of time, I trust this bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, and by to-morrow morning they can bring in a bill here making the basis of it the vetoed bill, and then in a single day we can pass these appropriations.

Mr. WINDOM. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS,] to one peculiarity of this bill. He will find on reading the first page that the first thirteen lines of the bill contain, as I understand, all of the appropriating clauses for nearly $20,000,000. Then follow nineteen pages of exceptions. I want to call the Senator's attention to that. Thirteen lines cover the entire appropriating clauses of the bill, and nineteen pages of exceptions follow those thirteen lines.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, no.

Mr. WINDOM. Let me finish my statement.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. WINDOM. Let us see.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There are a great many conditions here not in the other bill at all.

Mr. WINDOM. Then I will modify my statement a little; nineteen pages of exceptions and explanations and conditions follow.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Conditions that are very important.

Mr. WINDOM. Then the Senator from Kentucky, justly recognizing the fact that nobody could possibly understand this bill as reported, has himself brought in a bill of eighty-eight pages as a commentary upon the bill which the Senate is asked to pass. Now, for one, I very much prefer to act upon the commentary itself, and then we shall know what we are doing. Here is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky covering eighty-eight pages, brought in, as he says, for the express purpose of enabling the Senate to understand what is meant by the bill which comes to us from the House of Representatives.

Mr. CONKLING. Intended as marginal notes and addenda.

Mr. WINDOM. Intended, as suggested, as marginal notes and addenda to the bill. If the Senate will agree to pass the House bill, and then pass this as an explanation of it, it possibly may be understood by somebody hereafter.

Now the Senator from Alabama suggests that the short way of doing this thing is to take the House bill and pass it. That is the short way; but it is not the way by which any Senator on this floor, not even the Senator from Alabama himself, can tell what this bill contains; and I venture to say that, with all the intelligence and experience which the Senator from Alabama has had upon the subject of appropriations, he cannot in two days' study tell us what this bill reported from the committee means.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is the Senator from Minnesota a member of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. WINDOM. I am.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then if it is true that I could not take the bill and tell in two days what it means, I should like to know why the Committee on Appropriations ever reported it back here with some amendments, as they did? Why was it brought here? Does the Senator understand it himself? If he does not understand it, why did he bring it here?

Mr. WINDOM. That is what "no fellow can find out."

Mr. HOUSTON. Why did that committee report it to us? The Committee on Appropriations constitutes the official organ of this Senate on that subject, and we backwoods fellows over here, outside Senators that are not on the Committee on Appropriations, propose to follow the committee. And I am surprised to hear that a distinguished Senator of that committee should get up and say that the bill cannot be understood, while he has been, I suppose, one of those who have been in favor of reporting it.

Mr. WINDOM. I want to say to the Senator from Alabama that he is entirely mistaken. I did not have the honor of being present at the committee at all.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I tell my friend he ought to have been.

Mr. WINDOM. I will say that I ought not to have been, for by direction of the Vice-President I have been elsewhere attending to my duties as a Senator.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I take back what I said about the Senator.

Mr. WINDOM. I have nothing more to say about this matter except simply to repeat the fact that the Senator from Kentucky who has charge of this bill, as I judge from the remarks he has made here to-day, agrees with me fully upon this proposition. The amendment which he has proposed here is the best evidence I can give that he agrees to the proposition that we ought to understand this bill and that we ought not only to understand it ourselves but that we ought to put it in such shape that somebody else can understand it when it goes from our care after it shall have passed the Senate. Now, I guarantee that the Senator from West Virginia, who is about to take the floor, agrees with me at heart also that no such new precedent for passing $20,000,000 of appropriation should be adopted under the plea that there is too short time to pass the bill in proper form.

It is utterly impossible, I think the Senator will agree with me, for any Senator to understand it unless he takes the bill of last year and compares it section by section, line by line. Otherwise he cannot know what is meant in a large proportion of this bill. I want the Senator to tell us when he takes the floor whether he believes that it is good practice to appropriate almost the entire sum of $20,000,000, or whatever it is, in thirteen lines, and then take nineteen pages to make up your exceptions and additions to another bill of eighty-eight pages, as an addendum or explanation of the bill we are about to pass.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, I regret that there is any necessity whatever for the discussion of this morning. It is unfortunate, I think, especially as between the members of the Committee on Appropriations. It is true, as the Senator from Minnesota has said, that he was not present at the different meetings that the Committee on Appropriations had while considering this bill. If he had been, he would have had less necessity for his inquiries this morning.

Mr. WINDOM. I think so, too; for I think I could have convinced the Senator that he never ought to have brought in a bill in this form.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I did not say that, and I do not say that; but I do say if the Senator from Minnesota had been present when this bill was considered in committee he would not, in my opinion, have moved to recommit it. He has been absent on other duty by order of the Senate. Nobody is to blame for that; but certainly if the Senator had been present during the different meetings and sittings and discussions of the House bill by the committee, he would have understood it much better than he appears to understand it this morning.

Now, Mr. President, there is more than this body that has to be consulted about appropriation bills. No one can understand better than the Senator from Minnesota that another branch prepares the appropriation bills, and not this. It is not in such matters a question alone what shall be appropriated or how the bills shall come to us. Could the Senate do otherwise than accept this bill as it came from the House? Has the Senate a right to originate appropriation bills?

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly we have a right to do so.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It never has been done to my knowledge; and the Senators on that side of the Chamber have always admitted by their action that the House has the right.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is a question which has been long in dispute between the two Houses, and has never been settled.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The House has always originated the appropriation bills. Therefore, it is settled by practice at least. However, it is not only this body that is to act, but the House of Representatives also; and in considering this bill we must consider that we are not the only persons that have a word to speak about such a matter. The Senate Committee on Appropriations probably never would have presented the bill we are now considering, but it came from the House, and the committee have amended it; and I say now that it is substantially the vetoed bill. Senators may knock it around as they choose, or tumble it around as they choose, but when it comes up it will stand as substantially the vetoed bill, with one exception, and that is, no advance in the salaries of employés and others about the Departments, and that may—I hope it is not so—account for some of the opposition to the present bill and for the vetoed bill being preferred.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator from West Virginia does not intend to imply that this bill resembles at all in form either of the bills that were vetoed?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from West Virginia repeats what he said. It is substantially the vetoed bill, not in form but in fact. In fact it appropriates less money. It is a reduction from the vetoed bill, and in that respect it is an improvement. It advances no salary; in that respect it is an improvement.

Mr. BLAINE. That I know nothing about, but the Senator from West Virginia must very well know that for the first time in fifteen years an attempt is made to appropriate money in this form. About fifteen years ago or a little more than that there was a very great reform made in regard to appropriating the public money, in regard to the subdivision of the items under different heads in different bills, and then in regard to the perfect simplicity with which every sum was appropriated to the specific object for which it was intended. Now this bill comes to us just about as intelligible as we sometimes read of an act in addition to an act explanatory of an act to amend an act entitled an act so and so. It is a confused mass.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I gave way to the Senator for a question, not for a speech.

Mr. BLAINE. A moment. It is an utterly confused mass through which any accounting officer can drive a six-horse team at any corner.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now what is the Senator's question?

Mr. BLAINE. I merely asked the Senator whether he intended to imply that this bill was in the remotest degree in the form in which money has been appropriated during his service in the Senate?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I said to the Senator it was not in form, but that in substance it was. The Senator from Maine, the Senator from Minnesota, and the Senator from Iowa, all helped to prepare last year's bill, and they helped to pass it; and they ought to know what is contained in the present year's bill, if they do not know.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. If that is the proper method of appropriation, then we could, it seems to me, according to the logic of the Senator from West Virginia, dispense with the Committee on Appropriations very nearly, because we might simply appropriate at each succeeding year what we appropriated the year before.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, no.

Mr. ALLISON. That is what we are doing in this bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, no.

Mr. BECK. It is in the power of Congress to do that, if it chooses.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is within the power of Congress to do it, but it is not done in this bill, for the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from New York have both told us that there were fifteen or twenty pages of exceptions, so that it cannot be the same. That is understood.

Now, what is to be gained by a recommitment? What can be done that has not been done? It is true the Senator from Minnesota has not been present, but his presence will be the only member of the committee who will be added. I do not know that much more could be done or said than has been done or said. Bear in mind that this session is drawing near a close, or it ought to be at least. Bear in mind also that the Committee on Appropriations for three days have considered this bill, line after line, and they compared the current year's bill and the vetoed bill with the bill now before us. It has been the labor of three or four days in the Appropriations Committee, and I do not know a single Senator here who can put his finger on a line that cannot be explained properly and that does not appropriate the money just as clearly and perhaps as intelligibly as if the other form were adopted.

Mr. BLAINE rose.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I see both of my friends rise. Content yourselves. Sit down.

Mr. WINDOM. Has the Senator any objection to my standing in my place?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will address the Chair.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Senator has no objection, I can hear him better when standing. If the President of the Senate orders me to take my seat, I will do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. To the Senator from Minnesota always.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not ask the Senator to yield. I have been so struck with admiration at the Senator's statement that I sought to listen to it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think I can convert the Senator if he will listen to me, and show him that he is all wrong.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Senator is through, I want to ask him a question.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I thought the Senator had something to say.

Mr. WINDOM. I want to ask a question. The Senator says there is not a line of the bill that cannot be explained. I ask him if he can take the bill and upon the language of the bill itself, without referring to other statutes, explain it at all? In other words, ought not an appropriation bill to explain itself?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator well knows that in every appropriation bill that is passed we have to take the appropriation bill of the year previous to explain what it means. That is always the case; and the Senator well knows it.

Mr. WINDOM. Ah, Mr. President, you have not to take the last year's bill to explain what the bill on its passage means. The bill before the Senate always explains itself, as a general rule.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor, but he yields a moment for a question.

Mr. WINDOM. The question is this: have not all the bills hitherto explained themselves upon their face, without having to refer to another bill to ascertain what the bill under consideration meant?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Not always.

Mr. WINDOM. Is not that the rule almost universally?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is the rule; but there are exceptions.

Mr. WINDOM. Very few exceptions have ever existed, I will say to my friend.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Kentucky has well described this bill. I agree with him in much that he has said. Perhaps he goes a little further than I would, but I agree with him in much that he has said. I know there is objection to it, but what is there to which there may not be objection? Do you not find objections to every appropriation bill and almost every other bill that comes up? Senators who desire to object can always find objections to a bill, no matter how perfect it may be. I am sure that any of my friends here can find objection to almost anything that we undertake to do or want to do, especially in the matter of appropriations.

My good friend from Minnesota has been for many years the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, with whom I have served very agreeably, and I am only surprised to-day to see him, especially when he was not present at the consideration of this bill in committee, throwing obstacles in the way of it. I did not expect it from him. However, he has a right to do it.

Mr. WINDOM. I will say to the Senator on that point that I regretted to do it, but I feel it to be a duty which I owe to the Senate to call attention to the fact that this bill is without precedent in form.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No Senator has yet pointed out any substantial objection. If there is a substantial objection, point it out.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the honorable Senator from West Virginia allow me a moment?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Wait a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia declines to yield.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No, I do not; but I should like to have one or two words to say in my own speech, and not have everybody else make it up for me. I do not want to prolong this discussion. I would vote with the Senator to apply the five-minute rule, but I do not want to cut off other Senators. I will at the proper time vote to apply that rule if it is necessary; but I would give all Senators a fair chance. I will not move to lay on the table the motion of my friend from Minnesota, but I think it an unnecessary motion. Let us here determine what is the proper course to pursue, and after we have determined what is to be done, let us make progress, and not stand here and debate as long as we have done.

Mr. President, the bill before us is either proper or improper; and no Senator yet, only except upon general grounds, has pointed out a single error, a single item, in which the present bill does not cover the matter which it contemplates to cover.

Mr. WINDOM. We cannot tell what it is.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No Senator yet has risen in his place and said this bill is wrong in fact, that it does not appropriate what it ought to appropriate, or that it has omitted to appropriate what ought to have been inserted, or that it has added what ought not to have been added. Let some Senator do so if he can. I will not claim that I can answer, but my friend from Kentucky, I believe, can answer any question as to the appropriations, whether they are proper or improper. If the Senator from Minnesota finds any item in this bill that ought not to be there, or if he wants to add anything that is not there, let him point it out.

Mr. WINDOM. The very difficulty is that I cannot, and no other Senator can, ascertain without two or three days' study whether it is right or wrong. That is the very point of my objection.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then my friend ought to take the two or three days' study before he undertakes to show that it is wrong.

Mr. WINDOM. I wish to have a bill presented from which I can learn by the language upon its face whether it is right or wrong.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My friend has told the Senate that he understands what we have termed the vetoed bill. If he understands that, he understands this bill in everything except the reduction of salaries.

Mr. WINDOM. I have great faith in my friend from West Virginia, but I would rather not appropriate $20,000,000 simply upon a statement of what the bill contains. I should like to know myself, if I can be permitted to know, what we are doing. I have great faith in the Senator, but I do not think it is proper legislation.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Great faith in the Senator from West Virginia, with all respect to my friend, makes no difference one way or the other.

Mr. WINDOM. That is the only way we can ascertain what is in the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let me ask the Senator if both the bills are not before him and if they have not been in the Senate two days? This is the third day that the bill we are now acting upon has been in the Senate; the second day that it has been printed and on our desks; and why is there this objection? If there is an objection just point it out. I ask again any Senator, if there are objections to this bill, point them out. If not, why do you object to it? What is the use of objecting if there is no objection to the bill except that it does not appropriate money as we want it appropriated? It does not appropriate it as we have been in the habit of appropriating, I admit. The Senator from Kentucky has told you so. The Senator from Kentucky has said that, and I have agreed with him; I would have preferred another form, and the very form the Senator now prefers; but what is the result? Suppose we take the other form and substitute it for this bill, is it not likely, from all the circumstances, from what we know of the condition of things at the other wing of the Capitol, that it would detain us much longer than to pass this bill and not make opposition to the bill which the House have sent to us?

Mr. President, it appears to me that no good can come from recommitting this bill. There is nothing that can be done that has not been done. As I said, I will give way to any Senator who will point out some item in this bill that ought not to be there, or some item not in it that ought to be in. The committee has endeavored to substantially adopt the vetoed bill, the very one our friends want, with the exception of the increase in salaries. I should have voted for some increase of the salaries to a limited extent; but that portion is not in this bill. Let me say to my friend from Minnesota that before making a motion to lay the motion to recommit on the table I will give way to any Senator on the other side to state such an objection to the bill. I believe we ought to have a fair discussion. I do not want to cut off debate. My friend from Kentucky says I ought not to move to lay the motion on the table. I agree with him, but I ask either one of the Senators here if there are items in this bill that in themselves are wrong, or if there are any that ought to be added. I refer now to the House bill which is before us, the one that we are considering. If so, let Senators point them out.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to ask the Senator from West Virginia if I understood him correctly to say that the only difference between this bill as proposed and the vetoed bill is in regard to the increase of official compensation?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There is no other substantial difference, I said.

Mr. ALLISON. Then the object of the bill is in this indirect way to get rid of increasing three, four, or half a dozen salaries, is it? Is the only object in reappropriating the bill of last year to get rid of a few salaries?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, no.

Mr. ALLISON. Then what is it?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator knows well that there are twenty or thirty pages of exceptions.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; if that is the only difference, it seems to me that it would facilitate the consideration of the measure to take up the bill that we have recently considered instead of taking up the law of last year and re-enacting it, because that is what it is, with twenty or thirty pages of exceptions.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I only desire to say one word. The amendment I submitted was prepared for a double purpose. First, if the Senate would determine upon that form, I thought the form perhaps would be more in accordance with usage. The reason why I prepared it in the form I did, and took the pains I did, was this: I could not obtain copies enough of the law for the current year to supply each Senator with it, so that he could read it for himself while the measure was under consideration; I knew no way of getting it printed for the use of the Senate in time, but I could in the form of an amendment take the law of 1878, being the act making appropriations for the current fiscal year, and compare it carefully with the vetoed bill, with the bill of the House, with the bill as amended by the Senate, and I could lay it before the Senate, as has been done this morning, so that each Senator would have the act for the current fiscal year in his hands; and having compared my amendment with that act he would find that, except where the Senate and the House have amended this bill, or where the footings are made different because of the increased pay of watchmen and some other items, he has in fact the act for the current fiscal year before him. Unless some mistake was made by the clerk or myself, he has that act. It was the only form in which I could get that act. When I came to compare it with the bill sent to us by the House and with the Senate amendments, and put all three together, I found that the House in fact had made very few mistakes, fewer, as I said, than I supposed would have occurred under such circumstances. The Senate Committee on Appropriations have, as far as they could, amended the bill wherever they found any mistakes. It is proper to say that while the House committee were considering the bill in this form, believing it was the shortest way, they accepted any suggestion that was made by any member of our committee, considered them all carefully, and added them to their bill, so that there is no objection to the form, having upon investigation found out that if the bill passes it will be construed just as the amendment submitted by me puts it.

I therefore waive any desire to press the amendment that I offered, having accomplished substantially what I desired, and having put the matter in a shape where each Senator can see for himself what the pending bill means, or so that if I made a mistake all would be able to ascertain it. Hence while I object to the form of the House bill individually, I shall endeavor to sustain the bill as amended, believing that no serious harm will be done. By adhering to it we can get away perhaps three or four days or a week sooner than if we were to open the whole bill up again. With the resolution of adjournment passed by the House before us, and with the great effort required to hold a quorum much longer, I was willing to waive the form for the purpose of obtaining prompt action.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator from Kentucky is going to fail us, there is no opportunity for reform. I should not have ventured the slightest effort in the direction of changing this bill if it had not been under the lead of my distinguished friend from Kentucky. It was because he so thoroughly appreciated it, and because he had served with such distinction on the Appropriations Committee in the House, and for the last three years in the Senate, that I supposed he of all men was competent to lead us; and I was about to follow him. But if he, I will not say deserts, but falls by the wayside, the former chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and myself, and the Senator from Iowa will have nobody to direct us.

The honorable Senator from West Virginia, who is chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, wants to know a single point in this bill that is objectionable. It is forbidden by the rules of the Senate to state what took place in the Appropriations Committee; but so far as that work is shown in the bill itself, I may quote it, and I may say on that subject that I think the universal opinion of the Committee on Appropriations was that a more angular, disjointed, unintelligible hodge-podge was never presented for an appropriation bill in this country.

In the first place, as the Senator from Minnesota has well said, the bill starts in nineteen lines to appropriate the sums appropriated last year, and then it says:

Provided, That nothing is appropriated by the foregoing section.

We had to strike out "the foregoing" before "section," because there was not any "foregoing section" in the bill; this was the very first section we were legislating about; and we had to put in the word "this" before "section." On the sixth page, the Senator from Kentucky, with his acumen, discovered that the bill of exceptions up to that point had no appropriating clause at all. Had we enacted those six pages as they came from the House, covering and involving some millions of money, there would not have been the authority of law for drawing a single cent upon the warrants of the Treasury Department. I do not know but that some like blunder may have escaped even the eagle eye of my friend from Kentucky. I feel like one treading on hot ashes. We do not know where we shall go through. We found those two great blunders. Now, let me read parts of the bill as it stands. First let me take this clause:

Provided, That nothing is appropriated * * * for "legislative expenses" of either of the Territories, namely, of Arizona, of Dakota, of Idaho, or of Montana, (but the usual annual amount of $2,000 to each of said Territories for the expenses of the secretary's office is hereby appropriated;) nor for rent of the "Towson House," or to "repairs of the roof or flooring of the Army Medical Museum."

Can any man make any sense out of that? That is just the way it reads in the bill. When we go a little distance further, here is one of the exceptions:

Under the heading "House of Representatives," the clause commencing "for eight messengers" is hereby amended by striking out therefrom the name "Henry Douglas."

In the name of common sense, who knows anything about Henry Douglas? Why should that name be stricken out, or why was it ever inserted, or what earthly connection is there to let the Senate know why "Henry Douglas" had appeared before in any previous year or why he should not be appropriated for now? Then it goes on in another place as follows:

The clause commencing "twenty-eight pages" is amended to read "twenty-nine," and the sum of the clause shall read "$15,865;" the clause "for fuel and oil for the heating apparatus" is amended to include "also, and for steam-pump and condenser for same."

That is the way this appropriation is made. If anybody is able to English it, if anybody is able to interpret it, he understands the English language better than I do. I repeat what I said before, that the appropriation bill, involving some of the most important appropriations for the support of the Government, if passed in this form, will depend upon the friendly construction of the Auditors and Comptrollers in the Treasury Department, and no man except by the application of good nature on the one side and technical knowledge of law on the other side will be able to tell what is appropriated and what is withheld. I do not want to use a strong phrase, but I do feel that it is little short of a disgrace for an intelligent Congress of the United States to send that out as an appropriation of public money.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, just one word and then I am done. I hope the bill will not be recommitted. After reflection I will not move to table the motion. I think the bill ought not to be recommitted; and therefore I hope all the friends who want to pass an appropriation bill and get away some time or other will take the bill as we have it here now and let us go on with it.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I am included in the last remark made by the Senator from West Virginia. I am one of those who both wish to pass an appropriation bill and wish to get away from here; and yet I am going to vote either for a motion to recommit or for any other motion which will prevent the adoption of such a bill as has been sent us as the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill deemed fit by the Senate in this year of grace to be put upon the statute-book.

I am aware that this is an extraordinary session; I am aware that it is a good deal warmer now than it was two or three months ago; and I am aware of several other things making it exceedingly convenient to break up Congress and to go away from here. Indeed the urgency in this respect is so great that I do not know but that it would have much impression upon me in this vote but for a single circumstance. It so happens here that we have not the excuse of expedition for passing this confused, obscure, and unintelligible bill. If I mistake not, four times within the last three months (and if I am wrong I ask the Senator from Kentucky, who is intelligent upon this subject, to correct me) the two houses of Congress have, by distinct action each time, agreed upon every item of appropriations proposed for or contained in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. When I say "items of appropriation," of course I do not include the partisan or political sections, whatever they may be called, relating to general legislation.

We have therefore within reach, in print, revised and perfected, a bill which the Senator from West Virginia, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, as a member of the Senate, as every other Senator on both sides, has four times voted and declared to contain item by item the proper items for appropriation in this bill for this year. If there is any mistake about this, I beg to be set right.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will the Senator be kind enough to explain what he means by saying that the bill has been four times agreed to?

Mr. CONKLING. I will. I will explain that twice during the closing days of the last session of Congress, when the Senator from West Virginia was not only a Senator but a member of the Committee on Appropriations, the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, every single item in it, was agreed upon and approved by the Appropriation Committees of both Houses, by the conference committees appointed by both Houses, and by every member of the two Houses which together they represented; and the only difference was upon a certain section or sections in the bill; appropriating no money but political in character, and they have come to be familiarly denominated political and general legislation. I mean that that having occurred twice during the last session, it has twice occurred during this session; that every item deemed fit and needed, this bill was agreed upon by the whole of each House. Now, am I wrong in that?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I take it the Senator means that the committees passed upon them, but not the Senate twice in each session. Again, there are, I suppose, fifty items probably in the bill now before us that were not in the former bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us take one thing at a time.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. They were not in the bill of the last Congress.

Mr. CONKLING. One moment; let us take one thing at a time. Does the Senator say that the Senate did not itself pass this bill at the last session? Did not this bill come here from the House? Was it not amended by the Senate? Was it not approved, as slightly amended, by the Senate? Was it not returned to the House, and a second time approved there? Did it not come back here and was it not approved here, always saving and excepting only the political sections of the bill?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In a wholesale way, just as it occurred in the other case, but not item by item.

Mr. CONKLING. I care not whether it was wholesale or retail; the affirmation that I make is that these items having been scrutinized by the committees of both Houses at the last session and at this, having been submitted to the scrutiny of the Committee of the Whole in the House and of the House itself, of the Committee of the Whole in the Senate and of the Senate itself, have been approved no fewer than four times, and are all in print perfected and completed, for the use of the Senate and of the committee. That is my assertion. It was challenged, and out of the challenge has come the proof, and no Senator will rise to deny it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator says it has been approved. I say, yes, if he means that the announcement has been made at the door of the Senate and reported at the desk in a wholesale way, and the Senate asked a conference. If that is the way the Senator says we went over the bill item by item, I agree with him.

There is one other thing. That was in the last session. At the last session the bill was never agreed upon; it was in conference all the time; it never did get out of the conference.

I have stated to the Senate that there are probably fifty items in this bill that were not in the bill that failed in the last Congress. There are a number of items in the bill we are considering that were not in what is known as the vetoed bill, notably among them $150,000 for deficiencies in the Internal Revenue Department. In regard to the present bill I will ask the Senator from New York the same question that I asked the other Senators, is there an item in the House bill we are now considering that is objectionable, or is there anything left out that ought to be there? If there is not, why object to it?

Mr. CONKLING. It so happens that at this moment the Senator from West Virginia wishes to talk about one thing and I wish to talk about another, although I will not forget to speak of that which he wants to urge at this moment upon our attention, when I have finished the topic upon which I was dwelling.

I want to enforce, as far as the truth enforces, the fact that the legislative, executive, and judicial bill deemed appropriate for the next fiscal year has been, by item and in all the forms known to legislative action, agreed upon and approved over and over again by both Houses; and no Senator, unless he has a vague understanding or a short memory, will undertake to deny what I say. At the last session of Congress instead of a formal report being made at the door merely, as suggested, which nobody dissented to, the bill came here, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, was examined, was reported back, was discussed, and voted upon, item by item, until it became the completed bill. It went back to the House. The House non-concurred pro forma, asked a committee of conference, and a committee was appointed. The committee met; they agreed upon every item in the bill, differing upon nothing except the political legislation. They came back and both of the Houses concurred in what they had done, the sole difference between the Houses being as to the clauses importing general and partisan legislation into an appropriation bill. That has happened again at this session. Here lies on my desk and lies within reach of every other Senator the product of all this legislative and committee labor.

If, as the Senator from West Virginia suggests, additions are necessary, it goes without saying that the true mode to make those additions is to treat them as additions and put them on to the bill already agreed upon. Is that a reason why, reversing the practice of twenty years, we should go back to worse than the worst form of former appropriation bills which has been found pernicious, suited to the perpetration of frauds, and adopt that? Not at all, I humbly submit. On the contrary, if the Senator from West Virginia, or anybody else, has discovered an item of appropriation in addition to those which were deemed necessary three weeks ago and up to that time, add it; but do not run a plowshare over the legislation of the last twenty years and introduce confusion, disorder, and uncertainty by saying in thirteen lines that you appropriate millions upon millions of dollars to be distributed according to some mode to be ascertained in some other way.

Mr. President, let me read what a published paper states as the language of one who has undertaken to defend this appropriation bill, and see whether it falls short of what was said by the Senator from Kentucky, or see whether he has fallen short in characterizing this bill, with what has been said about it by its own defenders. I find as language imputed to one of those who are understood to have approved this bill these words:

I do not deny that the Treasury Department, by detailing three men, the one with the old law before him, the other with the new bill before him, and the third with a slate and pencil, might in the course of a day find out what is appropriated; and I think the Government can live under it.

There is the likeness in miniature as painted by one of those who approved this bill, and such a bill, which it is to take three men to interpret, one to read it, another to look to the law referred to, and another to keep tally with a slate and pencil where the variations occur to find out the language of the bill, is commended to us when we have, in the settled and approved form, examined, as I have said, four times within three months and four times approved by every member of both Houses, a bill which confessedly makes all these appropriations, distributing and ascribing each appropriately and certainly.

What excuse is there for that? Is there even the excuse of haste? Is there even the excuse of anxiety to be away from this extraordinary session in this heated locality? Every Senator knows that we can take this other bill, which every Senator here has voted upon as to all its items, strike out of it the political clauses upon which we have differed, and then if additional items are needed, as the Senator from West Virginia has said, add them; and there you have a bill not only in proper form, not only in proper substance, but one which we have all voted for over and over again, about which there can be no difference, and upon which there can be no criticism.

I humbly submit that it will not do, either on the ground of politics or under the intimation that we may get through quicker, to take up a wholesale measure of this sort, as it has been described by the Senator from Kentucky, and as it has been described elsewhere by those who have undertaken to defend it, and put it on the statute-book, when in the same length of time, either by taking up the amendment which the Senator from Kentucky has been to the obviously great labor of preparing, or taking up one of the prints of the former bill as a substitute, we can do all that should be done, do it properly and do it just as quickly as we can proceed to the consummation of this, as I must think, very inartificial and ill-conceived legislation.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I do not want to detain the Senate; but the honorable Senator from West Virginia asked with some confidence what particular sections of the bill were objectionable. Passing over the bulk of the appropriations, let us come to the sections which are merely legal, and see how entirely perspicuous they are. Take the last section in the bill, section 5:

That the pay of assistant messengers, firemen, watchmen, and laborers provided for in this act, unless otherwise specially stated in particular cases in the act of June 19, 1878, which it continues and makes available, (except as declared in the first section of this act,) shall be as follows.

Can any mortal man decipher what that means? I will read it again. I do not want to take any unfairness by a hasty or first reading:

That the pay of assistant messengers, firemen, watchmen, and laborers provided for in this act, unless otherwise specially stated in particular cases in the act of June 19, 1878, which it continues and makes available, (except as declared in the first section of this act,) shall be as follows.

That is the last section. Now here is another one I want to read, the fourth section:

That the fifth paragraph of that portion of the act—

It is a little long, but I ask the patience of the Senate—

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator knows that that has been recommended by the committee to be stricken out.

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, yes; the committee broke down on this. I was going to state that this got a little too steep even for my friend.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Why will the Senator read it when he knows it was stricken out by the committee?

Mr. BLAINE. I want to show that at this point the whole committee broke down. I want to show the character of the bill as it came from the House:

That the fifth paragraph of that portion of the act of June 20, 1878, making appropriation for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1879, and for other purposes, relating to the District of Columbia, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that the sum of money therein appropriated to pay the workingmen of said District shall be paid to those whose claims are due and unpaid from the District of Columbia for work under the superintendents of the late board of public works, and also from contractors whose accounts against the government of said District had been paid in part or in full prior or subsequently to the act of June 23, 1874, and of those who have not been paid prior to or since said date by the late board of public works or by the commissioners of the District of Columbia; and the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to turn into the Treasury of the United States any moneys now in their possession due or belonging to contractors under the late board of public works who have not paid their laborers or workmen: Provided, That if the said sum of $75,000—

No such sum has been mentioned at all—

Provided, That if the said sum of $75,000 in said act mentioned shall not be sufficient to pay all such claims found to be due under the provisions of said act of June 20, 1878, and of this section, then there shall be made the required pro rata deduction of each claim; and the amount to be paid on each claim shall be paid and received in full discharge of the claim of such workman; and that no such claims shall be received, filed, or audited subsequently to the 1st day of July, 1879: And provided further, That the amount or pro rata amount found to be due to each workman shall only be paid to him in person, if living, or, in case of non-residents of the District of Columbia, by draft on the Treasury of the United States to his or their order, or to his or their legal representatives, if dead.

That actually came over from the House. I know nobody will believe it. Any one would think this was taken out of some joke-book, that there was somebody trying to make a parody on the blunders that were committed in Congress; but that solemnly came over here attested by "George M. Adams, Clerk of the House." I do not propose to analyze it; I do not feel equal to the task. It appears, I think, in it that those fellows will only get their claims who are living outside of the District, and those who are dead inside of it. [Laughter.] I say I am not equal to an analysis of it, as I am not a lawyer; I am only a law-maker. I do profess to know the English language with some reasonable degree of common accuracy, and I believe I can write a sentence intelligible to the common man. We are told that the laws ought to be so plainly conceived that he who runs may read, but neither the standing man nor the walking man nor the sitting man can read and understand that.

Mr. BECK. Section 4 is stricken out.

Mr. BLAINE. I know; I said that was out. We all broke down on that.

Mr. WITHERS. Then what was the use of reading it?

Mr. BLAINE. I read it to show the character of the bill.

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator is criticising what is not in the bill at all.

Mr. BECK. It has been stricken out and disposed of.

Mr. BLAINE. No, it is only proposed to strike it out. How do you know that the honorable Senator from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] and others on that side will consent to strike it out? The Senator from Alabama has been standing stubbornly for the bill as it came from the House. The honorable Senator from Kentucky has only recommended that it be stricken out. He has recommended a substitute for the whole bill. Non constat that the section will go out; we have only recommended that it go out. I recommend that the whole thing be kicked under the table; so does the honorable Senator from Kentucky; but it does not follow that it will be done.

Mr. BECK. I will help to keep out that section. I will say that the other section first read by the Senator from Maine is not quite subject to the criticism he suggests. It provides:

That the pay of assistant messengers, firemen, watchmen, and laborers provided for in this act, unless otherwise specially stated in particular cases in the act of June 19, 1878, which it continues and makes available (except as declared in the first section of this act)—

That being in parenthesis, for it does make exceptions to it—shall be as follows:

Then it fixes the pay. The necessity for that was that the night-watchmen in the office of the assistant treasurer at Cincinnati got $120 each; the night-watchmen in other places got $300, $400, and $500; in San Francisco $1,000, and so on. Wherever they are specially provided for at given rates, they are allowed to remain at the rates usually fixed. Wherever they are merely described as watchmen and no salaries are fixed, then the general provision makes them all have the same pay. That is all there is of that, and it is very well expressed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BELL, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIAMS.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The Secretary resumed and concluded the call of the roll.

Mr. PLATT, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I voted "yea" on this question. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. RANDOLPH] on political questions. As this seems to have taken a political turn, I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. THURMAN, (after having voted in the negative.) I came into the Senate just as my name was called, and did not understand that this question was taking a party aspect. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who is absent, on all party questions on the legislative bill, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. ANTHONY, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I voted inadvertently, not supposing that so absurd a proposition as the negative of this would be a party vote, but I find that it is so taken. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] on political questions, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MCPHERSON. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. MCMILLAN.]

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. JOHNSTON] is paired on all political questions with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. TELLER.] If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Hill of Colorado,	Morrill,
Blaine,	Chandler,	Hoar,	Paddock,
Booth,	Conkling,	Ingalls,	Rollins,
Bruce,	Davis of Illinois,	Kellogg,	Saunders,
Burnside,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Windom.
Cameron of Pa.,	Ferry,	Logan,

NAYS—32.

Bailey,	Call,	Eaton,	Hampton,
Bayard,	Cockrell,	Garland,	Harris,
Beck,	Davis of W. Va.,	Groome,	Hereford,

Hill of Georgia,	Lamar,	Ransom,	Voorhees,
Houston,	McDonald,	Saulsbury,	Walker,
Jonas,	Maxey,	Slater,	Wallace,
Jones of Florida,	Morgan,	Vance,	Whyte,
Kernan,	Pendleton,	Vest,	Withers.

ABSENT—21.

Anthony,	Farley,	McMillan,	Teller,

Butler,	Grover,	Platt,	Williams,
Carpenter,	Hamlin,	Plumb,
Coke,	Johnston,	Randolph,
Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Sharon,

So the motion to recommit the bill was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope that the substitute of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] will be read first, because if the Senate should choose to adopt that, it would render unnecessary the reading of the original bill and the consideration of the amendments, which I am sure cannot be explained. I think the Senator from Kentucky has rendered a public service in the bill he offered instead of the one that was shoveled into the Senate by the Committee on Appropriations all in a heap.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state to the Senator that that amendment is before the Committee on Appropriations, and has not been reported back. It is not before the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Kentucky has proposed the amendment to which I refer.

Mr. WITHERS. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say to the Senator from Rhode Island that I offered the amendment yesterday and it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It has not been reported back by that committee. I was instructed this morning (and the Senator from Rhode Island may put whatever construction on that he chooses) to insist on the House bill with the Senate committee's amendments. Having done that, I do not feel at liberty, so far as I am concerned, either to present the amendment that I offered yesterday to the Senate or to vote for it if it is presented, because my committee having instructed me to insist on this bill with the committee's amendments I feel compelled to stand by the action of the committee in that regard. That is all I have to say.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let the bill be read at length.

Mr. BECK. There has been so much discussion in regard to it now, and all the matters connected with it seem to be so well understood, that I hope the amendments will be acted upon as they are reached in the reading. When the bill was first brought up I thought it should be read through so that the Senate could follow it. It seems to me now that Senators fully understand it without having it read through before the amendments are acted on.

Mr. CONKLING. If my friend will allow me one moment, suppose after we have acted upon the amendments seriatim, the substitute of the Senator from Kentucky, (which if he does not offer it no doubt somebody will offer,) finds a majority in the Senate. The Senator must see that we shall find out then that it was not worth while to spend time in doing what might be called perfecting the other bill before the vote on substituting his amendment for it.

Mr. BECK. If any Senator desires it the bill may be read through first before we act upon the amendments, of course.

Mr. CONKLING. I think the better way would be for somebody to offer the Senator's substitute. It will save time to adopt that rather than to have the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations first acted on.

Mr. HOUSTON. The course suggested by the honorable Senator from New York would not save a minute's time. When the substitute is offered, it is the province of the body to perfect the original matter proposed to be stricken out by the substitute, as well as the substitute itself. Therefore I think we had better go through with this bill. The course suggested will not save any time.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will allow me, I entirely agree with him that it is in order to perfect the text before moving to strike out the text, and if the object was to filibuster and to consume time, a few Senators no doubt might detain the Senate for several days. But I assume that everybody will be willing and glad to have this preliminary question settled, namely, whether the Senate will proceed with the substitute offered by the Senator from Kentucky or proceed with the original bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not think there is any danger of filibustering in the Senate. I understand it is probably exercised to some extent, unfortunately, at the other end of the Capitol. Here I take it for granted that Senators desire to discharge their duties and they will do so. Until we pass upon the bill from the House and adopt or reject the amendments of our committee, I should not know probably whether to vote for a substitute or not. Therefore as it would not economize time at all, I prefer before voting on the question of striking out the original text that we shall perfect it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill as amended by the committee, and as the Chair understands the amendments are to be acted upon as they are reached. If there be no objection that course will be pursued.

The Secretary read the first section of the bill, to the proviso beginning in line 20, as follows:

That for the purpose of providing for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same sums of money and for the like purposes, (and continuing the same provisions relating thereto,) as were appropriated for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1878, (except as hereinafter declared,) subject to all the limitations and conditions in respect to the disbursement of the appropriations hereby made that were imposed by said act and the other laws of the United States upon or in respect to the appropriations made by said act.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, line 21, after the word "by," to strike out "the foregoing" and insert "this;" so as to read:

Provided, That nothing is appropriated by this section for "the purchase of the copyright and plates to the reference index to the Revised Statutes of the United States;" for a telegraph operator at the Executive Office; for more than eighty clerks of the class paid $900 per annum each, in the office of the Treasurer of the United States; for more than twenty-nine clerks of class 1; for more than eighteen clerks of the class of $900 under the same officer, "employed in redeeming national currency," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 29, after the words "employed in redeeming national currency," to insert:

(And seven of the clerks of class 1 so employed are hereby transferred to the office of the said Treasurer.)

So as to read:

(And seven of the clerks of class 1 so employed are hereby transferred to the office of the said Treasurer;) "for temporary clerks for the Treasury Department;" "for replacing boilers and enlarging and rebuilding the boiler-house of the mint at Carson, Nevada;" "for repairs and machinery at the mint at New Orleans, Louisiana;" "for purchase of library for the use of the General Land Office;" "for legislative expenses" of either of the Territories. &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 37, after the words "for legislative expenses," to strike out "of either;" and after the word "Territories" to strike out "namely;" so as to read:

"For legislative expenses" of the Territories of Arizona, of Dakota, of Idaho, or of Montana, (but the usual annual amount of $2,000 to each of said Territories for the expenses of the secretary's office is hereby appropriated;) nor for rent of the "Towson House," or to repairs of the roof or flooring of the Army Medical Museum; "for the special purpose of investigating the history and habits of insects injurious to the cotton plant," other than that appropriated by this act to be expended by the entomological commission, or for the southern claims commission.

Mr. WINDOM. As that concludes the first appropriating paragraph, I would be much obliged to the Senator from Kentucky if he would inform me how much money is appropriated by that paragraph?

Mr. BECK. I can inform the Senator with perfect accuracy how much is appropriated by the whole bill. The amount is $15,826,479.11, to which the committee of the Senate has added $68,000, making fifteen million eight hundred and ninety-four dollars and a fraction. Does the Senator wish to know the exact amount that is appropriated under the bill for the current year, and what is the exact amount added by these amendments?

Mr. WINDOM. Yes; we are supposed——

Mr. BECK. I can inform the Senator in the course of an hour or two, but I cannot at this moment, because I did not expect the question to be asked.

Mr. WINDOM. We are supposed to be acting on this matter in detail, and I should be much obliged to the Senator before voting upon the concluding amendment in this paragraph if he would tell me within $5,000,000 how much money is appropriated by the paragraph?

Mr. BECK. I can say that the other amendments we have added amount to less than a million dollars. The bill for the current fiscal year provides for at least $15,000,000.

Mr. WINDOM. Is it rather the Senator's impression, then, that there are some fourteen or fifteen million dollars provided for in this paragraph?

Mr. BECK. I think so. All that is provided for in the bill of the current fiscal year is provided for, less the items that the Senator observes are excepted.

Mr. WINDOM. Would the Senator like to commit himself within a million?

Mr. BECK. It is almost impossible at any point in a bill to say it appropriates so much up to this line, so much up to that line. I cannot say that. As to the whole bill I can speak.

Mr. WINDOM. I can take up the Senator's bill which he submitted as a substitute and I can tell him at the end of any paragraph just how much money is appropriated by it.

Mr. BECK. By stopping and adding.

Mr. WINDOM. After each paragraph is added up we can ascertain.

Mr. BECK. It can be settled how much is in the particular paragraph, but of course addition has to be made of all the previous paragraphs to tell how much the bill contains up to that point.

Mr. WINDOM. But I am now called upon to consent, either by my silence or by my vote, to the adoption of the paragraph which has been read, and I really should like very much to know within a million or two how much it appropriates, if it is agreeable to the Senator or to the committee reporting it to let me know.

Mr. BECK. I will tell him. Up to that point, with the exception of a few changes, all that was appropriated by the bill for the current fiscal year has been provided for. I hold in my hand a list of the changes that have been made from the former bill by this bill, the increases and decreases. There has been a reduction of $126,984, and an addition of $87,610, leaving out the $150,000 which we are obliged to give the Internal Revenue department, for reasons explained awhile ago.

Mr. WINDOM. But does that touch this paragraph?

Mr. BECK. It touches this paragraph, except a very few amendments that change the amounts for the Pension Office, the Patent Office, the Land Office, and perhaps for the mints.

Mr. WINDOM. I appreciate the Senator's difficulty and I know he does, and therefore I will not press him any further to inform me of the amount we are appropriating; but I find on page 2, after the thirteen lines that appropriate everything appropriated last year, the bill commences with the exception:

(Except as hereinafter declared,) subject to all the limitations and conditions in respect to the disbursement of the appropriations hereby made that were imposed by said act.

Will the Senator inform me what those conditions and limitations are?

Mr. BECK. The act of June 19, 1878.

Mr. BLAINE. Twentieth it ought to be.

Mr. BECK. It appears in the public laws as approved June 19. A good many of the items of that act affix conditions and limitations and powers; for example, the item "office of the Director of the Mint," at the bottom of page 14 of the law for the current year, which is re-enacted, provides:

For contingent expenses of the United States mints and assay offices, namely: For specimens of coins, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $200; for books, balances and weights, and other incidental expenses, $800. And refining and parting of bullion shall be carried on at the mints of the United States and at the assay office at New York. And it shall be lawful to apply the moneys arising from charges collected from depositors for these operations pursuant to law so far as may be necessary to the defraying in full of the expenses thereof, including labor, materials, and wastage; but no part of the moneys otherwise appropriated for the support of the mints and the assay office at New York shall be used to defray the expenses of refining and parting bullion; but when the bullion received shall not, in the aggregate, be in such proportion of gold and silver as to admit of economical parting, or the necessary supplies of acids cannot be procured at reasonable rates, unparted bullion may be exchanged for fine bars, as provided in section 3546 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

That is one of the limitations and conditions with respect to these appropriations; and so I might go through.

Mr. WINDOM. Without troubling the Senator——

Mr. BECK. Allow me to call attention to one or two others.

Mr. WINDOM. I will not ask the Senator to take the trouble to count up all the laws that we are re-enacting just now; it is not perhaps a matter of much importance. We are re-enacting them by the wholesale without knowing what they are.

Mr. BECK. That is not exactly a fair statement that we are re-enacting laws without knowing what they are, because we have them before us. In a large number of other cases, for example, where we made appropriations for employés of the Surgeon General and the different Departments, we authorized them to make transfers of force from one to another, provided the service required it, and there are certain limitations put upon the use of money, certain limitations put upon the use of employés, that no more than a certain number should be employed temporarily here or there or elsewhere. This language was meant to continue those limitations just as they exist.

Mr. WINDOM. I am trying to illustrate the beauties of this bill, as the Senator will understand. I read in the paragraph to which I have called his attention that these appropriations are made "subject to all the limitations and conditions in respect to the disbursement of the appropriations hereby made that were imposed by said act." Now, the Senator has referred me to a number of conditions and limitations; there are certain others which he has not been able to find; and we are to take this in a general way. But the bill does not stop there. It says:

And the other laws of the United States upon or in respect to the appropriations made by said act.

Does that include the entire Revised Statutes, so that whatever may relate to an appropriation bill we are re-enacting now?

Mr. BECK. Oh, no. That is a provision which has been made, I suppose, in every appropriation bill that wherever there are specific laws governing or directing the use of the money the appropriation is made subject to those laws, whether it is the Coast Survey, whether it is the revenue marine, whether it is anything that we make appropriations to carry on, that the money shall be expended in accordance with the laws heretofore passed governing the management of the particular thing for which the appropriation is made. The Senator is aware of that; there are too many such cases for either him or me to cite them in a conversational debate like this.

Mr. WINDOM. I will detain the Senate but a moment longer to say that on this paragraph which the Senate is now required to act on, the Senator in charge of the bill will not venture to guess within a million of dollars of how much money is appropriated, nor can any Senator on this floor tell what acts or laws in any statute-book we are re-enacting by this provision. It is a good illustration of the beauties of this mode of passing an appropriation bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky whether the bill we are passing upon now is not made up from the estimates of Departments which were submitted during the last Congress and adopted and voted for by the very Senator on the other side who is now interrogating him? Were they not passed by his party friends, they then being in the majority? I ask whether this bill appropriates any more money than the law they passed and the bill they reported at the last Congress?

Mr. BECK. That is hardly worth answering. We know that the bill is within the estimates.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Senator will allow me to say that the purpose of my inquiry was to show that the war the Senator from Minnesota seems to be making on this bill is in truth, if I understand the case properly, a war upon the very bill that he helped to pass in the last Congress.

Mr. BECK. We all know there is some difficulty about the form of this bill, and I am extremely anxious that we should get along with the bill without any political discussion.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is all true; I appreciate it as well as anybody; but then I want fair play while I am doing it.

Mr. BECK. Any business question bearing upon the business matters in the bill, I will either answer or confess that I cannot; but if either side desire to put political conundrums to each other, I hope they will not address them to me. I am instructed by the committee to endeavor to pass this bill, and there is no politics in it.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Senator from Kentucky will allow me, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama a question.

Mr. BECK. Very well; you have the floor.

Mr. WINDOM. I want to ask the Senator from Alabama whether if he were convinced that these appropriations are the same as were made by the republicans, he would support them, and whether that is the reason he wishes to swallow this bill whole without any detailed items?

Mr. HOUSTON. No, sir, that is not my view; but it is an answer to the Senator from Minnesota that the committee of the House and the House of Representatives have passed the bill which he reported during the last Congress, practically. That tends to argue to me that it is right; and then the committee of the Senate have passed upon it, and that tends to argue that it is right. Now the Senator had probably better be influenced by the other view that I presented.

Mr. WINDOM. I am very glad to find the Senator has so much confidence in the appropriations made by the republicans.

Mr. BLAINE. I want to submit to the honorable Senator from Kentucky as well as the Chair a point of order that occurs to me on the section which has been read. A very brief section embraces within its legislative scope the amount of matter which I will indicate by turning over the leaves of the statutes of the last Congress. It is this page, and this, and those two, and those two, and those two, and those two, and those two, and those two, and those two, and those two, and those two, and those two, and those two, and those two, and those two, and those two, and those two, and those two, and those two, and those two, and those two, and that one down to there. [Turning over the leaves of the volume of statutes of the Forty-fifth Congress, second session.]

Now, what I want to submit as a point of order is this: that embraces a great many pages, some hundreds of paragraphs, some thousands of lines; and I ask whether a member of the Senate is cut out by this novel and extraordinary mode of legislation from offering an amendment, as is the usual and hereditary custom of this body, to any one of the items there. Suppose I do not agree to any of the numerous items or lines or paragraphs or sections there, I want to know how, according to direct and plain parliamentary modes, I am to take the sense of the Senate upon an amendment I wish to offer. We are here commanded to swallow this wholesale, the most important appropriation bill known to the Government. Have I the right in another form to ask that these questions be divided, and, if there be a division, where? All propositions before the Senate that contain two substantive propositions differing are divisible. Now, suppose I ask for a division of this question, where does it come in?

What I want the attention of the Chair and what I want the attention of the honorable Senator from Kentucky to, is whether this mode is to tramp out the right of each individual Senator to submit his amendments to the great legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, or whether we are to take it down at one gulp with the precious privilege reserved to us that we may have the right to consider some little variations under the head of exceptions that are so confused that no man can make out where they attach or to what they tend.

Mr. BECK. I have had occasion many times to inquire of the Senator from Maine what was parliamentary and what was unparliamentary. I never expected that he would inquire of me what was parliamentary, for I have the reputation, I believe, of knowing as little about parliamentary law as any man in the Senate; but I assume that the number of pages referred to by the Senator, which he did not name—there are thirty-one in the bill I hold in my hand—are all passed upon in the paragraph just read. In other words, the bill for the current fiscal year has been all passed upon, and every object and every clause in it is amendable on the motion of any gentleman who sees fit to offer an amendment. I would certainly so consider it, that the Senator has the same right to take the long bill that he holds and the bill which I hold, and either under the provisions for the House, or for the Senate, or for the Treasury Department, or for the government of the Territories, or anywhere else, he may offer any amendment just as absolutely as if the bill of the current fiscal year had been read verbatim and each clause was a separate item by itself.

That is my construction of it at least, and no Senator is cut off from any right because it is grouped in a few lines instead of being set out verbatim. Besides that, the Senator will observe that all through these pages under the head of "Independent Treasury," "Library of Congress," "House of Representatives," "Senate," "General Land Office," "Pension Office"—nearly every heading embraced in that long act has some provision, which I assume (and if I was called upon to vote I should certainly so vote) that the Senator from Maine or any other Senator has a right to offer any amendment to, it being germane to that subject. But as to instructing him in parliamentary law, I do not profess to be able to do it.

Mr. BLAINE. The admission of the Senator from Kentucky is that we have the right now. Of course we have no right to offer an amendment to anything that is not read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BECK. The whole bill is read.

Mr. BLAINE. No, not this bill. You have read a section which includes all these numerous pages, all these hundreds of paragraphs, all these thousands of lines. Now, if I want to move an amendment to a particular paragraph, can I do that by a blank shot in the air, by something that if I had defined it for my satisfaction the Senate is not acquainted with? The presumption is that we have things read at the Secretary's desk; that which is pending before the Senate for consideration is read, and then an amendment thereto is in order. Now when we come to legislate in this most extraordinary back-door fashion about the details and all the minutiæ of a great appropriation bill, how am I to know where to put in an amendment? How is anybody to know? How will the honorable Senator from Kentucky suggest that we get out of this? I do not know whether the appropriations of last year were right or not. The honorable Senator from Alabama seems to be willing to take them because a republican Senate agreed to them. I am not so ready to take them because a democratic House suggested them.

Mr. HOUSTON rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HOUSTON. The Senator will allow me to state that I expressly said the contrary of that.

Mr. BLAINE. What was it the honorable Senator said?

Mr. HOUSTON. I said expressly that the fact that the last Congress had adopted it was not a recommendation to me.

Mr. BLAINE. Was it a doubt to the Senator as to its propriety?

Mr. HOUSTON. I answered the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] and if the Senator from Maine had paid attention—I do not blame him for not doing so—he would have heard what I said. I answered fully to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BLAINE. But I shall not have the benefit of that until to-morrow's RECORD.

Mr. HOUSTON. As far as I understand the question submitted now to the Senator from Kentucky, I understand that any of these items of appropriation may be stricken out or reduced.

Mr. BLAINE. But the items have not even been read. The honorable Senator from Alabama will observe that not one of these items has even been read.

Mr. HOUSTON. They can be read if the Senator desires to have them read.

Mr. BLAINE. The whole of this great bill?

Mr. HOUSTON. In a great bill or a small bill. A bill before the Senate may be read either in whole or in part as the Senate desires. If the Senator calls for the reading of any part of it, or proposes to amend any part of it, he has the right to propose an amendment and the Senate will vote upon it.

Mr. BLAINE. Then do I understand, Mr. President, if the Senator from Alabama is correct, that I have the right to call for the reading of the entire bill of last year? We have just now enacted by the first section of this bill from the House that the entire bill of last year is to become the law for the next year. Now, is it in order to call for the reading of the entire bill—I submit that point to the honorable Presiding Officer—with a view of having it before the Senate for amendment?

Mr. BECK. As a question of order, I have never doubted the right to have the bill for the current year read.

Mr. BLAINE. What for? What I want to get at is this: if we cause that bill to be read, is it read for legislative purposes? For if so, according to our usage, as we go over each individual paragraph, that becomes law. I do not want to go through the blank motions of having it read through for the mere sake of debate. If I can have it read for amendment, I will call for it.

Mr. BECK. I want to ask one question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Senator from Maine call for the reading of the items to which he referred?

Mr. BLAINE. I call for the ruling of the Chair upon the point of order whether I have the right to call for the reading of this whole bill? I do not want anything that is not my right. Then I want the Chair to take in the scope of the whole question. I am not asking that the bill be read arguendo or for information or debate, but read for amendment as a pending bill. That is my point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine, then, does not call for the reading of the items in the different bills referred to; he simply wishes to know whether he has the right to demand their reading.

Mr. BLAINE. Whether I have the right so as that the right of amendment will attach to the whole of that which is included in the first clause?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would submit to the Senator from Maine that the better course to pursue would be to offer some amendment; then the question would come up directly for the consideration of the Chair and the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now I will ask the Senator from Maine whether he has any amendment of any kind whatever that he wishes to propose?

Mr. BLAINE. I may have twenty. That is not a pertinent question; nor, with all due respect to the Chair, was the ruling that I asked for responded to by the Chair. I want to know whether these items are before the Senate for amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will respond to the Senator from Maine that it does not seem to him that he is called upon to decide a mere hypothetical or abstract question. If the Senator from Maine will submit an amendment the Chair will give the best decision he is capable of.

Mr. BLAINE. I move an amendment under the head of "Senate" in the item:

For hire of horses and mail-wagons for carrying the mails, $3,500.

I move to make that $3,600.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. What line does the Senator move the amendment in?

Mr. BLAINE. That is a part of your bill. That is a part of the bill we are called upon in this general wholesale statute to enact. I prefer $3,600 to $3,500.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. For what?

Mr. BLAINE. For the hire of mail-wagons for carrying the mails. The Senator ought not to ask me where to find that; that is in his bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, no; I did not ask the Senator frm Maine that. I did ask the Senator from Maine what was his amendment. Now, the Senator from Maine knows well if he has got an amendment in reality to offer to this bill there will be no objection to his doing it. If he means to consume time and to see what he can do to have a case decided that there is nothing in, he can do so. I repeat that there is nothing in it except that he wants to make a case. If the Senator will offer to any portion of this bill an amendment that means business, to use a common phrase, let him do so. If it is simply to consume the time of the Senate, of course he has a right to do it; and he might just as well ask to have the whole bill of last year read, and then it would be a matter for the Senate to decide whether it should be read or not.

Mr. BLAINE. But why have I not the right to have it read? That is what I ask.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Maine indicate where upon this bill the amendment will come in so that the Secretary can take it down?

Mr. BLAINE. It comes into this first section of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What line and page?

Mr. BLAINE. That I do not know. It is impossible for me to tell. That is what I am after. I am seeking information.

Mr. BECK. I ask the Senator from Maine to allow me to make a suggestion. There has been a sort of consent given that we should go through with the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Maine being a member of that committee. After we pass upon them, the whole bill and every section and clause of it will be open to all amendments the Senator from Maine and every other Senator may propose. Should we not make progress by acting first on the amendments of the committee?

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator appeals to me for that courtesy, I shall not obstruct it. This will be in order afterward.

Mr. BECK. As far as I am concerned, I shall not object to any amendment being offered that is in order.

Mr. BLAINE. I did not understand the honorable Senator from West Virginia to reflect on my motives in wanting $100 more for the mail-carrying of the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator knows it very well.

Mr. BLAINE. I will reserve this point until after the Senator from Kentucky is obliged by having the committee's amendments acted on.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Maine knows the habit of the Senate. Whether there is a rule or not, it is usual to go through the committee's amendments first.

Mr. BLAINE. But it is not usual. If the honorable Senator asks me what is the usage in the Senate, this has got so far outside of the soundings of the usage of the Senate that you can apply nothing to it. Here are forty or fifty pages put into nineteen lines so that the whole of them is re-enacted. Then I got up and moved an amendment to a certain portion of that, and I am met on the one hand by those who have charge of the bill asking me where I mean it to come in. That is for them to answer. The idea of the Senator having charge of the bill with a distinct line of appropriation in it asking where that item is to be found! He ought to tell us where it is to be found.

Mr. WINDOM. As I understand the Senator from Maine he is proposing to perfect the paragraph.

Mr. BLAINE. I am proposing to perfect this paragraph; but still I am not disposed to interfere with the courteous request of the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Chief Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, beginning at line 47 of section 1. The Committee on Appropriations proposed an amendment in line 48, before the word "section," to strike out "the foregoing" and insert "this;" so as to read:

And no more than the sums herein stated respectively are appropriated under this section for the following purposes, to wit: For the State Department: "For fuel," $3,000; "for light," $2,000.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky. Here is the practical trouble we meet with: does the clause in lines 49 and 50 amend the law of 1878 when we pass this:

For the State Department:
For fuel, $3,000; for light, $2,000.

Does that change the law of 1878, and how am I to know whether it does or not? What does it refer to? How can I tell whether that is a change of the old law or a mere re-enactment of the old law? I cannot for my life find out. If that is no change of the law of 1878 there is no need of any inquiry, but if it is a change of the law we ought to know what the law is and how we are changing it.

Mr. WALLACE. In the former appropriation bill there were $6,000 appropriated for fuel in the State Department. To restrain and reduce that amount from $6,000 to $3,000 these words are found here.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Where is that?

Mr. WALLACE. I have it on page 7 of the law for the current year under the head of "Department of State:"

For contingent expenses, namely, for fuel, $6,000.

The object of this clause here is to limit that down to $3,000; and in the vetoed bill which I hold in my hand, agreed to by both Houses, on page 19, line 444, under the head of "State Department," you will find:

For contingent expenses, namely, for fuel, $3,000.

That sum being all that the Department requires, all that is in the vetoed bill. For some reason or other they are now able to get along with $3,000, and do not desire any more. Therefore as the House were adopting substantially the bill of last year, where they found an item like that where the State Department only asked $3,000 for fuel and where in the vetoed bill both Houses had given $3,000, they had to amend it so as to limit it down to $3,000.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am not objecting to the reduction at all. The only point I am making is, how am I to know from reading this bill before the Senate what change it makes in the old law?

Mr. BECK. I am obliged to say that there is no way whereby the Senator from Iowa can distinctly understand it without having the old law before him. I desire to say further that the amendment which I drew, one of its purposes being to reproduce the law, is the old law except as changed by the amendments of the House and Senate.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish you would substitute it for this.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at line 51 of section 1, and continued to line 84, as follows:

For the Treasury Department: "For carpets, oil-cloth, and matting, and repairs, cleaning, and laying the same," $7,000; "for the additional duties imposed upon the Bureau of Statistics by the legislation of the second session of the Forty-third Congress," $8,800; "for purchase of new plants and seeds for green-house, Agricultural Department," $600.

And certain clauses in said act of June 19, 1878, are amended as follows:

Under heading of "Senate," the clause commencing "For eight skilled laborers" is amended by striking out therefrom the name "Kate Dodson" and inserting in lieu thereof "female attendant."

Under the head of "contingent expenses of the Senate" the following clauses, namely: The clause commencing "For twenty-seven clerks to committees" is amended so as to read "for twenty-five clerks to committees," and the sum of the clause shall read "$31,800;" the clause commencing "For fourteen pages for the Senate Chamber" is amended by striking out the words "one page for the Vice-President's room," and the sum of the clause shall read "$10,265;" the clause commencing "For fuel and oil for the heating apparatus" is amended by striking out the words "and of this amount not exceeding $400 may be used for the purchase of platform-scales for weighing coal."

Under the heading "House of Representatives," the clause commencing "for eight messengers" is hereby amended by striking out therefrom the name "Henry Douglas;" the clause among the contingent expenses for the House of Representatives, commencing "for twenty-one clerks to committees" is amended so as to read, for thirty-five clerks, and the sum of the clause shall read $44,100.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish the attention of the Senator from Kentucky a moment. I find in lines 66 and 67 the number of clerks of committees in the Senate decreased from twenty-seven to twenty-five, and in lines 81, 82, and 83 the number of clerks of committees in the House is increased from twenty-one to thirty-five. What is the reason of the change in both cases?

Mr. BECK. The first question, relative to the clerks of committees of the Senate, the reduction being from twenty-seven to twenty-five, is rendered necessary because we have made permanent clerks to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and the Committee on Military Affairs. Therefore they are taken from that list and added to the other. Some of the other little amendments were necessary because Henry Douglas is dead, and it is thought best to have no names in. The House in rearranging its committees came to the conclusion that they needed more clerks of committees than they had, and in the bill of the last session and in the vetoed bill that change was made, the House having proposed it. It appeared to the committee of the Senate and to the Senate that they needed that many clerks. Therefore we restored it simply to the form it was in the vetoed bill at the request of the House. That is all, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading, beginning after the word "dollars" in line 84, and continued to line 90 of section 1, as follows:

The clause commencing "twenty-eight pages" is amended to read twenty-nine, and the sum of the clause shall read $15,865; the clause "for fuel and oil for the heating apparatus" is amended to include, also, and for steam-pump and condenser for same; and the clause "for miscellaneous items" is amended to read, $75,000.

Mr. BECK. I move, by instruction of the committee, to strike out "five," in line 90, so as to read, "'for miscellaneous items,' is amended to read, '$70,000,'" instead of $75,000. I desire to state the object I have in moving the amendment. Several of the members of the House, both of the Committee on Appropriations and others, have advised the Senate committee that they have made some mistake relative to their own affairs, their miscellaneous expenses and other things; and while we do not care to disturb anything they have done and do not know exactly how to amend it, we propose to make an amendment by striking out the word "five," so as to give them control of that item in order that they can make the correction they desire. If we do not amend it they will not be able to do so. I move the amendment for the purpose of keeping it under the control of the House to make such corrections as they think they ought to make in regard to their contingent expenses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment moved by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Before we pass from the expenditures of the Senate and House, I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky, having charge of this bill, whether or not sufficient provision has been made to cover the additional expenses required because of the difference in the length of the sessions. The bill that we are re-enacting provides for a three months' session of Congress, and we are enacting a law providing for a seven months' session of Congress. The Senator from Maine awhile ago proposed an amendment as to the cost of transporting the mails for the Senate, which item I find on digging it out—I have had to send for several books in order to do it—we have for the short session appropriated $3,500, while it has been the habit to appropriate $5,000 for the long session. I see in looking at the estimates for the next year that the sum of $5,000 is estimated for the next year. I only want to know whether the Senator who has charge of this bill and who has been so industrious in preparing a substitute, has carefully examined whether we are making sufficient provision for a long session of Congress as compared with a short one covered by the bill which we are re-enacting.

Mr. BECK. I can say that the subject was carefully considered, and all the provisions necessary for a seven months' session, instead of four, have been inserted in this bill. At page 7, line 37 of section 2, is the clause "for miscellaneous items, $20,000," for the Senate; that much more has been given by the House for the Senate miscellaneous expenses, and so the House have increased their own. The subject of the increased length of the session to be provided for, seven months instead of four, has been considered in the respective items of this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that the "miscellaneous items" have been provided for, but now take the item for mail-wagons for the short and long session; I only want to know if the Senator from Kentucky has carefully examined to see whether or not the appropriation of last year for a three months' session is sufficient for a seven months' session?

Mr. BECK. I desire to say to the Senator from Iowa that we very carefully examined the bill known as the vetoed bill, in which those things are all provided for. The items in this bill now correspond exactly with those in the vetoed bill except where the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House each assured us that there were some additional expenses rendered necessary that we had not provided for in that, and those are added.

Mr. ALLISON. I ought to apologize, then, to the Senator from Kentucky, because I have before me the appropriations for a long session and the appropriations for a short session and the amended bill and the vetoed bill, and digging among all those bills I was unable to answer for myself whether or not these items had been provided for, and therefore I was compelled to ask the Senator the question.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the honorable Senator from Kentucky tell me by whose order or warrant the "miscellaneous items, $20,000," can be drawn? How does he, in other words, apply that to the extra demand the Senator from Iowa suggests will be needed for mail carriage during the long session? I do not find in the regular bill upon which this is modeled, under the head of "Senate," any "miscellaneous items." How will a strict auditing officer be willing to say, when in one part of the bill you have put $3,500 for mail-wagons and made a specific appropriation for it, that this $20,000 for miscellaneous items is in any way applicable to that?

Mr. BECK. Oh, no. If the Senator from Maine understood me as saying that, he misunderstood me, or I did not make myself plain. I did not understand the Senator from Iowa to be specifically asking me about any one item.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes, he asked about the mail-wagons that I moved an amendment on.

Mr. BECK. In the bill for the current year, which has not been changed in this respect, there is a provision for mail-wagons of $5,000. It has not been increased, because we are advised that it is not necessary to increase it, there being a surplus of that fund at the short session, and no request that that particular item should be increased.

Mr. ALLISON. Five thousand dollars for the present year, does the Senator say?

Mr. BLAINE. In the law for the present year:

For hire of horses and mail-wagons for carrying the mails, $3,500.

Mr. BECK. I hold in my hand the act of June 19, 1878:

For hire of horses and mail-wagons for carrying the mails, $5,000.

On page 5 of the act.

Mr. BLAINE. I hold in my hand the regular edition of the United States Statutes, published under authority of the State Department, containing the executive, legislative, and judicial bill approved June 19, 1878, and that contains this item:

For hire of horses and mail-wagons for carrying the mails, $3,500.

And the next item is:

For materials for folding, $4,000.

Under the head of "Senate."

Mr. BECK. The inquiry was about the House.

Mr. BLAINE. No; we will let the House take care of themselves. We are talking about the Senate.

Mr. BECK. The amount for the House was $5,000.

Mr. BLAINE. That is another thing.

Mr. BECK. At the bottom of page 2 of the law I find that it is $3,500 for the Senate, and on page 5 it is $5,000 for the House.

Mr. BLAINE. That $3,500 was for a short session. More is obviously needed for a long session. We are now appropriating for the next long session of seven months against a short session of three months.

Mr. BECK. In the vetoed bill which the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Maine and others considered very carefully, on page 6, lines 122, 123, and 124, I find:

For hire of horses and mail-wagons for carrying the mails, $3,500.

Mr. BLAINE. That must have been copied by mistake.

Mr. BECK. So as to the House, it appropriates $5,000 for that. Those items were both in the vetoed bill. The present bill is precisely the same.

Mr. BLAINE. That must be a mistake, because obviously a larger sum is needed.

Mr. BECK. I understand from the Sergeant-at-Arms that he regards that sum as being amply sufficient for the purpose. He was before us and endeavored to show us how by a certain arrangement made at the post-office he is able to have the work done quite satisfactorily at that price. It was looked at and there is no mistake about it. It was so both in the vetoed bill and this bill. I do not care about going into the details, how the Sergeant-at-Arms is doing it, but he satisfied the committee and is satisfied himself with the amount allowed him for this purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. I find that in the miscellaneous items of the House there is inserted $75,000 which has been amended to $70,000 by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BECK. I am not proposing to take that $5,000 from them.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that. I have in my hand the law for a long session corresponding to this period, and I find only $25,000 appropriated for these items two years ago. Can the Senator from Kentucky give me any information as to the necessity for this large increase as compared with the bill of two years ago?

Mr. BECK. I cannot give any accurate information as to the wants of the House. Some years large numbers of carpets have to be bought, furniture to be repaired, and a variety of things have to be done. Those matters go before the Committee on Accounts. My attention is now called to the fact that while only $25,000 was allowed for "miscellaneous items" two years ago, there was a deficiency of $30,000 for that same year appropriated, making $55,000 instead of $25,000. I have not the deficiency bill before me. It may be that this money may be required for a variety of things. If the Hall requires carpeting, that is quite an expensive item. There are many other things that I cannot stop to specify. We have to leave these matters very much to the House.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree to that, and the explanation of the Senator from Kentucky is quite satisfactory. I only call attention to the fact that when these appropriations were made in 1877 it was said that there was a large reduction of the expenses of the House of Representatives. I am glad to be reminded now that although they appropriated only $25,000 for miscellaneous contingent expenses, they were obliged to have a deficiency of $30,000, so that it was in fact no real reduction in the expenditures of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading at line 91 of section 1, and continued to line 101; as follows:

And the last clause under heading "Department of State" is amended to read as follows: For expenses of editing and distributing the laws enacted at the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress, and for editing and distributing the Statutes at Large, $5,000.

And the clause under heading "Library of Congress," in said act, is amended as follows: In lieu of the number named it shall read twenty-one assistant librarians, and in lieu of "two" there shall be five assistants at $1,200 each; and the total sum of the clause shall read, $33,240.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish the attention of the Senator from Kentucky a moment. If I understand the change made in the law of 1878 by this clause it increases the number of assistant librarians from fifteen to twenty-one. Am I correct?

Mr. BECK. There were additional librarians added in the sundry civil bill; and there is really no increase here. This puts together all those that were in the legislative bill and in the sundry civil bill. When added together they amount to this number.

Mr. ALLISON. I can further answer my colleague that we have added three additional assistant librarians at the present session of Congress.

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir; on the request of Mr. Spofford and on motion of the Library Committee.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. There is another feature of this that I want to call attention to for a moment. On the face of the bill it increases the number of assistant librarians at $2,150 and the number of assistants at $1,200.

Mr. BECK. Three were added by special law at this session.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. But the sum total, as provided for in the clause, is $33,240. The amount in the old bill was $29,000, and if you add the salaries of these six assistant librarians it is much beyond the amount of $33,240.

Mr. BECK. The three assistant librarians, making $3,600, added to the $29,640, make the sum of $32,240.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Where comes in the pay for the other six at $2,150 each?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The bill that passed the Senate increasing the number by three had an appropriation in it to pay them.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Then these six are paid for elsewhere. If that was not so, there evidently would be a deficiency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill from line 102 to the word "read," in line 109 of section 1, as follows:

And under the "Independent Treasury" heading, the last two clauses are amended as follows: In lieu of the sum stated for "checks and check-books," it shall read "$10,000;" and in lieu of the sum stated "for contingent expenses," it shall read "$40,000."

And the clause commencing "General Land Office: For the Commissioner," &c., is amended as follows: In lieu of the number named, it shall read:

The Committee on Appropriations proposed in line 109, after the words "it shall read," to insert "five principal clerks at $1,800 each;" so as to read:

And the clause commencing "General Land Office: For the Commissioner," &c., is amended as follows: In lieu of the number named, it shall read, five principal clerks, at $1,800 each; six clerks of class 4; in lieu of the number named, it shall read, eighty clerks of class 1; in lieu of the number named, it shall read, thirty clerks of class $1,000, and nine copyists at $900 each; in lieu of the number named, it shall read, nine assistant messengers; in lieu of the number named, it shall read, twelve laborers; and in lieu of the number named, it shall read, six packers; and the total sum of the clause shall correspond in amount to the change.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 118, after the words "shall correspond in amount to the change," to insert:

And the sums of money necessary to carry out the foregoing amendments are hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill from line 1 to line 25 of section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. For salaries of certain offices created by acts of 1879, and for certain expenses rendered necessary by the removal of the offices of the War Department and of the Navy Department, and for matters heretofore provided for in other acts, and for the mints and assay offices, and for other purposes, the following additional sums are hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

For two messengers in the House library, at $3.60 per day, $2,635.20; and one additional engineer, $1,200.

For messenger to the Speaker, $1,200.

For laborer in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, $660.

For the person preparing the general index to the Journals of Congress under resolution of June 18, 1878, $2,500.

For the journal clerk for preparing Digest of the Rules, $1,000.

For five folders in the folding-room, $3,600.

Mr. BECK. At that point we are advised of mistakes made by the House and for the purpose of giving them jurisdiction so as to enable them to correct them I move to strike out "six hundred," so as to read:

For five folders in the folding-room, $3,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question. I notice by the bill that the House have appropriated $14,000 for folding documents by the present law which we are re-enacting, as against $4,000 for the Senate.

Mr. BECK. That is for materials.

Mr. ALLISON. "For materials for folding, $14,000."

Mr. BECK. That is it.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, "For labor in folding books, &c., $15,600." I find for the same thing in the Senate that we have only $4,000. My recollection is that in both the House and the Senate items we have already appropriated deficiencies for the current year. It seems to me that there is quite as much necessity for increasing the amount in the Senate as there is in the House. I cannot understand why the House should have five additional folders in the folding-room unless there is some additional appropriation required for materials. If that is a separate appropriation, I cannot quite understand it.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, as has been said again and again, the effort has been all along to bring this bill as closely as possible to the bill agreed upon by the two Houses heretofore. I do not think quite as often agreed upon as the Senator from New York said this morning. I hold in my hand the vetoed bill that was considered carefully. I believe the Senator from Iowa helped to consider it with great care. On line 125 of that bill, in providing for the Senate, is this item:

For materials for folding, $4,000.

And on page 13, line 287, for the House of Representatives:

For materials for folding, $14,000.

So these items here are precisely as they stand in the vetoed bill and were agreed to in the bill of last year.

Mr. ALLISON. But that does not cover the point. I find here $15,600 appropriated in the present bill, which is re-enacted, for folding books, speeches, and pamphlets, &c., in the House of Representatives, and the items are in detail. Now I find here that they ask in addition for five folders in the folding-room, $3,600 more. If that is in the vetoed bill, that is a law to me of course; but I do not quite understand how these expenses in the House of Representatives can go so far beyond the corresponding expenditures in the Senate.

Mr. BECK. I am not prepared to answer exactly why it is, and I am rather glad that the Senator should get up here and be able to complain of some extravagance on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. Oh, no; not that.

Mr. BECK. For we have suffered complaints enough from the other end.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not complain on that ground. I only want to know why it is that so much is required for the House of Representatives. I think there must be some mistake about it.

Mr. BECK. We have made it correspond with the vetoed bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, we see here "five folders" in addition. Is that an addition to what we had in the vetoed bill? That is the point I desire information upon.

Mr. BECK. No, sir; it is just the same, you will observe. They had twenty folders in that bill. There are only fifteen in the bill of last year.

Mr. ALLISON. But I am not speaking of the number of folders; I am speaking of the cost of folding.

Mr. BECK. You will observe in the bill you hold in your hand they have fifteen laborers, and in the vetoed bill twenty laborers, so that the House itself increased their force, which added of course the price of five more laborers, together with some other items, bringing up the total.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky to strike out "six hundred" after the words "three thousand" in line 24 of section 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill at line 26 of section 2, and continued the reading to the end of line 37, as follows:

SENATE.

For clerk to Committee on Military Affairs and for clerk to Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, at $2,220 each.

For assistant clerk to Committee on Appropriations, $1,200.

For clerk to the Sergeant-at-Arms, $2,000.

For messenger to the Vice-President's room, to be appointed by the Vice-President, $1,440.

For miscellaneous items, $20,000.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 37 of section 2, to insert:

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

To enable the Joint Committee on the Library to purchase works of art, $5,000.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky if that has any particular work in view, and, if so, what it is?

Mr. BECK. The Committee on the Library, acting through their chairman, came before the Senate and passed this item in the other bill, the Senate voting for it almost unanimously. There is no appropriation for the current year for that at all; they had $15,000 last year; and thinking they ought to have some fund, the Senate by an almost unanimous vote gave it to them. So we put it back.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill at line 41, and continued the reading to the word "Europe" in line 48 of section 2, as follows:

STATE DEPARTMENT.

That the sum of $4,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of printing 15,000 copies of the letter of the Secretary of State, with consular reports showing the rates of wages, hours of labor, prices of food, the general condition of the working classes in the several countries of Europe.

The Committee on Appropriations proposed after the word "Europe" to strike out the words "and the comparative advantages derived from citizenship of this Republic" and to insert "to be available immediately;" so as to read:

That the sum of $4,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of printing 15,000 copies of the letter of the Secretary of State, with consular reports showing the rates of wages, hours of labor, prices of food, the general condition of the working classes in the several countries of Europe, to be available immediately.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 51, before the word "remonetization," to insert the word "international;" so as to make the clause read:

For negotiation with foreign governments with a view to the international remonetization of silver, to be expended in the discretion of the President, $20,000; and an account of the expenditure thereof shall be submitted to the Congress that meets December, 1880.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill at line 55, and continued the reading to the end of line 56 of section 2, as follows:

For Third Assistant Secretary of State, $3,500.

The next amendment was, in section 2, to strike out lines 57, 58, and 59 of section 2, in the following words:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

For salary of an associate judge in the Territory of Dakota, $2,600;

and to insert as line 60:

JUDICIAL.

Mr. BECK. That item is inserted afterward in the appropriate place.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, at line 61 of section 2, and read to the end of line 64, as follows:

For associate judge of the supreme court in the District of Columbia, $4,000.

For a district judge for the northern district in Texas, $3,500.

The next amendment was, after line 64 of section 2, to insert:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Secretary's Office:

For five female clerks, at $900, $4,500.

First Comptroller of the Treasury:

For one clerk of class 4, $1,800.

For one clerk of class 4, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 72 and continued to the end of line 115 of section 2, as follows:

For one skilled laborer in the office of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, $1,000.

Office of Life-Saving Service: For General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, $4,000; assistant general superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, $2,500; one principal clerk and accountant, $1,800; two clerks of class 3; one clerk of class 2; one clerk of class 1; one clerk, $1,000; four clerks, at $900 each; one assistant messenger, $720; in all, $19,420.

The next amendment was, after line 115 of section 2, to insert:

GOVERNMENT IN THE TERRITORIES.

For salary of an associate judge in the Territory of Dakota, $2,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 119, and continued to line 128 of section 2, as follows:

"For legislative expenses," for the biennial year, in the following-named Territories respectively:

For the Territory of New Mexico, $18,683.90.

For the Territory of Utah, $15,600.

For the Territory of Washington, $15,800.

For the Territory of Wyoming, $15,460.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 128 of section 2, to insert:

Office of Depositary at Tucson, Arizona:

For depositary, in addition to his pay as postmaster, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 132, and continued to the end of line 163 of section 2, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

in the new State, War, and Navy Department building, at $180 per annum each, $1,440.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Office of the Secretary of the Interior:

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 164, to insert "one stenographer, $1,800," and, in line 166, to strike out the words "six thousand seven" and insert "eight thousand five;" so as to read:

Office of the Secretary of the Interior:
For one stenographer, $1,800; two clerks of class 4, two clerks of class 1, and one assistant messenger, $8,520.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 168, and continued to the end of line 169 of section 2, as follows:

For casual repairs of the building, $5,000.
For stationery, $5,000.

The next amendment was, after line 169 of section 2, in the appropriations for the Interior Department, to insert:

Office of Assistant Attorney-General:
For three clerks, at $2,000 each; and one clerk, at $1,200; in all, $7,200.

Indian Office:

Patent Office:
For fourteen copyists, ten assistant messengers, and two folders and pasters, at $480 each; in all, $20,760.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. Perhaps it would be well to put upon record a short letter from the Secretary of the Interior, showing the necessity for those items. I send the letter to the desk.

The letter was read, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, June 6, 1879.

SIR: I learn incidentally that the new legislative, executive, and judicial bill does not contain the items of increase as provided in the previous bill with regard to the Interior Department.

Without that increase, it will be absolutely impossible for this Department to keep pace with its current business, to say nothing of the large amount of matter that has been pending and accumulating in some branches for years, notwithstanding that work has been diligently prosecuted day and night.

The increase seems therefore imperatively necessary.

I make this appeal in the interest of the people who must suffer because of the lack of force in this Department, and not because of lack of effort on the part of the employés at present permitted by law.

Very respectfully, &c.,

C. SCHURZ, Secretary.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill at line 182, and read to the end of section 2, as follows:

Pension Office:
For compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, $3,600; deputy commissioner, $2,400, said office to continue for one year only; chief clerk, $2,000; medical referee, $2,250; twenty-six clerks of class 4; fifty-two clerks of class 3; eighty-four clerks of class 2; one hundred and forty-seven clerks of class 1; ten clerks, at $1,000 each; one skilled mechanic, at $1,200; thirty copyists, at $900 each; one engineer, at $1,200; one assistant engineer, at $1,000; one messenger and twelve assistant messengers; and for eight laborers and two watchmen; in all, $489,350; this being in lieu of the paragraph of the same nature in the act of 1878, which is not continued and rendered available. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to rent such buildings as may be necessary from time to time for the purpose of the census, the total expenditure not to exceed $25,000, to be paid from the amount authorized to be expended by section 20 of act of March 3, 1879, census act; also to enable him to provide offices for the Geological Survey, and offices for additional accommodation of pension clerks, $3,000.

Under the Architect of the Capitol:
For person in charge of heating apparatus of the Congressional Library and Supreme Court, $864; for one laborer in charge of water-closet in central portion of the Capitol, $660; for three laborers for cleaning rotunda, corridors, and dome, at $660 each; for the pay of six watchmen employed on the Capitol grounds, at $720 each; in all, $7,824.

Office of Auditor of Railroad Accounts:

Section 3 was read, as follows:

SEC. 3. That sections 4771, 4772, and 4773 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, providing for biennial examinations of pensioners, are hereby repealed: Provided, That the Commissioner of Pensions shall have the same power as heretofore to order special examinations whenever, in his judgment, the same may be necessary, and to increase or reduce the pension according to right and justice; but in no case shall a pension be withdrawn or reduced except upon notice to the pensioner and a hearing upon sworn testimony, except as to the certificate of the examining surgeon. In order to provide for the speedy payment of arrearages of pensions, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue immediately in payment thereof, as they may be adjusted, the legal-tender currency, now in the United States Treasury, held as a special fund for the redemption of fractional currency under section 1 of joint resolution No. 17 of the Congress of the United States, approved July 22, 1876; and fractional currency presented for redemption shall be redeemed in any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next section will be read.

Mr. ALLISON. As that section has already been read, and I think it is well understood by the Senate, I ask unanimous consent to waive the reading of it.

Mr. WITHERS. Let the amendment of the committee striking it out be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out section 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read section [5] 4, as follows:

SEC. [5] 4. That the pay of assistant messengers, firemen, watchmen, and laborers provided for in this act, unless otherwise specially stated in particular cases in the act of June 19, 1878, which it continues and makes available, (except as declared in the first section of this act,) shall be as follows: For assistant messengers, firemen, and watchmen, $720 per annum each; for laborers, $660 per annum each; and a sufficient amount to meet the provisions of this section is hereby appropriated.

Mr. BLAINE. I have no objection to that section, although I think it will take a decision of the Supreme Court to pay those firemen.

Mr. BECK. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer three amendments to come in on page 5 at the end of line 106 of section 1:

And the clause "for contingent expenses in the office of the Adjutant-General" is amended so that the sum named therein shall read $8,000.

I merely desire to say that in the bill for the current year it is $9,000; in the vetoed bill and in the action before it has been put at $8,000. The committee propose to correspond with those.

Mr. DAWES. If that is the meaning, the Senator has been unfortunate in the phraseology. I should like to hear it read again.

The amendment was read.

Mr. DAWES. What does that clause refer to; what clause in this bill?

Mr. BECK. A clause in the act for the current fiscal year; which now reads:

For contingent expenses, $9,000.

We amend it to read "$8,000."

Mr. DAWES. A clause in the statute? That clause in the statute is amended to read "$8,000;" but what is going to be done with the clause in this bill?

Mr. BECK. The Senator will observe on page 5 there are a number of amendments.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator will get my meaning if he will allow me to go on. I suppose he means that so far as this bill is concerned it will be the same as if this clause was $8,000 instead of $9,000.

Mr. BECK. That is what it means.

Mr. DAWES. I supposed that was the meaning of it; and without branching off into the discussion that the Senator has been engaged in, it seems to me the Senator has not chosen proper language. It should be that so far as this act is concerned it shall be the same as if that clause in that statute was "eight" instead of "nine;" but this simply says that clause in that statute shall be "eight" instead of "nine." That is not the meaning.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Massachusetts will observe that on page 3, lines 58 to 60, after enacting the existing law, the bill provides:

And certain clauses in said act of June 19, 1878, are amended as follows:
Under heading of "Senate."

And so on, "under heading 'Library of Congress;'" "under the 'Independent Treasury' heading;" &c.

Mr. DAWES. I observed that, and I want to call attention to that phraseology. That amends the statute, and probably from this time out while that statute is in force that statute will be in force so amended, affecting the appropriations for the present year. That is not, as I understand it, what the committee mean. The committee mean to modify, so far as this statute is concerned, that phraseology, but they do not mean to impair the enactment for the current fiscal year.

Mr. BECK. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts offer an amendment?

Mr. DAWES. No; I only make the suggestion. I do not suggest it to add to any of the difficulties.

Mr. BECK. We believe, as it corresponds with all the other clauses, that it accomplishes the purpose as the language is now written. If it does not, I suppose the bill will get to a conference and we shall try to correct it. I believe it will accomplish the purpose; it seems to correspond with the other language.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not rise now for any captious purpose at all. Does not the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts attach to a great many of the clauses of this bill? Let me call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to a clause beginning in line 102:

And under the "Independent Treasury" heading, the last two clauses are amended as follows: In lieu of the sum stated for "checks and check-books," it shall read $10,000; and in lieu of the sum stated "for contingent expenses," it shall read $40,000.

Does not that obviously change the law of this year? Does not that prevent the Auditor who settles that account for this year going one step beyond the amount herein named?

Mr. BECK. I think not.

Mr. BLAINE. I submit that to the legal gentlemen of the Senate.

Mr. BECK. The Senator will observe that the bill is enacted—

For the purpose of providing for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same sums of money and for the like purposes (and continuing the same provisions relating thereto) as were appropriated—by the act for the current fiscal year, subject to certain conditions and limitations. In making the appropriations for the next fiscal year we so far change and modify the provisions of the existing law as is here stated. They are amended not as bearing on the current fiscal year at all, but for the next fiscal year.

Mr. DAWES. That is without doubt what the Senator intends by his phraseology; but I suggest to him that he exposes every officer who is acting under the existing law now to the charge that he is violating the law from this time down. When he amends it he amends it without confining the effect of his amendment to the law for the coming year, but he amends it as to its application to the current year.

Mr. BECK. I have no objection to making it clearer by saying "on and after the 1st day of July next."

Mr. BLAINE. But would not that apply to all the auditing? Will not the honorable Senator say "to the accounts that are not closed?" and the accounts are not closed until after the fiscal year has expired for some time. Every auditing officer would be compelled to arrest the expenditures according to the law of the last amendment, and every one of these amendments affects directly the meaning of the existing law for this current fiscal year.

Mr. BECK. Does not the Senator see that the very object and purpose of this law is to make appropriations for the next fiscal year, beginning on the 1st day of July next? It says so on its face. It only modifies the present provisions of existing law so far as they bear upon the appropriations herein contained, and for no other purpose.

Mr. BLAINE. If the honorable Senator will permit me, he will see that his answer does not attach, because, though the fact is that this is a bill making appropriations for the next fiscal year, much other legislation may exist in it. We have a great deal of other legislation in bills appropriating money; we have independent legislation. That is what we have been having a contest on all winter. Now, among the legislation here that is not in this appropriation bill are these special clauses changing the provisions of last year's appropriation bill, and the Senator from Kentucky must see that these independent clauses in connection with this bill change the whole intent and meaning and the sums of money applicable thereto in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I think there is very great force in what the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Maine say; because on page 3 I find:

And certain clauses in said act of June 19, 1878, are amended as follows.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. For the next year.

Mr. DAWES. But those clauses become, after this bill passes, just as if they read as here amended.

Mr. ALLISON. We have a great deal of legislation in this bill, necessarily now. We go on and make specific appropriations by reference to the last law, and then we especially and distinctly amend that law. I submit to the Senator from Kentucky having charge of this bill, that that clause ought to be amended in some form, so as to avoid the objection made by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BLAINE. Take this other language:

Under the head of contingent expenses of the Senate, the following clauses—

That is in last year's bill—

namely: The clause commencing "for twenty-seven clerks to committees" is amended so as to read for twenty-five clerks to committees, and the sum of the clause shall read $31,800.

Now, how in the world is any auditing officer in the Treasury Department to allow more than that $31,800 for that clause of this year's bill? It says distinctly that it is amended to read so. I would ask the Senator from West Virginia if he intended to give that precise effect and meaning the language would imply?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator should recollect that this bill is making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and, therefore, says so.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. And it applies to 1880.

Mr. BLAINE. But in that bill you change certain clauses in the act for 1879, and you do it specifically, and you say that whereas the act of 1879 did read "for twenty-seven clerks," it shall now read "for twenty-five," and the appropriation is hereby changed to fit that. I ask the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER,] whose legal acumen I have great respect for, if that is not the inevitable construction?

Mr. WALLACE. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to suggest that if we should amend, on line 59, after the word "amended," by inserting "for the purposes of the next fiscal year and none other," it would cover the whole point suggested?

Mr. BLAINE. Then the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania means that in every clause liable to this objection which the Senator from Massachusetts suggested, and which I have applied to other places, you shall say at the end that whereas this might mean something touching the appropriation bill for the current year, it really only is intended to apply to the future?

Mr. WALLACE. Does not the Senator see that lines 58 and 59 are the operative clauses that make the amendment of all that follows; and if you insert the words there so as to apply it to the next fiscal year, it covers all the succeeding amendments?

Mr. BLAINE. Let me read lines 58 and 59, for they carry out the point with express force:

And certain clauses in said act of June 19, 1878, are amended as follows: Under heading of "Senate," the clause commencing "For eight skilled laborers" is amended by striking out therefrom the name "Kate Dodson," and inserting in lieu thereof "female attendant."

I take the first.

Mr. WALLACE. I am not descending to details. Now, I say if the suggestion I made is put there in line 59 it will reach to not only Kate Dodson, but all the other changes that the Senator suggests are necessary on pages 4 and 5, for those are the operative clauses, "for the purposes of the next fiscal year and none other."

Mr. BLAINE. I say most respectfully to the honorable Senator who has charge of this bill and the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania that, to use a cant phrase, these clauses will not hold water; and the only possible effect of them is to repeal and modify the bill for this year, and not to have the slightest effect on the bill of next year. All you do is that you change a great many clauses of the existing law and compel your auditing officers to settle the accounts according to the more recent legislation; but you do not appropriate a dollar for the coming year.

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator will find, if he will read the first section, that he has been talking entirely outside the bill:

That for the purpose of providing for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, there is hereby appropriated, &c.

Mr. BLAINE. What? Read what?

Mr. WITHERS. The same sums that are appropriated for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, with the exceptions specified, and this is one of the exceptions. Here are alterations stating that the law for the fiscal year 1879 shall read thus and so.

Mr. BLAINE. No.

Mr. WITHERS. That is exactly what it says.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator from Virginia is only explaining what the committee intended to do; that I doubt not; I am showing you what the committee have done.

Mr. WITHERS. That is exactly what I am calling the Senator's attention to, what the committee have done; that they have appropriated the sums appropriated for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, with the exceptions specified; and they go on and specify the exceptions.

Mr. McDONALD. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania will cover this whole difficulty.

Mr. BECK. Before the Senator from Indiana begins, I want to get the exact words.

Mr. McDONALD. I would say "and for the purposes of this act, and to take effect on and from the 1st day of July next, certain clauses of the said act of June 19, 1878, are amended as follows."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania adopt that suggestion?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAINE. That will not help it a bit.

Mr. McDONALD. I think it will. I think it will make it entirely clear. I think it will make the bill hold water.

Mr. BECK. When the Senator from Massachusetts called my attention to it, I supposed the clauses in lines 58 and 59 were sufficient; but on further suggestion from him I proposed the addition of the words "to take effect after the 1st of July," and I have written these words which occurred to me as being sufficient for the purpose of guarding against the difficulty he suggested. I would add to lines 58 and 59 the following:

And certain clauses of said act of June 19, 1878, are amended for the purposes of the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, as follows:

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator this phraseology: "And for the purpose of ascertaining the true meaning and intent of this act," the phraseology of the act referred to shall read so and so.

Mr. BECK. I thought the Senator from Massachusetts was very kind in his first suggestion, but this one I think is carrying it a little bit too far. I move to amend by inserting after the word "amended" in line 59 the following:

For the purposes of the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880.

So as to read:

And certain clauses in said act of June 19, 1878, are amended for the purposes of the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, as follows:

Mr. BLAINE. Do they not still stand on the statutes of the United States as amended? How are you going to limit the great legislative fact that you amend those clauses by putting in some sort of apology, or assigning some sort of necessity, or giving some sort of excuse? You say they are amended, and they must stand in the statutes amended.

Mr. McDONALD. It is undoubtedly in the power of Congress to amend for certain purposes. That is all this proposes to do.

Mr. BLAINE. Still you amend them.

Mr. McDONALD. And leave them in force as they stand as to all other purposes. That is what this amendment proposes.

Mr. BLAINE. That is, you are going to amend them in order to give force and vitality to some other law.

Mr. McDONALD. For the purposes of this act they are amended as follows; but for all other purposes they stand as they are on the statute-book.

Mr. BLAINE. That is a very novel proposition.

Mr. McDONALD. I think not.

Mr. BLAINE. You are going to amend them by reducing the amounts, but still that amendment is not to have force or vitality in the sections of which it is an amendment, but is to be understood as applying to some other section for next year. That is about it.

Mr. McDONALD. It amends them for the purposes of this law.

Mr. ALLISON. I think this amendment would help the matter.

Mr. BLAINE. I think this act, like some others we have heard of, ought to be commended to the gracious mercy of Almighty God and the deliberate judgment of mankind.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky, not because I believe it is necessary, but because he having charge of the bill thinks proper to offer it. I have heard a great deal of captious criticism of this bill. I take it upon myself to say here now that any man of legal acumen who attempts to construe this bill in the language in which it now stands for the purpose of ascertaining the intent and purpose of the legislation, would be a jackass if he could not understand what Congress meant. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, therefore, is perfectly unnecessary, and I only support it because he has offered it. These captious criticisms on the language that comes here we understand the spirit and the import of very well. They are not for the purpose of advancing the interests of the country, not for the purpose of enabling the Government to obtain money which this bill proposes to give to it, but they are captious partisan criticisms of language that needs no construction whatever. Everybody knows that; none knows it better than the Senator from Maine himself. Why, sir, I should be ashamed of myself to rise here as a lawyer and undertake to say that a Department of the Government construing the laws could not understand what is meant by the language of this bill. I am tired of this policy of dealing with these unnecessary criticisms that are made. For one I shall vote for the amendment, but I am perfectly willing to vote for this bill as it came from the House. The Departments of the Government are provided for in this bill and will obtain every cent and every dollar Congress votes. I have no question they will obtain it and use it. As far as I am concerned I shall vote for this amendment simply on the ground that it was offered by the gentleman having charge of the bill, and not because it is necessary.

Mr. BLAINE. The bill as it came from the House had four pages, including some millions of dollars for which there was no appropriating clause at all, according to the democratic members of the committee; but so great is the faith of the honorable Senator from Delaware in a democratic House of Representatives that he is willing to go it blind, even against his democratic associates in the Senate on the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have seen a great deal and heard a great deal, and I have been reminded by what I have heard of what a distinguished English nobleman, writing to his friend Lord Somers, said. He said, after looking upon the action of the public men of that country that he was surprised that any person should attempt to take any part in public affairs, and that if he had a son he would sooner bind him to a cobbler than a courtier, and to a hangman than a statesman.

Mr. BLAINE. I can only state in view of the Senator's declaration that it might be very doubtful to those who listened who appeared as the jackass in the discussion; that was all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to line 58 of section 1.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are two other amendments sent up by the Senator from Kentucky, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add:

And the clause "for contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the Patent Office" is amended so that the sum named therein shall read $35,000.

And the clause "for photolithographing or otherwise producing plates for the Official Gazette" is amended so that the sum named therein shall read $24,000.

Mr. BECK. I will simply state the object of those amendments. The contingent expenses of the Patent Office last year were $50,000. By the vetoed bill $35,000 was appropriated. We have increased the force largely. The Secretary desired to increase the force rather than have an increase of contingencies. He did not want to deal with contingencies more than he could help. We obeyed his wishes, and gave him the additional force and cut down his official contingencies. For the Official Gazette we only gave him $24,000, instead of $32,000 last year, and these amendments bring it down to what was agreed on in what is known as the vetoed bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments just reported.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BECK. There is one other amendment. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer an amendment, to insert after line 261 of section 2:

For contingent expenses, namely, office rent, furniture, fuel, stationery, printing and binding, postage and expressage, labor, and assistant to shorthand reporter when needed, $4,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is this an amendment from the committee?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir; it is the committee's amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I do not think of any other amendment that the committee have to offer.

Mr. ROLLINS. In section 2, at the end of line 64, at the bottom of page 8, I move to insert:

For the payment of judgments of the Court of Claims, $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. BECK. That we regarded as belonging more properly to the sundry civil bill than to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. ROLLINS. The sundry civil bill passed at the last session.

Mr. BECK. If it belongs to any appropriation bill, it does not belong to this bill; and if the amendment is subject to a point of order I make it.

Mr. ROLLINS. Will the Senator allow a brief letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to be read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire will send up the letter and it will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 26, 1879.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 22d instant, I have the honor to inform you that the appropriation for payment of judgments of the Court of Claims has been exhausted, and that the sum of $150,000 will be required to pay judgments which have been rendered and which will be payable before the next session of Congress if not appealed; and I therefore recommend that an appropriation be made of that amount for the payment of such judgments.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

Hon. J. D. C. ATKINS,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BECK. It may be that this is a very proper provision to pass, but the sundry civil bill includes all such appropriations. The amendment is not germane to any of the matters contained in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. Does it come from any committee, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. ROLLINS. The amendment was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It was printed and referred some days since.

Mr. BECK. I make the point of order that it is not——

Mr. ROLLINS. Not germane? Pray, why is it not germane to the bill?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The point of order, I understand, is that the amendment comes from no committee.

Mr. ROLLINS. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and it is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. It is just and proper that the money should be appropriated.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear the letter of the Secretary read again.

The Chief Clerk again read the letter.

Mr. ROLLINS. I appeal to the Senator from Kentucky to withdraw his point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky insist upon his point of order?

Mr. BECK. These judgments may be appealed. We never have made appropriations to pay the judgments until we have had certificates showing that the appeals were all passed and that the action of the court was over. I think it is premature now.

Mr. ROLLINS. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BECK. It will not be known whether the judgments will be appealed before the next session of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky insist upon his point of order?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hold that under Rule 27 the amendment is not in order.

Mr. HOAR. I inquire of the Chair whether the rule is not express that the point shall be submitted to the Senate without being ruled on by the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can be submitted to the Senate, as the Chair understands the rule, and will be submitted if any Senator desires.

Mr. HOAR. No, sir; my question merely related to the regularity of proceeding. My recollection is that the rule here relied on requires the point of order to be submitted to the Senate in all cases. I do not understand that it is within the province of the Chair to decide the point of order under that rule. I have no interest in this particular amendment, but I merely made the suggestion in reference to the ordinary proceeding of business.

Mr. MAXEY. If it is the privilege of a Senator to have the question of order submitted to the Senate, I should like to have it submitted. I have information which satisfies me that the appropriation asked for is very proper and ought to be passed. I have in my own mind a case in my State of a judgment of some twelve or thirteen thousand dollars which draws no interest, unless an appeal is taken. If an appeal is taken and the judgment is affirmed, then it draws 5 per cent. interest. Unless an appeal is taken the claimant lays out of the use of his money without interest. I see no reason why the judgment of the court should not be paid, and why the claimant should not receive that which he is adjudged to be entitled to have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the question of order to the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I submit to the Chair that if he will have Rule 28 read he will find that the amendment is positively against the rules of the Senate, and it will not be necessary to submit the question to the Senate at all. That is my recollection of Rule 28. This amendment comes from no standing committee, nor is it estimated for. It is perfectly in order for the Chair, if he desires, to submit it; but the Chair has a right to rule it out of order, and it is out of order under the rule.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Secretary of the Treasury estimated for $500,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I find on page 154 of the estimates for the next fiscal year an estimate of $500,000 for judgments of the Court of Claims. I infer that in the sundry civil bill we have already made some appropriation for that purpose. I do not remember the details of that bill; but if we have done so, I think we should let the matter rest until the next session of Congress.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If my friend will allow me, the Secretary's letter says that this has arisen since the estimates were made, and then he says the judgments will be due if they are not appealed.

Mr. ALLISON. I heard the Secretary's letter read.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator will find that to be so.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then the amendment cannot be in order.

Mr. ALLISON. But that does not affect what I am speaking of, which is that there is an estimate for $500,000 for the next year, and I suppose the appropriation has already been made.

Mr. ROLLINS. Allow me to ask a question of the Senator from Iowa. What amount of money was appropriated for this purpose under the bill to which he refers? Five hundred thousand dollars was estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury. Now, what amount was appropriated?

Mr. ALLISON. I have just sent to ascertain. I will answer the Senator when I find out.

Mr. HOAR. There is no rule of the Senate which prevents the moving of this amendment, because it has not been directed by a standing or select committee of the Senate under Rule 27, because under that rule propositions to carry out the provisions of some existing law, to pay judgments of the Court of Claims clearly are exceptions, so that it is not prohibited by the twenty-seventh rule. Then under the twenty-eighth rule all that is required is that the proposed amendment shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations one day before it is offered in the Senate. That has been done in the present case; so the amendment is not prohibited by the twenty-eighth rule. The only objection to it, therefore, is the objection as to its relevancy to the pending bill. That is the objection which the Senator from Kentucky stated. That objection is open, but that objection the rule expressly requires shall be determined by the Senate and not by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the question raised by the Senator from Kentucky to arise under Rule 27. If it arises under Rule 29 the Senator from Massachusetts is correct. As there is a difference of opinion upon that subject the Chair will submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. BECK. Would it be in order now to withdraw the point of order and move to lay the amendment on the table? We can test the matter by one vote in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is in order.

Mr. BECK. I will do that.

Mr. ROLLINS. I appeal to the Senator from Kentucky to allow a vote to be taken on the amendment.

Mr. BECK. A motion to lay on the table will answer just as well, I think.

Mr. ROLLINS. Why not vote on the amendment?

Mr. BECK. I have moved to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. ROLLINS. I submit that if the point of order is withdrawn the Senator from Kentucky is not entitled to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Kentucky to withdraw his point of order, and while he had the floor he made a motion to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. WHYTE. Which is not debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. ROLLINS. Does the Senator insist upon his motion?

Mr. BECK. I have no objection to any Senator being heard, but I thought that motion would test the question as quickly as any other.

Mr. ALLISON. I can now answer the question of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Senator from Iowa to suspend for a moment. The Chair does not know that debate is in order unless the Senator from Kentucky withdraws the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to contribute a little information to the Senate.

Mr. ROLLINS. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow the Senator from Iowa to state a fact?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his question of order.

Mr. HOAR. When a Senator moves an amendment he is entitled to the floor first to address the Senate upon it, if the amendment be entertained. Another Senator cannot deprive him of that right—I do not understand the Senator from Kentucky desires to do so, but I merely make the point of order that another Senator cannot deprive him of that right by first raising a point of order and then withdrawing the point of order and moving to lay the amendment on the table at once. That deprives the Senator of his right to the floor. The Senator from Kentucky can only take the floor for the purpose of raising his point of order. When that is withdrawn the Senator from New Hampshire has the floor, as of right, upon his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is correct, but in the recollection of the Chair the floor had changed hands two or three times after the amendment was offered.

Mr. HOAR. Only when the point of order was pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair is wrong in his recollection on that point, he will hold that the Senator from New Hampshire is entitled to the floor upon his own amendment.

Mr. ROLLINS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I find on an examination of the sundry civil act for the next fiscal year that an appropriation of $125,000 was made.

Mr. MAXEY. The estimate was for $500,000.

Mr. ALLISON. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars was appropriated in the sundry civil act for the next fiscal year.

Mr. ROLLINS. Then I submit, as the Department estimate was $500,000, and $125,000 alone was appropriated, it leaves a balance of $375,000 to be provided for by appropriation. Therefore this item has been estimated by the proper Department of the Government. The amendment was introduced some days since, printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There are quite a large number of judgments of the Court of Claims that ought to be satisfied, for which appropriations should be made. I presume all the Senators on this floor will admit the justice and propriety of providing for the payment of these judgments of the court. They bear no interest, and the claimants will lose all interest on their money until the end of another session of Congress unless provision is made by law for their payment. Judgments of the Court of Claims only bear interest in cases where the United States appeals to the Supreme Court, (section 1090, Revised Statutes, 1878.) In cases where there is no ground for appeal the Attorney-General would only prolong useless litigation by appealing, and subject the United States to the payment of interest. In such cases, for these reasons, it is plainly the duty not to appeal. If the appropriations are not made at the present session of Congress, of course they will have to be made at the next session of Congress, and there will be this long delay.

It seems to me that there is no propriety in thus delaying just claimants upon the Government of the United States. When a party has a just claim against the Government, and presses that claim in the Court of Claims and obtains there a judgment against the Government, it seems to me he is entitled to have that judgment satisfied within a reasonable time.

The object of the amendment is simply to provide at this time some way whereby these judgments may be satisfied. The amendment is in perfect accordance with the recommendations of the Treasury Department. All the Senators, I believe, on this floor will admit that the amendment is a just one, and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. CARPENTER. Suppose the appropriation should be $200,000 too much, who would suffer? Nothing is to be paid out except on the judgments, nothing is to be paid beyond the amount of the judgments, and if the judgments do not equal the appropriation the balance of the appropriation will lie there and be turned into the Treasury at the end of the year as an unexpended balance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. ROLLINS.]

The amendment was rejected, there being on a division—ayes 17, noes 30.

Mr. BAILEY. In the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of June 19, 1878, page 26, there is an appropriation of $8,000 for the Bureau of Education for the purpose of "collecting statistics and writing and compiling matter for annual and special reports and editing and publishing circulars of information." Under the bill that was vetoed that sum was increased to $15,000. I move in the present bill to strike out "eight" and insert "fifteen." There is another reason why it is necessary to increase the sum to be applied to the publication of the reports of the Bureau of Education. There are demands made for those reports in every part of the country, North, East, South, and West, and those demands cannot be met with the appropriations that this bill contains. Therefore, I move to strike out "eight" and insert "fifteen."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator indicate the precise point where his amendment comes in?

Mr. BAILEY. At page 14, after line 208.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I shall not object to the consideration of this amendment, but I will simply state that the amount of $8,000 was appropriated for the current year. It is true the vetoed bill gave $15,000. The committee acted upon it, and they thought that it ought to be $8,000. That was the decision of a majority of the committee at least. While the committee care nothing about it specially one way or the other, and there was nothing in the proposition which it specially opposed or favored, the committee, so far as I am concerned, submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The amendment of the Senator from Tennessee covers the same ground that was embraced in the vetoed bill. It simply makes the appropriation for the Educational Bureau precisely the same as it was in the vetoed bill, and I hope it will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Tennessee that it is necessary for him to indicate in what line in the present bill under consideration his amendment comes.

Mr. BECK. Page 13, after line 181 of section 2, I think will be an appropriate place for it. The Senator from Tennessee will observe that this comes under the Interior Department. The Bureau of Education belongs there, and several Senate amendments have been inserted at that point already. After line 181 the amendment would seem to be suitable if it is voted in.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a very good place for it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I submit that if the Senate approves of the amendment the place will be found to put it in.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state that the point selected by the mover of the amendment is the proper place in my opinion to precede the paragraph for a separate heading for the Bureau of Education, from the fact that it occupies the same position in this bill that the appropriation for the Bureau of Education does in the act of the current year. For that reason it is the most appropriate place.

Mr. ALLISON. What line is that?

Mr. WITHERS. Line 208, page 14.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee will prepare his amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I am preparing it.

Mr. BECK. In order to test it, if the Senator from Tennessee does not object to a test in such a form, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. WITHERS. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky moves to lay the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee on the table, and upon that the Senator from Virginia asks for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WITHERS. I will take a division first.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 22, noes 21.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. May we hear the amendment reported we are asked to lay on the table?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will now report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 13, after line 181 of section 2, it is proposed to insert:

Bureau of Education:

For collecting statistics and writing and compiling matter for annual and special reports, and editing and publishing circulars of information, $15,000.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state that this is precisely the amount appropriated in the bill known as the vetoed bill. The publications which are issued by the Bureau of Education are very much in demand. I know to my certain knowledge that very many applications are made for them in my State which cannot be supplied for want of a sufficient number of copies. In the House the proposition was made to increase the sum appropriated last year, which was $8,000, to $15,000 for the purpose of increasing the number of these volumes. It was carried by a large majority in the House, and it was incorporated in the bill which has been vetoed. Having been passed upon repeatedly by this body as well as the other, I think there is no reasonable objection to its being inserted in the present bill.

Mr. BECK. The amendment ought to be changed so as to read $7,000 instead of $15,000. We have already $8,000 by this bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well.

Mr. BECK. All we desire is $15,000, and the amendment ought to increase the amount $7,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee accept the modification?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky to lay the amendment on the table, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary called the roll.

Mr. GROOME. I desire to say that upon this question I am paired with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CHANDLER.] Were he here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. ANTHONY, (after having voted in the negative.) I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] who is absent. I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. BELL, (after having voted in the negative.) I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIAMS.]

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Beck,	Garland,	Maxey,	Vest,
Booth,	Hereford,	Pendleton,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,	Walker,

So the Senate refused to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. BAILEY.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 13, after line 169 of section 2, under the head of "Interior Department," I submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by me; which was duly referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I am advised that they took no special action upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of line 169, section 2, it is proposed to insert:

General Land Office:

To enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to adjust and settle the claims of the several States, under the act of Congress approved September 28, 1850, and the acts supplemental thereto and amendatory thereof for swamp lands, including the claims for swamp-land indemnity under the acts of March 2, 1855, and March 3, 1857, and others, $25,000.

Mr. BECK. I insist that that amendment is not in order on this bill, that it is not recommended by any standing committee or by any Department of the Government in any manner that I know of. Indeed the main objection the Committee on Appropriations had to it was that it did not belong to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which, as the President of the Senate knows, is sufficiently incumbered already. There are deficiency bills, and there are other bills that will come before us, perhaps some still pending, providing for miscellaneous items, and allowing such things to be done, where this amendment can be appropriately added, and where the probabilities are that many members of the Committee on Appropriations would support it. On this bill we were afraid to consider many of those things, and this was one of them, believing that it did not properly belong to this bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President——

Mr. BECK. I do not know whether the point of order is well taken or not, but I am going to raise any question I can to keep any more amendments from being ingrafted on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri desire to say anything in reference to the question of order raised by the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the amendment is in order. I do not desire to discuss it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair the point of order is well taken, but the Chair does not express his opinion with confidence.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire simply to call the attention of the Senate for one moment to this subject. There is a large number of States that are interested in the question of the settlement and adjustment of the claims for swamp lands and for swamp-land indemnity. I hold in my hand a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, addressed to Hon. J. D. C. ATKINS, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the last House of Representatives. This appropriation has been strongly recommended by that department. It has been urged session after session in the reports of that department. It is impossible for the department to take a solitary step in the adjustment and settlement of these claims unless it has an appropriation.

All the States having swamp lands are interested in it; the counties of those States are interested in it; constant applications are made for the settlement and adjustment of these claims; and we are powerless to do anything without an appropriation. The amendment has been recommended in as strong language as it is possible by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I also hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BECK. That was addressed to the last Congress, was it not?

Mr. COCKRELL. One was addressed to the last Congress.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me a moment? They are all addressed to the last Congress. They were very strong and very urgent, and because the urgency——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senators from Kentucky and Missouri to what the Senator from Missouri seems not to have understood. The Chair holds that the amendment is not in order; that the point of order taken by the Senator from Kentucky was well taken. Does the Senator from Missouri appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, sir; I do not appeal from it. I simply desire to make a statement of the case, that the Committee on Appropriations may understand it and put the amendment upon some other bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The statement of the Senator will be heard by unanimous consent.

Mr. COCKRELL. In answer to the Senator from Kentucky I will say that I have letters now of the 6th of June, both from the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, asking for this same appropriation.

Mr. BECK. I know it is out of order, but I desire to say one word. Knowing the urgency of these things we have at this session of Congress increased the force of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. We have made an appropriation of $68,000 more than he ever had before to enable him to go on with this work.

Mr. GARLAND. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky if in increasing the force by that amount the committee had in view this particular item? This is an amendment in which the State I represent in part is very much interested, and sixteen other States are interested in it.

Mr. BECK. This was one of the items the Commissioner of the General Land Office complained of not having force enough to go into, and we have given him $68,000 for this and other purposes.

Mr. GARLAND. There are seventeen States directly interested in this matter. The State of Arkansas is interested to the amount of $200,000. We have made efforts for the last six or eight years to have this thing settled, and we have been told all the time that they have not had sufficient force to adjust the claims. If the Senator who has this bill in charge thinks, after investigating all these matters, that the $68,000 appropriated will cover this item, I am satisfied for one.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will state for the information of the Senator that the Committee on Appropriations gave the Land Office all they asked for both in clerks and contingencies, and I suppose this $25,000 to have been included.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish the Senator from Arkansas to have any misapprehension about this matter. There is no appropriation in this bill that will include what he wants to include.

Mr. GARLAND. The State of Iowa is interested quite as much as the State of Arkansas.

Mr. ALLISON. And therefore I want to disabuse the mind of my friend, so that the States of Iowa and Arkansas will not be deceived.

Mr. GARLAND. We shall try to get this on some other appropriation bill. I have no desire, of course, to resist the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment offered in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. BECK. I move that the amendments be concurred in in gross.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, and the Senator from Kentucky moves that the amendments be concurred in in gross. Without objection that course will be adopted.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not intend to delay the final action on the bill, but I merely want to get an affirmative answer from the honorable Senator from Kentucky, because the bill is a little confused, as we have all agreed to it, that this bill does not contain any legislation or political riders, or anything whatever of that name or nature of any kind.

Mr. BECK. I believe it does not, and I compared the bill of the current fiscal year with all the amendments of the Senate and all the amendments of the House, and embodied them in an amendment which at one time I thought I would offer. I find nothing that I can see objectionable in it, and I believe the House and Senate committees have endeavored to keep it as clear of all those things as possible.

Mr. BLAINE. I get more than I asked, because the honorable Senator from Kentucky thinks those things are objectionable. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. ALLISON. All the amendments that were on the vetoed bill I believe are transferred now to the little bill—the supplemental sundry civil bill.

Mr. BLAINE. That will come along in turn. I only wanted to know about this bill, that this bill has nothing of that kind in it.

Mr. ALLISON. I understood they were all shifted from this bill to the little bill.

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator from Maine has been criticising every word in the bill, making verbal criticisms, and he ought to know what is in it.

Mr. BLAINE. No; I merely acknowledge before the Senate of the United States and the great American people that this bill is totally and absolutely beyond my comprehension.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to offer an amendment to House bill No. 2002 making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department to pay letter-carriers, to make provision for the adjustment and settlement of the swamp-land claims and indemnities, and I ask that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1734) to authorize the Secretary of War to use certain moneys appropriated by act of Congress approved March 3, 1879, "for the protection of the high sand-banks on the Chippewa River," in the completion and protection of improvements in and near the mouth of said Chippewa River;

A bill (H. R. No. 509) relating to telegraphic communication between the United States and foreign countries; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 32) authorizing the completion of the foundation of the Washington Monument.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 1841) to remove the political disabilities of James H. North, of Culpeper County, Virginia; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask that the House bills on the table be laid before the Senate so that they may be referred to the appropriate committees.

The bill (H. R. No. 509) relating to telegraphic communication between the United States and foreign countries was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The bill (H. R. No. 1734) to authorize the Secretary of War to use certain moneys appropriated by act of Congress approved March 3, 1879, "for the protection of the high sand-banks on the Chippewa River," in the completion and protection of improvements in and near the mouth of said Chippewa River, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 32) authorizing the completion of the foundation of the Washington Monument was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR JUDICIAL EXPENSES.

Mr. WALLACE. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2252, making appropriations for certain judicial expenses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The unfinished business is Senate bill No. 594.

Mr. WALLACE. I move to postpone that and all other orders and proceed to the consideration of the bill which I have named.

Mr. CONKLING. That is "the little bill." [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves to postpone the pending and all other orders for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHYTE. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CONKLING. I move now, at half after five, that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved by the Senator from New York that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and twenty-four minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 13, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. DAVID WILLS, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SPIRITS WITHDRAWN FROM WAREHOUSES FOR EXPORTATION.

Mr. MORRISON, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1955) authorizing allowance for loss by leakage or casualty of spirits withdrawn from distillery warehouses for exportation; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CONGER. Not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The point of order would immediately lie against it, if it were so brought back.

Mr. CONGER. It had better be settled now that it is the understanding that this bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider. If not, then I will move to reconsider and table the reference.

Mr. MORRISON. What does the gentleman ask?

Mr. CONGER. That this bill shall not be brought back into the House by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. MORRISON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. CONGER. I think we had better fasten the thing now.

Mr. MORRISON. It was the understanding in the Committee of Ways and Means that this bill should not be brought back into the House by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. CONGER. I so stated to the Chair.

Mr. MORRISON. It is a little surprising that the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] himself a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, and knowing the understanding in that committee to be that this bill should not be brought back on a motion to reconsider, should think it necessary to have an order made in order to keep members from breaking that understanding.

Mr. CONGER. I cannot tell now what I should say in reply to the gentleman; I will think it over.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE CHIPPEWA RIVER.

Mr. POUND. I am compelled this morning to ask of the House a special courtesy, which I am sure will be granted when it is understood. I will preface my proposition with a single word of explanation. It is of great importance that the bill which I hold in my hand should pass at this session of Congress. It is of importance to the Government, and of exceedingly great importance to all parties engaged or interested in the commerce and navigation of the Chippewa River, to which this bill relates, a commerce amounting in the aggregate to more than $15,000,000 annually. This bill does not contain an appropriation, but it deals with an appropriation already made. It has been referred to the Engineer department and received its hearty and emphatic indorsement. It has been referred to the Committee on Commerce of this House, and that committee has ordered it to be reported back favorably, and is only waiting an opportunity to obtain the floor to make the report. Fearing that if we wait until the committee is called the report will be delayed so that the bill cannot pass the Senate at this session, I now ask unanimous consent of the House that the Committee on Commerce may be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and that it be considered and passed by the House at this time.

There is no opposition to the object of the bill, but in regard to the construction of it the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] may ask to add an amendment, to which I have no objection.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. It can only be entertained by unanimous consent.

The bill (H. R. No. 1734) to authorize the Secretary of War to use certain moneys appropriated by act of Congress approved March 4, 1879, "for the protection of the high sand-banks on the Chippewa River," in the completion and protection of improvements in and near the mouth of said Chippewa River, was then read.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to apply and use for the completion and protection of the wing-dams, jetties, and other improvements of the Chippewa River, in the State of Wisconsin, located at and near the mouth of said river, so much of the moneys appropriated by an act of Congress approved March 4, 1879, entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, as were appropriated "for the protection of the high sand-banks on the Chippewa River," &c., as may be required for such purpose, provided that such use or application of the moneys herein authorized shall be made under the same limitations and conditions as provided in the act hereinbefore named.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill at this time?

Mr. DUNNELL. I object, unless an amendment can be made to it.

Mr. POUND. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair hears no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. PRICE. I have the consent of the gentleman to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The bill is now open to amendment.

Mr. POUND. I do not object. It is a mere change in the construction of the bill, which I do not deem important.

The amendment was to add to the bill the following:

And subject to the terms and conditions of the proviso attached to the appropriation for said Chippewa River in said act approved March 3, 1879.

Mr. DUNNELL. That is the same amendment which I desired to offer.

Mr. PRICE. I have no objection to the bill with that amendment.

Mr. ATKINS. As the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. REAGAN] is not now in his seat, I believe I must object to this bill.

Mr. POEHLER. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. POUND. I state upon my word as a member of this House that the chairman of the Committee on Commerce assured me that he was in favor of this bill, and I take this action with his approbation.

Mr. ATKINS. With that assurance I withdraw my objection.

The amendment of Mr. PRICE was then agreed to.

Mr. POUND. There is a clerical error in the printed bill and also in the title. The phrase "approved March 4, 1879" should read "approved March 3, 1879." I ask consent that the error be corrected.

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POUND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

J. B. M'DONNELL.

Mr. VANCE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of Claims:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to J. B. McDonnell the sum of $297.75, out of the contingent fund of the House, for services rendered as messenger to the Committees on Patents and Railways and Canals during the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HUNTON, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee for the District of Columbia, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 298) to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

BINDING INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS, ETC.

Mr. HAYES, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2267) providing for the binding of the internal-revenue laws and manual; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 509) relating to telegraphic communication between the United States and foreign countries. The bill provides for the free landing of ocean cables and will, it is believed, tend to secure a large reduction in the charges for telegraphic messages between this and foreign countries. Bills substantially the same as this have in previous Congresses passed the House and the Senate, but in each instance have failed to pass both Houses during the same session. Petitions urging the passage of a bill of this character, signed by a large number of leading merchants in the large cities, have been presented to the House and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which unanimously favors the passage of the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all communication that may hereafter be established by any citizens of the United States, or any company, corporation, or association created under the laws of the United States or of any State, or by any citizens or subjects, or corporation, company, or association, of any foreign country, between the United States and any foreign country, by means of any telegraphic or magnetic lines or cables laid in and over the waters, reefs, islands, shores, and lands within the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be subject to the following conditions, stipulations, and reservations, to wit: First, the Government of the United States shall be entitled to exercise and enjoy the same privileges with regard to the control and use of any such line or cable as may, by law, agreement, or otherwise, be exercised and enjoyed by any foreign government whatever; secondly, citizens of the United States shall enjoy the same privileges for the transmission of messages as are enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the foreign country with which the communication is had; thirdly, the transmission of dispatches shall be made in the following order: first, dispatches of state, under such regulations as may be agreed upon with the governments interested, the rates not to exceed those charged to individuals; secondly, dispatches on telegraphic service; and, thirdly, private dispatches; fourthly, the lines of any such cables shall be kept open to the public for the daily transmission of market and commercial reports and private and general intelligence, and all messages, dispatches, and communications shall be forwarded in the order in which they are received, except as hereinbefore provided; fifthly, before extending and establishing any such line or cable in or over any waters, reefs, islands, shores, and lands within the jurisdiction of the United States, a written acceptance of the terms and conditions imposed by this act shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State by the parties, company, corporation, or association proposing to establish telegraphic communication.

SEC. 2. That, subject to the foregoing conditions, stipulations, and reservations, and subject to the terms of such grants as have heretofore been made by Congress for laying and maintaining telegraph cables between the United States and foreign countries, the consent of Congress is hereby given to any person or persons who are citizens of the United States, and to any company, corporation, or association created under the laws of the United States or of any State, or by any citizens or subjects, or company, corporation, or association, of any foreign country, to lay, maintain, and operate any telegraphic or magnetic line or lines, cable or cables, between the United States and foreign countries, in and over the waters, reefs, islands, shores, and lands within the jurisdiction of the United States, subject, however, to any and all rights of property and State jurisdiction in and over the same.

SEC. 3. That any person who shall willfully disclose or in any way make known or intercept the contents of any message, or any part thereof, and any person who shall willfully injure or destroy any cable or other property of the company, or interfere with the working, repair, or use of any cable or line connected with such cable, shall, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States, or in any district court of the district in which such cable is landed, be subject to a fine not exceeding $5,000 or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years, or both, at the discretion of the court; and the party injured thereby shall have a right of action for damages. It shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to direct that prosecutions be brought against persons offending against any of the provisions of this act in the district court of the United States.

SEC. 4. That any person on board of any ship or vessel registered or enrolled in the United States, who shall willfully injure or destroy any cable used for the transmission of telegraphic dispatches between any countries, upon the high seas, shall, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States, be subject to a fine not exceeding $10,000 or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years, or both, at the discretion of the court; and the owners of such injured or destroyed cable shall have a right of action for damagas against the person willfully causing such injury or destruction.

SEC. 5. Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish to ask whether this bill is substantially the same bill which has already passed this House once or twice?

Mr. COX. It has passed this House twice.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is it the same bill?

Mr. COX. It is. The bill is intended to give no one any special privilege.

Mr. HUNTON. The casual attention I have been able to give to the reading of the bill impresses me with the idea that it is a very important measure and one which ought not to be passed hurriedly.

The SPEAKER. The bill can only come in at this time by unanimous consent.

Mr. COX. I will say to my friend from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] that this bill grew out of requests for special privileges as to ocean telegraphs. The committee, having had the subject under consideration, have for several years been of opinion that no special rights should be given with reference to ocean telegraphing. This is a general bill allowing all ocean cables to land. My friend from Ohio [Mr. MONROE] once reported a bill on this subject, and he can say whether this is the same bill.

Mr. MONROE. It is the same.

Mr. HUNTON. Then I understand it is stated to the House that this bill is identical in form with bills heretofore passed by the House on two occasions.

Mr. COX. It is the same bill which was reported about three years ago by my colleague [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] and two years ago by my friend from Ohio, [Mr. MONROE.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill at this time? The Chair hears none. The bill is before the House.

Mr. HUNTON. I observe that section 2 provides—

That subject to the foregoing conditions, stipulations, and reservations, and subject to the terms of such grants as have heretofore been made by Congress, for laying and maintaining telegraph cables between the United States and foreign countries, &c.

That is a very sweeping clause. We ought to understand fully what it means.

Mr. COX. The bill gives to everybody the same privilege that anybody has. That is the very essence of a general law. It allows no special privileges in reference to the landing of ocean cables.

Mr. HUNTON. Does it involve the Government in any expenditure of money?

Mr. COX. Not a dollar of money or property. It is intended to cut off all private class legislation on this subject.

Mr. MORTON. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The bill is reported with certain amendments, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4 of section 1 strike out the words "any citizens of the United States or."

In lines 6 and 7 of section 2 strike out the words "to any person or persons who are citizens of the United States, and."

In lines 8, 9, and 10 of the same section strike out the words "or by any citizens, or subjects, or company, corporation, or association of any foreign country."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALE OF PROPERTY IN NEW YORK CITY.

Mr. GIBSON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, as a substitute for House bill No. 153, a bill (H. R. No. 2268) to authorize the sale of certain property in the city of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

CALVIN BRONSON.

Mr. GIBSON also, by unanimous consent, reported a bill (H. R. No. 2269) for the relief of Calvin Bronson, of Toledo, Ohio; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. Those bills have been referred, not to come back by a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. Such is the understanding.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I have been instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report back favorably joint resolution (H. R. No. 32) authorizing the completion of the foundation of the Washington Monument and to ask that it be put upon its passage at this time.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, and the Chair will then ask for objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the joint commission for the construction of the Washington Monument, created by the act of August 2, 1876, be, and is hereby, authorized to expend, for the completion of the foundation of the monument now in progress, so much of the appropriation made by the said act as may be necessary for that purpose, not exceeding $64,000 above the sum now authorized.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DUNNELL. Is there a report accompanying this joint resolution?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. This joint resolution is the report of the committees of the Senate and House. It does not appropriate a dollar of money, but merely directs the expenditure of a sum of money already appropriated, and which if not done now the work already performed on the foundation of the Washington Monument will have been wasted.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is it in addition, or out of the original amount appropriated?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. It is out of the original amount appropriated, and only sufficient to complete the work already begun.

Mr. CLAFLIN. It takes so much money out of the amount already appropriated for the Washington Monument, and if we take this sum from that amount for the purpose of completing the foundation we will undoubtedly hereafter have to appropriate a like amount to complete the monument. As I understand it, $200,000 was appropriated for the erection of the monument above the foundation, and if you take this $64,000 out of that $200,000 for the foundation you will have to appropriate hereafter a like amount to complete the monument, or raise it from some other source.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts object?

Mr. CONGER. Let me say a word. I did oppose this appropriation in the first place, but there has been expended in the work for completing the foundation of the monument a large sum of money, and to make that available or to save the labor which has been performed it is necessary undoubtedly there should be a further appropriation. Having examined the subject somewhat, I do not object to this now, and think the appropriation ought to be made as proposed. Perhaps originally the appropriation ought not to have been made at all, but now when this work has been carried on it certainly should be completed.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. A considerable sum which has already been expended on this work would be a total loss unless this appropriation of $64,000 is made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLAFLIN. No, sir; I do not object.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROMOTION OF FOREIGN TRADE.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to offer the following resolution and to ask for its consideration at this time. It is to carry out the instructions of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the sub-committee of the Committee on Commerce, to whom has been referred the resolution of the House of Representatives adopted on the 4th instant on the subject of the commercial relations of the country, and who are authorized to inquire by what means our foreign trade may be best promoted and foreign markets opened to American products and manufactures, have leave to sit at such times and places as shall seem to them expedient during the recess of Congress, to administer oaths and take testimony, to employ a clerk and stenographer at a fair compensation, and for the purposes aforesaid the sum of $2,500 be, and is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, for the use of said committee on the requisition of the chairman, whose receipt shall be a good and sufficient voucher therefor.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I make the point of order on that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I now demand the regular order and will only yield for reference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot qualify his objection, for that would give him the possession of the floor.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Then I insist on my point of order.

CONFERENCE COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER announced that he had appointed as conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on joint resolution (H. R. No. 85) fixing the date on which the committee clerks, pages, and laborers of the House of Representatives who are paid during the session only shall begin for this session, Mr. HENRY, Mr. MARTIN of Delaware, and Mr. SMITH of Pennsylvania.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 674) for the benefit of the widow and children of General James Shields, and to increase the pension of Caroline S. Webster; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. R. No. 95) to pay Patrick Doran for services as messenger of the House of Representatives.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 1478) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate for the purchase at private sale, or, if necessary, procure by condemnation, a site for a post-office in the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland.

DANIEL M. COOK.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour begins at twenty minutes before one o'clock. This being Friday, the morning hour is confined to the consideration of private business. The unfinished business coming over from the last morning hour of Friday is the bill (H. R. No. 2019) for the relief of Daniel M. Cook, reported from the Committee on Patents by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WARD] as a substitute for House bill No. 342.

Mr. WARD. As this bill was pretty fully discussed in the last morning hour, when the report also was read, I am willing to yield any portion that remains to me of my hour to any gentleman who may wish to discuss the bill. If no one wishes to discuss it I propose to call the previous question.

Mr. SAMFORD. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Commissioner of Patents to hear and determine the application of Daniel M. Cook for the extension for the further term of seven years of letters-patent for improvement in processes and apparatus for evaporating and desiccating cane-juice, originally granted June 22, 1868, as No. 2063, reissued December 10, 1859, as No. 867, and extended for seven years from and after the 22d day of June, 1872, and again reissued July 23, 1878; the form of such application and the mode of proceedings entered into to be in all respects the same as was provided by the act of Congress approved July 8, 1870, entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statute relating to patents and copyrights, for the extension of patents granted prior to March 2, 1861;" and if upon such hearing the Commissioner of Patents shall be satisfied that the said Daniel M. Cook has failed to obtain from the use or sale of his invention or discovery a reasonable remuneration for the time, ingenuity, and expense bestowed upon it and the introduction of it into use, and that it is just and proper, having due regard to the public interest, that the term of the patent should be extended, the said Commissioner shall make a certificate upon said reissued patent renewing and extending the same to Daniel M. Cook, his executors, administrators, or assigns, for the term of seven years from the 22d day of June, A. D. 1879, which will be recorded in the Patent Office, and thereupon said patent shall have the same effect in law as if it had been originally patented for twenty-eight years; provided, that no suit shall be maintained for any infringement of this patent made prior to the passage of this act except upon proof of actual knowledge of said patent on the part of the person or persons so infringing and for the continued use by any person or persons of any apparatus or process covered by said patent and purchased prior to the passage hereof.

Mr. ACKLEN. Is not that bill subject to the point of order under Rule 112?

The SPEAKER. If it is, it is too late to make the point of order, because the bill comes over as unfinished business, having been discussed for some time. The question is on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. GIBSON. I hope this extension of the patent will not be granted.

The question being put, there were—ayes 75, noes 45.

Mr. ACKLEN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WARD and Mr. ACKLEN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 89, noes 49.

So (further count not being called for) the previous question was seconded.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on ordering the main question.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Did a quorum vote on the last vote?

The SPEAKER. A quorum did not vote; but the Chair understood that the teller who had demanded the vote by tellers did not make the point that a quorum had not voted.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Very well.

The question being taken on ordering the main question, there were—ayes 62, noes 34.

Mr. ACKLEN. A quorum has not voted.

Mr. SAMFORD. I hope the gentleman will not raise that point. Let us have a vote by yeas and nays.

Mr. ACKLEN. I make the point that a quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WARD, and the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. ACKLEN.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 97, noes 56.

So the main question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. ACKLEN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, forty-five voting therefor.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Louisiana desire the yeas and nays on the engrossment or on the final passage of the bill?

Mr. ACKLEN. On both.

Mr. BAKER. I ask the gentleman to agree that the yeas and nays be taken on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ACKLEN. I desire the yeas and nays on the engrossment and third reading, and they have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 104, nays 80, not voting 102; as follows:

Mr. ACKLEN. I move that the House do now adjourn, and pending that motion I move that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman's object is to consume the morning hour, the motion to adjourn will be sufficient if the yeas and nays are ordered on it.

Mr. ACKLEN. That is my object; but I insist on my motion.

The question was taken upon the motion that the House adjourn till Monday; and on a division there were—ayes 93, noes 53.

Mr. SPARKS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOUK. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. HOUSE.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, (having voted in the negative.) On political questions I am paired with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. As this seems to have some political significance, I desire to withdraw my vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, his Secretary; who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ACKLEN. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. WHITE. Is there not pending a motion to adjourn?

Mr. ACKLEN. I withdraw that motion.

Mr. WHITE. I renew it.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope the gentleman will withdraw it for a moment, until I make a statement to the House.

Mr. WHITE. I will withdraw it for the present.

Mr. BRIGHT. I wish to ask the unanimous consent of the House that the Committee of Claims have permission to report at this time sundry bills which were referred to that committee, making appropriations for the payment of employés of the House in the last Congress. I desire to have those reports made at this time and have them referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, so that I may move that the House go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of disposing of those claims.

Mr. WHITE. What are those claims?

Mr. ACKLEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ACKLEN. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] wishes to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of certain bills reported from the Committee of Claims.

The SPEAKER. If the House go into Committee of the Whole to-day the Private Calendar will come up, and the bills upon that calendar will be considered in their order.

Mr. WHITE. I did not understand the gentleman from Tennessee wanted now to go into the Committee of the Whole on these bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman desires to report the bills and have them referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WHITE. What are they?

The SPEAKER. They are bills relating to the pay of certain employés of the House during the last Congress. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. BRIGHT?] [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXPERTS OF THE METRIC SYSTEM.

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 2270) to pay for expert services relating to the metric system rendered in the Forty-fifth Congress; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CONGER. I have objected to that bill once, and I will object to it again unless it come in in its regular order.

The SPEAKER. Consent has been given the committee to report these bills to go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. Very well.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

J. N. REED, A. D. ANDERSON, AND OTHERS.

Mr. COVERT, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 2271) for the relief of John N. Reed, A. D. Anderson, John A. Dugan, E. T. Keightley, and George T. Rogers; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WHITE. I did not consent to the presentation of these several reports from the Committee of Claims; I objected to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair twice asked whether there was objection, and heard none.

Mr. WHITE. I thought that the gentleman wanted to report one or two resolutions for paying employés.

The SPEAKER. These are the employés of the House.

Mr. COVERT. They are all of the same character.

The SPEAKER. Or otherwise the Chair would not have admitted them.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

G. V. HEBB.

Mr. SAMFORD, from the same committee, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 97) to pay G. V. Hebb $55; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

L. H. FITZHUGH.

Mr. SAMFORD also, from the same committee, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 98) to pay the claim of L. H. Fitzhugh for services in the Forty-fourth Congress; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INTEROCEANIC CANAL ACROSS THE ISTHMUS OF DARIEN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, in compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 29th ultimo, a report of the Secretary of State relative to the steps taken by this Government to promote the establishment of an interoceanic canal across or near the Isthmus of Darien.

R. B. HAYES.

WASHINGTON, June 13, 1879.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this message, with the accompanying documents, will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. REAGAN. Unless the Committee on Foreign Affairs know some reason why these papers should be referred to that committee I ask their reference to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COX. I think the Committee on Foreign Affairs properly have jurisdiction of this subject.

Mr. REAGAN. It certainly relates to commerce.

The SPEAKER. It is a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitted by the President, and relating to the construction of a canal outside the limits of the United States. The Chair thought it would properly go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; but of course he has no wish about the matter.

Mr. COX. It might be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the first instance. We will examine the papers; and if they properly belong to the Committee on Commerce, we will report them back for reference to that committee.

The SPEAKER. The papers embrace a proposition that this Government shall enter into a treaty on the subject with foreign governments. If there be no objection, they will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was not agreed to.

EXPENDITURES OF STATES, ETC., DURING THE WAR OF 1812.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on the Judiciary a bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and settle the accounts of certain States, and the city of Baltimore, growing out of moneys expended by said States and the city of Baltimore for military purposes during the war of 1812. I hope the House will allow me to make this report, as I am not well, and do not expect to be here this session after to-day or to-morrow. I desire merely that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, not to be acted on until the next regular session of Congress.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 2272) was reported, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONGER. It is understood that this bill is not to come up until the next regular session.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I agree to that.

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

Mr. HOOKER, by unanimous consent, reported, from the Select Committee on Epidemic Diseases, a bill (H. R. No. 2273) to provide office rooms for the National Board of Health, and for the publication of its reports and papers, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I now move that the House go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the House adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 74, noes 50.

Mr. FINLEY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 13; less than one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. FINLEY. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The SPEAKER. On the motion to adjourn the yeas are 74, the noes 50.

Mr. BRIGHT. I call for tellers on the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. No quorum having voted, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WHITE, and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. BRIGHT, will act as tellers.

Mr. WHITE. It is not necessary that a quorum should vote on a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee wishes to have the sense of the House tested by tellers.

The tellers having taken their places,

Mr. KENNA said: Mr. Speaker, the House has not ordered tellers, and a quorum is not necessary to decide a motion to adjourn. I submit that the question should be put to the House whether tellers be ordered or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question to the House.

Mr. WHITE. I raised the point a moment ago that a quorum was not necessary on the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware of that.

Mr. WHITE. So I presume, but I was merely calling the attention of the Chair to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized in the accustomed way the gentleman from Tennessee who desired a further test of the sense of the House on the question by tellers.

Mr. WHITE. But the result had been announced.

The SPEAKER. The state of the vote had been announced; the Chair did not determine the House adjourned, delaying because of the demand for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn and the demand for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays; although the vote was stated, yet the Chair would not have declared the House adjourned until any gentleman desiring to test the question by the count of tellers had had that opportunity.

Mr. WHITE. What is the demand now?

The SPEAKER. For tellers on the direct vote to adjourn, and the point of order is raised by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] that tellers must be ordered by the House.

Mr. HAYES. Let the House determine whether it wants tellers or not.

Mr. CONGER. Would it not be in order now, pending the motion that the House adjourn, to move that when it adjourns it be to meet on Monday next?

The SPEAKER. That motion would not be in order now; the House is dividing.

The question being taken on ordering tellers, they were not ordered, only twenty members voting in favor thereof.

The SPEAKER. The House has refused to order a vote by yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn; it has refused to order a vote by tellers to determine whether the yeas and nays should be ordered; and it has now refused to order tellers upon the motion to adjourn. Before announcing the result, the Chair desires to submit certain requests for leave of absence.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CARLISLE, indefinitely, on account of important business;

To Mr. BAILEY, for eight days, on account of important business;

To Mr. CAMP, indefinitely;

To Mr. HENRY, for two days, on account of sickness in his family; and

To Mr. BAYNE, for to-morrow.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 85) fixing the date on which the pay of the committee clerks, pages, and laborers of the House of Representatives who are paid during the session only shall begin for this session, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. WALLACE, Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia, and Mr. BLAINE.

The message also announced that the President pro tempore had appointed Mr. EATON (in place of Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, excused) as one of the conferees on the part of the Senate upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the fourth amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 1) to repeal certain clauses of the sundry civil appropriation act, approved March 3, 1879.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill and a joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 625) for the relief of the Farmers and Merchants' Bank, Paris, Texas; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 6) accepting from Professor Edward Fontaine, of Louisiana, certain maps, drawings, and explanations of the same.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1841) to remove the political disabilities of James H. North, of Culpeper County, Virginia.

The result of the vote on the motion of Mr. WHITE, that the House adjourn, was then announced; and accordingly (at two o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BOUCK: The petition of citizens of Green Bay, Wisconsin, for the improvement of the harbor at that place—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CLAFLIN: The petition of Thomas P. Morgan and others, for a charter for the American Union Industrial Charitable Association—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FORSYTHE: The petition of O. R. McDaniel, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOUNSBERY: The petition of Peter M. Halwick, for a pension—to the same committee.

By Mr. O'REILLY: The petition of Ann Shelly, for a pension—to the same committee.

By Mr. POEHLER: Papers relating to the Indian depredation claims of Henrietta Buggert and of John Kaula—to the Committee of Claims.

Also, papers relating to the claim of James Devine for compensation for property taken and used in the construction of Fort Hanska, Minnesota—to the same committee.

By Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois: Papers relating to the pension claim of William Hamill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 14, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia, presented the petition of William N. King, jr., late cadet midshipman United States Navy, representing that he resigned that position under a misapprehension, and praying for the passage of a law authorizing the revocation of the resignation; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WALLACE presented the petition of Hezekiah Bradford, of Philadelphia, praying for the passage of a law for the extension of his letters-patent for an improvement in machinery for separating ores; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, urging the passage of an act to allow the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Regiments of Missouri Cavalry Volunteers bounty, &c. The resolution refers to a bill that was introduced in the last session of Congress and was pending in the House. I have introduced the same bill at the present session, and it has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I move that this resolution be sent to the Committee on Military Affairs to accompany the bill introduced by myself on the same subject.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I also desire to present a joint and concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, approved May 16, 1879, instructing her Senators and requesting her Representatives in Congress to vote for and support by all honorable influences the bills now pending before Congress for the repeal of the Federal election laws of May 31, 1870, and the acts amendatory thereof of February 28, 1871, and June 10, 1872, known as the Federal supervisory election law. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE CHIPPEWA RIVER.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1734) to authorize the Secretary of War to use certain moneys appropriated by act of Congress approved March 3, 1879, "for the protection of the high sand-banks on the Chippewa River," in the completion and protection of improvements in and near the mouth of said Chippewa River, has directed me to report it back without amendment, and with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. WITHERS. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back——

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the Senator will give way for one moment, I will ask for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Michigan. It is a House bill, and has been considered by the Senate Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WITHERS. I think we had better get through with the morning business and allow Senators to make reports from committees first, and then we can take up the bill if it is necessary.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It will not take more than a minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent, and the Senator from Virginia objects.

Mr. WITHERS. I will not object to it if it will not lead to any debate.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It will not lead to any debate. It is a House bill, and has been considered and reported by the Committee on Commerce.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I notice the bill does not name the amount that is involved or what it is. Now, I should like to ask the Senator whether the bill would transfer an amount of money from a public benefit to a private benefit? I see that it is to go to a sand-bank, a high sand-bank.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is no transfer whatever. The bill authorizes the use of money heretofore appropriated to remove the sand-bank from the mouth of the river instead of higher up. It is on the same river and makes no extra appropriation. The bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I make no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2175) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. WITHERS. I am also instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back an amendment to the same bill which was offered by the Senator from Florida, [Mr. CALL,] and to ask the reference of the amendment, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Military Affairs, as it more appropriately comes within their province.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that change of reference will be made.

HOMESTEADS IN MISSOURI AND ARKANSAS.

Mr. McDONALD. The Committee on Public Lands have directed me to report back the bill (S. No. 641) to grant additional rights to homestead settlers on public lands within railroad limits in the States of Missouri and Arkansas, with an amendment, and recommend its passage. I ask the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us hear it read, Mr. President.

The bill was read.

Mr. McDONALD. I ask that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment; which was, in line 6, after the word "railroad," to insert:

Where the even sections have been granted to and received by any railroad company, or by such States respectively in aid of any railroad.

So as to make the bill read:

That from and after the passage of this act, the odd sections within the limits of any grant of public lands to any railroad company in the States of Missouri and Arkansas, or to such States respectively, in aid of any railroad where the even sections have been granted to and received by any railroad company, or by such States respectively, in aid of any railroad, shall be open to settlers under the homestead laws to the extent of one hundred and sixty acres to each settler; and any person who has under existing laws taken a homestead on any section within the limits of any railroad grant in said States, and who by existing laws shall have been restricted to eighty acres, may enter under the homestead laws an additional eighty acres adjoining the land embraced in his original entry, if such additional land be subject to entry; or if such person so elect, he may surrender his entry to the United States for cancellation, and thereupon be entitled to enter lands under the homestead laws the same as if the surrendered entry had not been made. And any person so making additional entry of eighty acres, or new entry after the cancellation of his original entry, shall be permitted to do so without payment of fees or commissions; and the residence of such person upon and cultivation of the land embraced in his original entry shall be considered residence and cultivation for the same length of time upon and of the land embraced in his additional or new entry, and shall be deducted from the five years' residence and cultivation required by law: Provided, That in no case shall patent issue upon an additional or new homestead entry under this act until the person has actually, and in conformity with the homestead laws, occupied, resided upon, and cultivated the land embraced therein at least one year.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. President——

Mr. INGALLS. I reserve the right to object, Mr. President.

Mr. McDONALD. The sole purpose of the bill is to give the right of homestead and pre-emption entry to the even-numbered sections in the States of Missouri and Arkansas within railroad grants where the railroads have taken the odd-numbered sections. Under the general law the grants apply to the even-numbered sections, but in these instances the odd-numbered sections were taken by railroad companies, and the general law excluding settlers from even-numbered sections within such grants they were unable to make their homestead or pre-emption entries. The bill simply extends the general law to them to meet that particular case. It is just like the law passed at the last session, except that it removes the difficulty in making homestead and pre-emption settlement within the railroad grants in those States, because under the general law the sections that they would be entitled to locate upon the railroad companies have taken.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator from Indiana whether or not the general laws now provide that homestead settlers can take one hundred and sixty acres on the even-numbered sections in other States?

Mr. McDONALD. Precisely. It is a copy of the general law.

Mr. ALLISON. Applied to these States?

Mr. McDONALD. Applied to these States.

Mr. ALLISON. Why is it that the general law does not apply to these States?

Mr. McDONALD. Because in these States the railroad companies took the sections that under the general law are subject to homestead and pre-emption entries. Consequently under the general law those sections cannot be pre-empted.

Mr. WALKER. The even sections are granted.

Mr. McDONALD. The grant to the companies was of even sections.

Mr. ALLISON. Instead of odd sections?

Mr. McDONALD. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I have nothing further to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. INGALLS. Upon the statement of the Senator from Indiana that it does not affect the general law as it now stands, but is made to apply to certain exceptional cases outside of the general law, I shall withhold any objection to the bill, although I think the bill is of too serious a character and too important in its results to be considered without debate. But upon the statement of the Senator from Indiana I will make no objection.

Mr. McDONALD. The Senator will see that the amendment which the committee made to the bill expressly limits this right to that class of cases where the selections have been made of even-numbered sections by the railroads in those States, and it does not apply to any other State or any other selection.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to ask a question. Am I right in supposing the intention of the Senator from Indiana, and, as he supposes, the intention of the bill is, merely to transpose the rights of settlers as between odd and even sections? Merely to provide that where a railway company has taken the even sections the right of settlers shall attach to the odd sections?

Mr. McDONALD. Yes, sir; in those grants the rights shall attach to the odd sections; that is all.

Mr. CONKLING. I asked the question for two reasons: one merely for information, but also, though in a less degree, because it strikes me that this is a very long bill to effect that purpose. If its whole object is to say that in two States where railway companies in place of taking odd sections have taken even sections, the same rights of settlers which would otherwise attach to the odd sections are hereby made to attach to the even sections, I think my honorable friend from Indiana, if he should really give himself and his pen to the effort, could draw a bill which would answer that whole purpose and which in his terse way of putting it would not contain six lines even in the large print of a Senate bill. Here is a long bill with two sections, as I hear it read, a sort of treatise on the law, merely to say that the railroads having taken the odd sections, settlers shall have the same rights on even sections that they would have had on the odd sections if the railroads had not taken them.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Indiana under what authority the railroad companies selected the even-numbered sections originally?

Mr. McDONALD. The act granted them the even-numbered sections, but the general act in regard to pre-emption rights within railroad limits applies only to those sections. The length of this bill is accounted for by the fact that it simply copies the old act and gives the settlers the same rights in these lands that under the general law they have within railroad grants as to the odd-numbered sections.

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not know what the terms of the bill are precisely, but under the statement of the Senator from Indiana I presume they are all right. I shall make no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WINDOM. Let the amendment be reported.

The Secretary read the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COASTING TRADE AND FISHING-VESSELS.

Mr. HEREFORD. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 671) to amend the act entitled "An act for enrolling and licensing ships or vessels to be employed in the coasting trade and fisheries, and for regulating the same," passed February 18, 1793, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. As soon as the substitute is read I shall ask the present consideration of the bill. It is a matter of comparatively small importance, and the bill ought to pass now and go to the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill and substitute will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. HEREFORD. Now let the substitute be read.

Mr. CONKLING. Before the substitute is reported I should like to ask a question. Is this bill reported from the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. HEREFORD. It is.

Mr. CONKLING. When was the action of the committee taken on it?

Mr. HEREFORD. There was a meeting of the committee this morning. Was not the Senator notified of the meeting?

Mr. CONKLING. Never.

Mr. HEREFORD. There was a meeting of the committee this morning.

Mr. CONKLING. It is the first time I ever heard of it. That is not very important, however, for although a member of the committee I am a very unimportant member. I never heard of it before.

Mr. HEREFORD. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] said he would notify the Senator from New York.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to know whether there was a quorum of the committee present?

Mr. HEREFORD. There was.

Mr. CONKLING. As I was not there and had no notice, I have no information about the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think the bill had better lie over until we can ascertain more fully what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will go over until to-morrow.

Mr. McPHERSON. I desire to give notice that on Monday morning at the conclusion of the morning business I shall call up this bill.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 696) for the relief of William Nephew King, jr.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CALL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 697) to establish additional mail-routes in the State of Florida; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CALL. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and I ask that the committee may report upon it at the present session.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 698) for the relief of Richard Hawley & Sons; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

SCIENTIFIC SCHOOLS FOR FEMALES.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the following resolution and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor is instructed to inquire whether it is practicable and will be beneficial to aid in the establishment and endowment of schools of science and technics in the several States and Territories and in the District of Columbia for the education of females in appropriate branches of science and the useful arts, upon a plan similar in its principles to that upon which agricultural and mechanical colleges have been aided by the United States; that said committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. MORGAN. I thought this would be an appropriate time to bring to the attention of the Senate and the Committee on Education and Labor a question which I think has been too long neglected in the United States.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, we cannot hear the Senator here, although we try to do so.

Mr. MORGAN. The subject presented by the resolution is that of the education of females in technology and in the useful arts. What I propose to submit to the Committee on Education and Labor is that the Government of the United States adopt a system for the endowment of such schools in the different States and Territories and in the District of Columbia upon a plan similar to that upon which the agricultural and mechanical colleges are already provided for. I think the subject will present itself to the friendly attention of every Senator, for under our laws we have made provision for the education of men through the bounty of the Government of the United States, and we have entirely ignored the subject of the education of women.

We have in the United States a large number of colleges and other institutions which are of great value in the education of women in all the æsthetic branches of education; but we have very few, if any, devoted entirely and exclusively to their education in technics and in the useful arts. A very large number of women and a vast amount of talent could be assembled in schools of this character, who would not only receive through an agency of this kind the means of personal support, but would also become instrumentalities for scattering abroad and diversifying useful knowledge among the entire people of the country.

I merely desire to call the attention of the Senate and of the committee to the subject. I ask the Senate to adopt the resolution, so that the committee may have ample time before we shall meet again in December to consider the question.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF DISTRICT COMMITTEE.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the necessary expenses of the Committee on the District of Columbia, authorized to sit during the recess of Congress under resolution of the Senate adopted June 6, 1879, be paid out of the "miscellaneous items" of the contingent fund of the Senate.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, owing to the extended session and the necessity which compels me to be at home after Congress adjourns, I ask to be excused from service on the select committee to examine into the circumstances connected with the removal of the Northern Cheyennes from the Sioux reservation to the Indian Territory, of which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KIRKWOOD] is chairman.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks to be excused from service on the special committee he has named. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. How shall the vacancy be filled?

Mr. COKE. I move that the vacancy be filled by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair will appoint the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] in place of the Senator from Texas.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION.

Mr. LAMAR. I move to take up for consideration and passage House bill No. 1847.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no further routine business the Chair will declare the routine morning business closed, and the Senator from Mississippi moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1847.

Mr. CONKLING. What is that bill?

Mr. LAMAR. I will state to the Senator that it is a bill to provide for the appointment of a Mississippi River commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1847) to provide for the appointment of a Mississippi River commission for the improvement of said river from the head of the passes, near its mouth, to its headwaters.

The bill was read.

Mr. MORRILL. Is this bill before the Senate for action?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. The amendments reported by the Select Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries will be read.

The first amendment reported by the committee was, in section 1, line 4, to strike out "five" and insert "seven;" so as to read:

That a commission is hereby created, to be called "the Mississippi River Commission," to consist of seven members.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I hope this amendment will not be adopted, and in speaking of it I shall necessarily speak of the other amendments.

The bill as it came from the House is, in my opinion, a very good bill, and will receive my support if it can be presented to the Senate as it came from the House; that is providing for a commission composed of three engineer officers and two civilians. This work particularly appertains to the system of river and harbor improvements. That system has always, or at least for a long period of years, been under the Engineer Bureau of the Army. I think in a great work like this it is wise to associate with the Army engineer officers civil engineers; but to associate any other bureau officers of the Government with them would be unwise, because it would involve the necessity of a division of labor which would result in discord.

The Coast and Geodetic Survey is under the control of the Treasury Department, and is a separate and specific bureau doing certain specific work. The river and harbor improvements are under the control of the Engineer Corps and necessarily are under the War Department. This work particularly appertains to the river and harbor bureau, and I think it would be unwise to unite those two bureaus in this work.

Then I think the majority of this commission should be composed of engineer officers for the reason that these engineers are necessarily, from their habits of life and their education, eminent, skilled engineers, and you cannot with the salaries provided for in this bill succeed in associating with them civil engineers of eminence. If you make the majority of the commission civil engineers, or if you increase the number of them, you necessarily diminish the efficiency of the commission, because, as I before said, eminent civil engineers cannot be employed for the salaries provided for by this bill.

But I think the main objection to this bill as amended is the combination of the authority of two Departments, the Treasury Department and the War Department; or, in other words, the Coast Survey Bureau and the river and harbor bureau. It is a division of responsibility that I think will result in inefficiency. I am in favor of the bill as it came from the House. I think it is a very wise bill, and I hope it will pass. If the bill passes in that form it will receive the support of Congress, and from year to year we shall get intelligent reports from the commission, and the estimates called for by it will be voted by Congress just as we make our appropriations for our other river and harbor improvements. I think the work will be done more efficiently with the commission as proposed in the House bill than under the bill as amended by our committee. In fact I am as sure of it as I can be of anything that has not happened. For these reasons I oppose the amendment increasing the number of the commission to seven, because the passage of that amendment would involve the necessity of adopting the other amendments of the committee, to all of which I am opposed.

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. President, in regard to the association of the Coast Survey with that of the commission, which is the point of the objection made by the Senator from Rhode Island, the bill only proposes to turn over the surveying parties of that organization already on the ground, and to allow them to complete that part of the survey of the Mississippi already assigned to them by law. The omission of this provision of the bill which the Senator objects to with this commission will have the effect of ignoring the work already done and cause it to be done over again under a different organization.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator from Mississippi how far up the Mississippi River the Coast and Geodetic Survey extends? I have not the data before me at this moment.

Mr. COCKRELL. To the northern boundary of the State of Mississippi. The jurisdiction of the Coast Survey extends from the Gulf of Mexico to the north boundary-line of the State of Mississippi, and it now has jurisdiction and is prosecuting the surveys of the river to that point.

Mr. LAMAR. Yes, sir; the part thus assigned to them comprises that part of the river and the bayous which project beyond the general coast-line of the Gulf.

As I was stating, the Coast Survey can at once put at the disposal of this proposed commission, I think, six steam-vessels, three of which there are already on the river, with officers for all and crews for one-half, whose pay is already provided for in appropriation bills passed at the last session. The Senator from Rhode Island is mistaken in his impression that the Coast Survey has not participated in these surveys of the river. The very first survey of the——

Mr. BURNSIDE. I have not made that statement. I have not stated that they have not participated in the surveys. I stated that the work of this commission is different from the work of the Coast Survey, entirely a different problem altogether; and if the Senator will allow me, as I am up, I will state now that there is no reason why this commission should not use every particle of the work of the Coast Survey, and should not from time to time use such work as the Coast Survey may present to it. I do not object to the Coast Survey going on and doing their legitimate work. They can continue their work just as they are doing it now, and all the work they do can be utilized by this commission and will be used as data in solving the great engineering problem which they are called on to solve; but it is not part of the duty of the Coast and Geodetic Survey to solve that problem.

Mr. LAMAR. The answer to that is that the disposable force of the Coast Survey is under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and it requires the co-operation of the two Departments—the War Department and the Treasury—as provided for in this bill, in order that this force of the Coast Survey shall be turned over to this commission; and the real object of introducing it is to utilize the labor that has already been performed. It will save an item of at least $50,000. The association of the Coast Survey with this work relieves the appropriation of $50,000.

Mr. BURNSIDE. None of the labor which has been done by the Coast Survey on the Mississippi River will be lost. There will be no necessity for the Coast Survey to discontinue its labor on the Mississippi River. No conflict of authority whatever can arise with the Treasury Department or the Coast Survey as to turning over to this commission all the data which it has in its possession and turning over to the commission all the data that it may prepare in its survey. The commission as organized by the House bill will have every particle of work that the Coast Survey on the Mississippi River has done to aid it in solving the problem which it is called upon to solve. It is the efficiency of this commission that I am looking to. I do not desire in any way to interfere with the work of the Coast Survey. It is a most valuable work, but it is work that does not pertain to this problem any further than providing a portion of the data by which this commission will be able to solve its problem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. LAMAR. I ask unanimous consent to continue the consideration of this bill. I do not think it will take long.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I object to going on with this bill.

POST-ROADS IN FLORIDA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask leave to make a report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads on the bill (S. No. 679) to establish additional mail-routes in the State of Florida. I beg that it may be taken up at once. The routes called for are two, which the representatives of the State regard as very important. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] handed me the routes five minutes after the other bill passed. I ask consent to pass the bill now.

Mr. WALLACE. As that is a formal matter I yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The appropriation bill will be laid aside informally, subject to call, no objection being made. The Senator from Texas reports a bill from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and asks for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 697) to establish additional mail-routes in the State of Florida was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not know that it is of any very special importance, but I think the language always employed in the laws and the language contemplated by the Constitution is "post-roads." I notice the title of this bill uses the language "mail-routes." I do not think that has been the phrase employed uniformly in the law.

Mr. MAXEY. Change the words to "post-roads."

Mr. BLAINE. It ought to be that.

Mr. MAXEY. I move to amend the bill by striking out "mail-routes" and inserting "post-roads."

Mr. BLAINE. Both in the text and in the title of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that amendment will be made. The Chair hears none, and the amendment is made.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended by striking out "mail-routes" and inserting "post-roads;" so as to read:

A bill to establish additional post-roads in the State of Florida.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR JUDICIAL EXPENSES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2252) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, it is perhaps due to the Senate that I should explain the provisions of this bill as they are. It makes a total appropriation of $2,690,000. The estimates for the year are $3,000,000. The appropriations found in this bill are usually embodied in the sundry civil bill. They were, however, for the coming year, placed in the legislative, judicial, and executive bill, which was vetoed. They have been itemized. Under the phraseology that has been heretofore used in reference to these appropriations, the words were as follows:

> For defraying the expenses of the Supreme Court and circuit and district courts of the United States, including the District of Columbia, and also for jurors and witnesses, and expenses of suits in which the United States are concerned, of prosecutions for offenses committed against the United States, and for the safe-keeping of prisoners, and for defraying the expenses which may be incurred in the enforcement of the act approved February 28, 1871, entitled "An act to amend an act approved May 30, 1870, entitled 'An act to enforce the rights of citizens of the United States to vote in the several States of the Union, and for other purposes,' or any acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto," &c.

Those are the words which have been heretofore used, but the Committees on Appropriations have changed this phraseology and itemized the sums under the information obtained from the Department of Justice, so that they have made the payment of district attorneys and their assistants a specific item. For that item there is appropriated by this bill $300,000. There was estimated by the Attorney-General $350,000.

Mr. CONKLING. If it will not be disagreeable to the Senator I should like to understand him as he goes along. Am I right in supposing the Senator to state that the vetoed bill, as he calls it, contained only the sums appropriated in this bill?

Mr. WALLACE. I so understand it for these specific purposes.

Mr. CONKLING. I speak of the Department of Justice, the judicial branch of the Government. Does the Senator say that the bill which was so often approved by the two Houses gave no larger appropriations than are found in this bill?

Mr. WALLACE. I think not. At all events, if there were any additional appropriations in that bill, they are embodied in the bill that passed yesterday—the regular legislative, executive, and judicial bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Not those that I inquire about. Not wishing to anticipate the Senator, if he will pardon me a moment I will state to him my reason for asking this question. I understand that the estimates of the Department of Justice were based upon the experience of that Department for the last four years, that resting upon that experience certain estimates were sent here and to the House. I understand that this bill as it is now in our hands falls short by a large sum of those estimates. Those estimates have been proved by experience inadequate to the purpose, as is illustrated to-day in the State of New York. A circuit court of the United States is appointed to be holden on Tuesday next at Canandaigua. At that court there should be a grand and petit jury. There are a large number of civil issues on the docket and a large number of public prosecutions which should there be tried; but no grand jury has been summoned, no petit jury has been summoned; all the suitors and all those interested in that court are to go without day because under the estimates made by the Department of Justice, according to which the appropriations of last year were made, a deficiency has been found which frustrates the course of justice.

Now, if I understand it—and I beg the Senator to correct me if I am wrong—the present bill makes, as graduated by those estimates, a deficit of more than $400,000.

Mr. WALLACE. I think not.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg the Senator's attention to that point and I beg him to inform me how that is.

Mr. WALLACE. Whatever may have been the deficiency on the subject of the expenses of the courts the last fiscal year, it was caused by a misapplication of the funds that were appropriated by the bill of last year to other purposes than conducting the courts; and the letter of the Attorney-General covered that point, I think, and it was read here during the last session of Congress.

Mr. CONKLING. Not as I understand.

Mr. WALLACE. At any rate a letter came here asking for an appropriation of $250,000 for deficiencies. The Senate committee reported $250,000 in its bill, and the Senate voted but $50,000 because $200,000 of it had been caused by reason of the use of moneys under the general appropriation, for the payment of deputy marshals and expenditures that were not contemplated and were not intended to have been made by the bill as it passed. That is the way I understand this deficiency to have occurred. But I propose to go on with the bill in order to explain it as it is on its face.

"For fees of United States commissioners" $140,000 is appropriated, and it is the amount suggested by the Attorney-General.

"For fees of United States marshals and deputies" $600,000 is the appropriation. The estimate submitted by him is $650,000.

"For fees of jurors $400,000." He submitted an estimate of $590,000, but by this bill the fees of jurors are reduced from $3 per day to $2, and that is an important reduction.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to call the attention of the Senator in charge of this bill to the fact that in the vetoed bill there is appropriated $2,800,000 for precisely the same subjects which now cover the aggregate in this bill of $2,690,000.

Mr. WALLACE. The Senator may be correct. The bill in the form in which it comes now takes from the estimate for fees of district attorneys and assistants $50,000. That deduction is because it is believed that it is not wise to pay assistants to district attorneys or special counsel the large amounts of money that have been allowed by district attorneys to persons to aid them in the trial of important cases. That item is one which can very well and very properly be reduced.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator indulge me in inquiring what did he say a moment ago about the reduction of the pay of jurors?

Mr. WALLACE. I said that by the law as it stands now they receive $3 per diem.

Mr. CONKLING. What law is that by which jurors receive $3 per diem uniformly in the Federal courts?

Mr. WALLACE. I understand that that is the law, and that this bill reduces it to $2.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to see that provision.

Mr. WALLACE. Such has certainly been the practice all over the country; and upon that basis this bill has been reduced $190,000. The marshals have made these allowances and made them at the rate of $3 a day as I understand. The next items are:

For fees of witnesses, $550,000.
For the support of United States prisoners, $193,000.

These are the same as the estimates. Next:

For rent of United States court-rooms, $67,000.

This is identical with the estimate. For the remaining items $280,000 are appropriated, which is the amount asked for by the Attorney-General. Then follows the clause at the end of the first section:

And no part of the money hereby appropriated is appropriated to pay any salaries, compensation, fees, or expenses under or in virtue of title 26 of the Revised Statutes, or of any provision of said title.

By this it will be understood at once that it is not intended to appropriate any money for the payment of any deputy marshals for election purposes this year. There is no intent to prevent the payment of money to supervisors, for they receive their pay under a general appropriation made by section 3689 in the Revised Statutes. So this provision simply restricts the payment of any money to deputy marshals of the United States.

Then follows section 2, which emphasizes the last clause in section 1, and provides that no marshal shall appoint any special deputy marshal for election purposes, for it amends the general statutes found under the head of "appropriations," section 3679, and adds after the word "Department" the words "or officer," and adds after the words "make any contract" the words "or incur any liability."

The succeeding section is the section that has been already debated fully by the Senate, and known as the repeal of the test oath. It has been amended by the House in some particulars. On page 4, lines 22 and 23 of section 3, the words are added "without reference to party affiliations" to the bill that passed the Senate; and there is added at the end of the section the provision—

That no citizen possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

The fourth section covers a demand upon the Attorney-General to make specific reports.

Mr. CONKLING. Before the Senator reaches the fourth section, will he allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. WALLACE. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. I observe in this bill an appropriation to pay township officers for summoning jurors. I am aware that in some of the States State officers draw, or have heretofore drawn, jurors from the box; very likely they have notified the jurors; but one of the provisions of this bill is that hereafter jurors shall be drawn in a uniform way, in the mode here prescribed. I inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania why we should appropriate money to pay township officers for summoning jurors hereafter, a thing which in my belief no township officer ever did? But, however that may be, in view of this proposed legislation, proceeding as we are to provide for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, why are we to devote money to paying township officers for summoning jurors in the national courts?

Mr. WALLACE. The bill before us contains this provision:

But nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any judge in a district in which such is now the practice from ordering the names of jurors to be drawn from the boxes used by the State authorities in selecting jurors in the highest courts of the State.

The phraseology of the bill is used because of the letter of the Attorney-General directed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, under date of May 29, in which he specifies the items to which the $280,000 in a mass of items included in the first section are to be applied.

Mr. CONKLING. By existing law?

Mr. WALLACE. The words are right here. I read from his letter:

The contingent expenses of a court, such as payments for watchmen; for janitors; for cleaners and sweepers; for ice; for extra meals for impaneled jurors; for transportation of prisoners removed for better security; for transportation of records; for expenses of salaried officers of the Government attending United States courts as witnesses, (clerks of the Departments and enlisted men of the United States Army;) for travel in collecting evidence in United States cases; for holding seizures; for fees of justices of the peace acting as United States commissioners; for fees of necessary stenographers; for post mortem examinations; for expenses of judges holding extra terms of court outside their districts in New York—(section 597, Revised Statutes;) for pay of interpreters in New Mexico and Louisiana; for fees to township officers in summoning jurors in New England.

Mr. CONKLING. All intelligible under existing laws; but I inquire of him why are we to appropriate for the future money to pay township officers for doing duties which this bill provides shall be done in another way and by other persons? The Attorney-General's letter was written in the presence of the existing statutes; it conforms to them, it is made intelligible by them; but if by this bill we sweep them away and substitute repugnant provisions, then why do we go on and make the appropriations which would be necessary under existing laws but which will not be necessary if this bill becomes a law?

Mr. WALLACE. I can only answer that the letter of the Attorney-General is under date of the 29th of May and the bill before the House was passed by the House about the 10th of June; and in view of the provision in the third section that jurors are to be still selected from the boxes used by the State authorities, I must infer that the necessity still exists or the House would not have continued it in the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Does my honorable friend really mean to say that he supposes that when the Department on the 27th of May made estimates for executing the law those estimates were based, not upon the law as it was, but on the law as it might be, nobody knew how or when, at a future day—can that be?

Mr. WALLACE. But if the law by its own terms was to continue in existence, and practically was in existence then, it would be necessary to appropriate in accordance with that practice, and that is what I understand this section to do in reference to this subject-matter. The House took the view of it that the practice of selecting jurors from the State boxes was to continue, and so it was necessary to appropriate accordingly. This is the way I understand the action of the House, and therefore the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate allowed the language to stand as it is.

Mr. President, heretofore in the sundry civil bill these appropriations have ranged from two million and a half to two million eight hundred thousand dollars. This bill is about $2,700,000—to be more exact, $2,690,000—or a mean between the two. The Committee on Appropriations were of opinion that the public service could be fully carried out by this sum of money; they were earnest in their wish to prevent the use of any public money for the payment of United States deputy marshals. They had no power and did not attempt to prevent the use of the public money for the payment of supervisors of election, and there is nothing in this bill that tends in that direction. They have, as far as possible, emphasized the bill upon the non-payment of deputy marshals. The bill as it stands has no amendment whatever to it proposed by the Senate committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to move an amendment which I think is necessary. The first paragraph of this bill is:

For payment of district attorneys and their assistants, $300,000.

I move to add in line 9, after the word "three hundred," the word "fifty;" so as to read "three hundred and fifty thousand dollars." That is the estimate made by the Attorney-General, and I am informed by him that that is the lowest amount that he can get along with without a deficiency; and I have before me a statement of the actual expenditures for district attorneys and their deputies for the year 1878, the last full year, showing an actual expenditure during that year of $329,447; and I would say that included in that is $7,550 for special counsel, which is certainly a very small sum and a smaller sum than is necessary during a series of years for that purpose. If we are to make these appropriations in detail, we certainly ought to make sufficient appropriations to carry on the ordinary operations of the courts.

In the bill which was vetoed, the total appropriation for the identical purposes mentioned in this bill was $2,800,000, or $110,000 more than I find in this bill; and in the vetoed bill, as well as in this, the provision for jurors was inserted; so that for the exact expenditures involved here we have, as was stated yesterday of another bill, four times agreed to an expenditure of $2,800,000. Now the appropriation for the current year I believe is $2,750,000, and there is a deficiency of $250,000 in this year's appropriation, without taking into account one single dollar of expenditure for deputy marshals. There is a deficiency in the Department of Justice of nearly $250,000 on this year's appropriation for the ordinary and necessary operations of that Department in carrying on the judicial expenses of this Government.

Mr. KERNAN. How much was the appropriation for jurors in last year's bill?

Mr. ALLISON. The appropriation last year was in totality, in wholesale as my friend from West Virginia would call it.

Mr. KERNAN. Jurors are paid by the existing law $3 a day for attendance and for going home and coming to the court five cents a mile.

Mr. CONKLING. That is true of petit jurors. Is it true of grand jurors too?

Mr. KERNAN. I think so, but I will read the section. Eight hundred and fifty-two is the section at any rate.

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, section 852. It may apply to both, but my understanding was that it applied to petit jurors alone.

Mr. KERNAN. I can read it.

Mr. WALLACE. On the margin of the book it appears "fees of grand and petit jurors."

Mr. KERNAN. It begins by saying "all jurors."

Mr. ALLISON. That may to some extent reduce the expenses for jurors. The appropriation here for jurors is $190,000 less than the amount estimated by the Attorney-General.

Mr. KERNAN. This bill strikes off more than a third of the present allowance for jurors.

Mr. ALLISON. But with an appropriation of $2,750,000 there is a large deficit now, and the actual expenditure for the ordinary operations of the Government for district attorneys for the year ending June 30, 1878, was $329,000, including only $7,500 for special attorneys' fees, and now it is proposed to make the total appropriation for the compensation of district attorneys, their deputies, and special counsel, $300,000, or $50,000 less than the Attorney-General estimates. If we are to appropriate in detail and only for the ordinary expenses of the courts, let us so appropriate as to furnish a sufficient amount of money to carry on the Government operations in the various courts.

Mr. WALLACE. I hope this amendment will not prevail. The expenditures in this Department have grown wonderfully. In ten years they have grown from $1,600,000 to about $2,700,000. Year by year they swell, and there must be a period put somewhere or all the business of all the courts will be absorbed by and controlled through the Department of Justice—a new Department and one that has existed but of recent years.

Now, as to the fees of district attorneys and their assistants—by the terms of this bill all assistants are included—these are men who are hired to prosecute a case on behalf of the Government outside of the regular official staff of the district attorney's office, and the committee did not think it wise to give the amount of money which was claimed by the Attorney-General for that purpose. This, we thought, was a point upon which we could well apply the knife.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator a question? How much does he say the Attorney-General estimates for special counsel fees?

Mr. WALLACE. I do not know. The estimates for the general subject, "district attorneys and their assistants," is $350,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I have before me a statement of the actual expenses of 1878, the last year known, in which is included only $7,550 for extra assistance.

Mr. WALLACE. But that Congress gave to the Department of Justice but $259,000 for that purpose; yet the Senator says they expended $329,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Where does the Senator find that?

Mr. WALLACE. By a statement of record, $259,000, furnished me by our clerk, taken from the act making the appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. For what year?

Mr. WALLACE. The year 1878, the year to which the Senator refers.

Mr. ALLISON. Was that the expenditure?

Mr. WALLACE. The amount appropriated.

Mr. ALLISON. The appropriation was, in bulk, $2,800,000 for all purposes. Now, that only shows that the Attorney-General, if he made that estimate for $259,000 then, made a mistake, because the actual expenditure was $329,000.

Mr. WALLACE. But it shows he understood there was about $259,000 of necessity. If he spent $329,000 he went beyond what he thought was necessary. So it swells day by day and year by year, and the knife must be applied some place. We think this is a good place to put it.

Mr. ALLISON. It does not swell year by year. The appropriations for the Department of Justice have been substantially the same for a number of years, five or six years. It is true they are not now what they were in 1863, 1864, and 1865, when the operations of our courts were confined to only a portion of the country. They are much more now than they were in 1864 it is true, but not because of any extravagance in the Department of Justice, but because of the necessity arising from the extension of our judicial system throughout every portion of our country.

Mr. WALLACE. When we had all the difficulties growing out of reconstruction in 1868, the total amount appropriated for the Department of Justice for these purposes was $1,621,000. This year you have $2,800,000. The United States Government at that time had more suits in court than it has to-day of its own, more prosecutions in its own name, more seizures, more suits for civil penalties than it has now; and yet the expenses have continued to swell, and until there came a different power on the other side of the Capitol they continued swelling. They have, I concede, retrograded somewhat the last three years.

Mr. ALLISON. Very little. The Senator has taken occasion to speak about a change of politics at the other side of the Capitol. The appropriation bills for the last three or four years for the Department of Justice have been substantially the same as they were before—the original appropriations and the deficiencies together, I mean—and is it possible that the democratic party has been in power in one branch of Congress for nearly five years and has failed to curtail the appropriations of the Department of Justice if those appropriations could be properly curtailed?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But the Senator knows that they had been regularly and annually increasing until the knife stopped that increase in the other House.

Mr. ALLISON. There had been no great increase.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to remind the Senator from Iowa that while these court expenses have been increasing, the whole country and the whole business of the country has been wonderfully increasing. For instance, in my own State, which, during the period of time spoken of by the Senator from Pennsylvania, has grown from fifty thousand to five hundred thousand in population, the business of the courts of the United States has increased ten-fold, necessarily, naturally; it is the natural growth and increase of the business. That is true of all the West.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] in line 9 of section 1, after the word "hundred," to insert "and fifty;" so as to read:

For payment of district attorneys and their assistants, $350,000.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I shall vote for this amendment and I will assign very briefly my reasons for voting for it.

It is a juggle of politics, not to be learned for the first time now if learned at all, to diminish appropriation bills and then bluster and brag about it and afterward in deficiency bills put in what was left out. I have heard of such things before; I think other members of the Senate have heard of them. I listened some time ago to a statement in figures made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] displaying—I will not characterize it otherwise—displaying the facts upon which and in the face of which two or three years ago the country was asked to believe that a great reform had been accomplished. "Reform" was the word employed. That word is very apt to be adopted, I notice, in reference to some hollow, unreal, pretended thing which partisans or political parties do. There was a cutting down of appropriation bills; and when it was done the country was not big enough to hold the noise which was made about it, the great applause and acclaim; cutting down the appropriation bills, and then by degrees we were all indulged in the luxury of voting to make up deficiency after deficiency until deficiencies had evened up the whole boasted retrenchment in substance.

Knowing as I do how entirely guileless in politics the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania is, knowing as I do how entirely untaught and untrained he is in the devices which carry elections and which win votes in Pennsylvania or anywhere else for the side which he espouses, I cannot for one moment allow myself to suspect that he is engaged in an electioneering pretense, that he wants anybody in the galleries or beyond the galleries to suppose that he and his associates are cutting down the cost of government because they split the bills up, put only a part in one, and then bring in as they are compelled to do afterward deficiency bills to make up the original total. I know that Senator is incapable of anything of that kind. Therefore I remind him, not merely of the general fact stated by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] but of a fact more exactly felt and known by the members of the Judiciary Committee, namely, that since 1868 a large number of new courts have been created, States have been divided, new judicial districts have been formed, additional judges have been appointed, the judicial staff of the nation has been increased largely, additional marshals have been appointed, additional clerks have been appointed; and I may say—I hope my motive in reminding the Senate of the fact will not be misconstrued—that this is not done in the older States, in the Northern and Northeastern States; it has occurred in the West, in the South, and in the Southwest. It was only the other day that we acted upon a bill relating to a new district which has been made in Texas. It was on a more recent day that I heard the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] ask permission "to introduce the following bill without previous notice," and then was read a bill, if I understood it aright, providing for the appointment of a clerk and a marshal and all the rest of the paraphernalia belonging to a judicial district in the State of Alabama. If I am wrong one of the eminent Senators from that State will set me right, no doubt. I do not speak of that bill to criticise it. I only speak of it to remind the Senate that, as years go on, as population increases, as enterprise and industry and business multiply and become more varied, so the demand for additional judicial facilities and opportunities increases; and so Congress, yielding as it has done many times since 1868, erects new districts, establishes new courts; and thus for a double reason the cost of the judicial establishment increases as time goes on.

So much I think explains sufficiently all that can be said truly of the increase of expenditures in this Department. Now, be that as it may, here comes a bill in the very first line of which I find a suggestive word:

That for the purpose of providing for certain judicial expenses of the Government.

We used to have a bill providing for the judicial expenses of the Government, and in that one bill the intention was to embrace everything which should be devoted to that branch of the public service. If anything was omitted it was omitted by accident and not by design. Here comes a bill which is to make appropriations "for certain judicial expenses." Among those "certain judicial expenses" which we find denoted in the bill is the cost of the courts of justice, the prosecuting officers, the judges, witnesses' fees where the United States is a party, and the jurors with their pay and mileage.

Mr. WALLACE. The judges' salaries are not in this bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought they were. The judges' salaries are fixed by law, and it is a mere ministerial act to provide for them.

Mr. WALLACE. The appropriation for them is in another bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I omit that, then, from what I said. But I wish to speak to the matter of jurors, witnesses, prosecuting officers, and what I may call the active, constant machinery of administering justice. Taking the estimates as we have done heretofore, those estimates being based on experience, we find that last year if I remember aright—and I think the Senator from Iowa has made that statement,—a deficiency was revealed of $250,000; or I believe something more.

Mr. ALLISON. About that.

Mr. CONKLING. Now this bill proposes to increase that deficiency by more than $100,000 additional. So we stand here in the face of the fact that by a deficiency bill as certain as time goes on, we shall be called to vote $400,000 in addition as the actual cost of the judicial branch of the service. Why should that be? As I said before, if it were for electioneering effect I could understand it; but I have also said that the remarkable freedom of the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania from every propensity and tendency in his nature and practice to do anything for electioneering effect forbids me to suppose that it is in such an enterprise that he engages. Were it the honorable Senator from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] whom I see sitting next to the Senator from Pennsylvania, remembering him as I do in days that are long gone by, remembering how astute and careful he used to be about political effects, and is yet I presume, I do not know but that I might indulge myself in the liberty of supposing that among his calculations would be, as far as it could properly and consistently be regarded, the political effect to be produced at large. But as I have already said, knowing that such a thought is a stranger to the mind of the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, and therefore that not being the purpose, I cannot understand why we should not in an intelligent, plain-spoken way, without any juggle or trick of bookkeeping or accounts, without anything to throw dust in the eyes of anybody, appropriate what we all know to be necessary and what we all know will eventually be appropriated unless we are to smite with paralysis the judicial branch of the Government.

So, Mr. President, I shall vote for this amendment; but no doubt it will be voted down, because when the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania rises as he did a moment ago, and issues a ukase, if I may so call it, a mild-mannered phrase, a gentle, hesitating suggestion to the majority that he hopes this amendment will be voted down, that sound is like the ring of the hammer on the last nail of the coffin; I know of course it will be voted down.

Mr. HEREFORD. An amendment would send the bill back to the House.

Mr. CONKLING. What does my friend from West Virginia say? He made a remark in his seat, which I did not catch.

Mr. HEREFORD. If the bill is amended in the Senate it has to go back to the House, and that keeps us here that much longer.

Mr. CONKLING. Does not the honorable Senator from West Virginia know that the House is the great fountain, the great source of democratic doctrine, of democratic retrenchment and reform, with the emphasis on all the vowels when you say "reform?" The Senator knows that; and yet he hesitates about having this bill go back to that most infallible, as I suppose, according to his judgment, of all human tribunals. Certainly it is the safest place in the world to have it go, a House in which a previous question prevails, a previous question under which you can pass a bill, particularly when the rules are suspended, so quick that an ordinarily instructed spectator standing there cannot see how it is done.

Mr. HEREFORD. We are aware of the filibustering that the Senator's political friends engage in in the House, and which they are engaged in to-day.

Mr. CONKLING. Filibustering!

Mr. HEREFORD. Yes, sir; they are engaged in it now.

Mr. CONKLING. I am shocked to hear the Senator from West Virginia use that word. It certainly implies a knowledge on his part of revolutionary methods that I supposed a great conservative statesman like him had never thought of or allowed to be brought to his observation.

Mr. President, let me say to that honorable Senator that "evil communications corrupt good manners," and if any man approaches him to speak of such a thing as filibustering, as his friend I advise him to turn away and hear it not. Such a word does not belong to the vocabulary of one who leads a great conservative party engaged in the beneficent work which now occupies the time of the organization to which my honorable friend belongs.

Mr. HEREFORD. They have been instructed by a joint caucus the other day to do it.

Mr. CONKLING. My friend again verifies what I have said, that his associations of late have had a demoralizing and corrupting influence upon him. I find that he, too, has been in caucus. He has been one of the pins and rivets in this great machine which operates, we know not where, in the dark cloisters and recesses of this building; I do not know where they are held. The truth is, Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia makes a disclosure this morning of an amount of political guile and privity with devious and questionable ways, which I confess I was not prepared to hear from one as innocent as I believed him to be. [Laughter.]

When, as I began to say and intended to conclude by saying, this mild-spoken command of the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] to vote down this amendment is obeyed, as it will be of course, the vote will simply declare to me, and when I have occasion to narrate, if I ever do, the interesting and imposing proceeding of this council, I shall so state, that that vote signified that the intention was, to cause a deficiency, to allow a deficiency to exist, and to make this alleged appropriation bill "for certain judicial expenses" a deceptive and confusing and misleading document, so that when the average democratic editor comes to look into the legislation of the country to see what has been done by his party and finds or thinks he finds that $2,690,000 was the total cost to which they had reduced the judicial establishment of the country, that will be mere delusion, mere snare, mere deception to him, because it will not be true that this amount covers the items which are here expressly set down.

I believe that is unwise legislation; I believe it is uncandid proceeding; not that I mean to say it is so intended at all, but I mean it is calculated to produce deceptive and mistaken effect, and also calculated to cripple and hinder this branch of the service. Therefore I shall vote to add what the Senator from Iowa has suggested that being within the actual estimates based upon experience.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, this bill, for the first time in the history of appropriation bills, undertakes to itemize the appropriations for this Department, and it is the purpose of the representatives of the people, as expressed in this bill, to specifically appropriate these amounts. In the past a sweeping appropriation has been made of two and three quarter million dollars, or $2,800,000, covering all the specific appropriations made here. In their judgment, they, who are nearest the people, looking to the past, have come to the conclusion that these amounts are all that is necessary to carry on these courts. There is no purpose such as is insinuated by the Senator from New York, to close the courts and starve the officials, to deprive either the clerks or the district attorneys or the judges of their salaries; but, upon the contrary, there is the intention to apply the homely principle that a man with an empty pocket will not spend as much money as a man with a full pocket. We propose to require these officers to go carefully in regard to the expenditure of their money. This is the purpose of those who have the control of the purse of the people; and if there be fault found in thus initiating for the first time a bill of items, we must submit to the fault that is found by the Senator from New York. This is the first time that Congress has undertaken to itemize these appropriations.

Mr. President, the Senator from New York with great gravity compliments me on my record as a politician. I accept it with all humility coming as it does from a Senator who always upon that side of the floor leads those who leave his party! He always breaks the ranks, and unites with us, joins with us in attempting to carry anything that we think we ought to have votes for from that side! And at home, too, he is well known as a gentleman who breaks from party leadings, who does not believe in party politics or party policy! Certainly the Senator has the right to say of me that I am a politician. I have been such; but the Senator from New York always has the reverse position here and elsewhere. I accept with all due humility his characterization of me as a politician. I try to do my duty. I am trying to do it now.

And then he says that, with words of mildness, I issue my ukase. I am in charge of this bill. I have issued no ukase. I am a mild-mannered man, it is true. I have asked my party associates to stand by this bill as it is. We think it is right; we propose to vote for it; and it being right, feeling that it is right as it comes here from the other House, I think the Senator ought again to lead that branch of his party which always breaks from stalwart lead, and unite with the democrats in doing that which is right. This bill is right. We ask aid and help. Will not the Senator from New York break away now and help us to pass this bill? I think he should.

Seriously, Mr. President, there is, there can be no fault found with this bill, coming as it does from the House, itemizing these appropriations, specifically appropriating the money for these various items of expenditure as the House believes they ought to be appropriated for. We think in the pending item $300,000 is enough, and that the demand for $350,000 is too much.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I am very much edified by the care with which the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania proposes now to itemize a little bill with a couple of million dollars in it when yesterday we were asked to swallow $20,000,000 in an appropriation bill of nineteen lines, and when the Senator from Kentucky had itemized it his measure covered eighty-eight pages, and he was—shall I say bulldozed—was bulldozed by his party associates out of even offering his two days' labor to itemize what was in that bill, and it was crammed down our throats in nineteen lines. And now on a little bill for judicial expenses the Senator from Pennsylvania says that his party have come to the conclusion that it must not be done in bulk as heretofore, but must be deliberately and carefully itemized. It is a wonderfully straight and beautiful course the record that my friends of the Appropriation Committee are making this session—$20,000,000 in nineteen lines—a little more than a million per line, and we were yesterday compelled to swallow it at one gulp, and to-day a couple of million must be itemized like a grocer's account.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I did carefully itemize the bill passed yesterday. The bill of the current year that we adopted was of course a carefully itemized bill. It was, I admit, a little troublesome to make the facts plain, but when once reached it contains well-considered items for everything. It is a good rule, as the Senator said, to itemize everything, and I must assert with emphasis that if there is any Department of the Government that needs to have its appropriation bills carefully itemized it is this Department of Justice. Why do I say so? I hold in my hand a letter from the Attorney-General of the United States sent to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate on the 20th of February last, which I think shows conclusively the absolute importance of itemizing all the provisions of this bill and all sums of money that go into his hands. I will read it. I believe I can read it quite as loud as the Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, February 20, 1879.

Hon. WILLIAM WINDOM,
Chairman Appropriations Committee, United States Senate.

SIR: In answer to the request of the committee for the amount, if any, which will be required by the Department to complete its service for the current fiscal year, I reply that such estimate must necessarily be approximated and based upon the expenditures of the preceding years.

For the year ending June 30, 1878, an appropriation was made to this Department of $2,650,000. A subsequent bill was passed for a deficiency of $150,000, and a deficiency of $110,000 has been asked for by me in addition, which will probably meet all the expenditures for that year, making in all the sum of $2,910,000.

The current appropriation—

That is for the current fiscal year ending on the 30th day of this month—

is for $2,750,000. I should have hoped to have made the expenditures for the current year something less than for the year previous, say $2,800,000, which would have left a deficiency of only $50,000 to be provided for.

His idea was, Senators will I hope observe, up to this point that all the necessary expenditures for this year would be $2,800,000. We are now proposing to give him $2,690,000 for the ordinary expenses for the next fiscal year, and the amount saved by cutting down the fees that have been paid to jurors heretofore and those allowed in this bill reaches $190,000, so that we are providing for him for the next fiscal year $80,000 more than his own estimates of what he regarded as the amount necessary for the proper expenditure for the present fiscal year, as we have cut down the pay of jurors from $3 to $2 per day. He says:

Had it not been for two classes of expenditure; one for deputy marshals appointed under section 878 of the Revised Statutes to attend elections, (the expenses of supervisors not being paid through the judiciary fund,)—

We are not troubling or interfering with those gentlemen, as I think we ought to, but I am content to let them remain and report to Congress the facts as they understand them—and the other for carrying on prosecutions necessarily caused by violations of the election laws. These two items will in my opinion amount to $200,000, of which $75,000 will be for the expenses of the deputy marshals, and $125,000 for the expense attending the prosecutions. These latter expenses will necessarily be large, especially in the States of Louisiana, Alabama, and South Carolina, but the means of estimating them precisely I do not possess. Under section 878 large expenditures are made on behalf of the defendants in many cases by direction of the presiding judges.

I respectfully suggest, therefore, that, if it is thought advisable to cover the anticipated deficiency for the current fiscal year by an appropriation, the sum appropriated should be $250,000. I inclose a draught of an amendment to the deficiency bill, as suggested by you, which follows substantially the language of former appropriations.

I ought to add in this connection that a considerable portion of the expenses caused by prosecutions for violation of the election laws will come under the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, which of course are not taken into consideration in connection with what I have said as to such expenditures for the current fiscal year.

Many continuances are granted by the presiding judges, and the cases cannot be concluded during the present fiscal year, although I endeavor to press them to a speedy determination.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. DEVENS, Attorney-General.

This letter shows the necessity for this itemized bill as now proposed by Congress. We had been in the habit of giving the Attorney-General all the money he asked to carry on his Department in the lump, and he had been in the habit of using the appropriation to pay as many deputy marshals to superintend elections and as many attorneys to conduct what he called prosecutions in election cases as he saw fit, and when the lumping sum thus given him had been exhausted for the fiscal year to which it applied, he then tells us there are deficiencies in the money appropriated and that he has not the amount necessary to carry on the legitimate business of the courts. Now, sir, we propose to give him what is necessary for the legitimate purposes of the courts and to say to him, "you shall not apply the money thus given to keep up your political partisan machinery at the polls or to carry on your political prosecutions for partisan political purposes nor to hire your deputy marshals, whether you take them out of Sing-Sing or any other jail or penitentiary, to control elections within any of the States of this Union, but you shall apply it as it is appropriated by Congress and not as you have applied it on your own volition heretofore." The Attorney-General himself in this letter shows the absolute necessity of the representatives of this people specifying definitely what the money they vote out of the taxes collected shall be applied for; and it is because the developments he has made in this communication show, as is known to all of us by the facts developed by recent examinations and his admissions that he has misapplied the money of the people or at least applied it in ways that the representatives of the people never would have allowed him to apply it if they had suspected he was so applying it, that we have itemized this bill and told him how he shall apply the money that we vote. We do not propose to embarrass the courts. We are providing for everything that is necessary for their maintenance, but we do not intend to allow the Attorney-General to control the politics of this country by the unlimited use of the taxes wrung from the labor or sweat of the people.

The Senator from New York complains that the democratic party make small appropriations at first, and then make up the amounts required in deficiencies. The records of this Government will show, the finance reports of this Government will show that from the time the democratic party came into power in the lower House, we have reduced the expenditures of this Government every year from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 a year, deficiency bills included. The finance reports of this country, I repeat, show these facts year by year. The deficiencies complained of are in most instances deficiencies created by radical heads of Departments and bureaus, just as the Attorney-General created the deficiencies in his. When we make an appropriation for a whole year and furnish it to any Department of the Government, they expend it, as they have done time and again, in eight months, and then come back to Congress and say, "there is a deficiency, and this branch of the Government must stop if you do not give us more money." It is because they refuse to obey the law, refuse to content themselves with the sums of money given them, refuse to require men to work for them for the wages the same men would work for if employed by other people, and pay the marshals, deputy marshals, and assistant attorneys fees double, treble, yes, in many cases quadruple what the same men would perform the same service for if you and I were seeking to employ them, and use the money for purposes for which the representatives of the people never intended it to be used for, and then come and say, "the courts must stop; we have no more money." Why have they not more money, or money enough for their wants? Because the money that was intended for the use of the courts, the money that was intended to pay jurors, the money that was intended for witnesses and for other legitimate purposes, has been used for purposes for which the representatives of the people never intended it; and then the men for whom it was intended cannot get the pay. The head of this Department creates the deficiency, charges the Congress with making the deficiency, and rather than allow the courts to stop, we have been good-natured enough to make up those so-called deficiencies for the Attorney-General time and again. Now, with a law that no officer or Department of this Government can, without being guilty of a high misdemeanor, and without being guilty of embezzlement, (for the embezzlement act covers it,) that no officer or Department of the Government shall expend any money appropriated by Congress otherwise than as appropriated, and that no officer shall make any contract or expend more during any fiscal year than the amount appropriated without being guilty of a misdemeanor, we purpose to itemize the accounts, and say to the Attorney-General you shall expend this much for marshals, so much for jurors, this much for witnesses, so much for attorneys; and then if he creates any deficiency in the legitimate expenditure and comes and shows the money was legitimately expended we shall be in a condition to see how he has expended the money, and to hold him responsible for any wrong expenditure, and then we can make up whatever is necessary if we have, and he can show it, failed to give him the proper amount. But when we give him a lumping sum, as we have done heretofore, he can spend as much as he pleases for any particular purpose. What limitation was there on him, when Congress gave $2,750,000, to prevent him from taking $500,000 of it for electioneering purposes and to appoint deputy marshals, no matter how vile they were, and from instituting all sorts of political prosecutions?

Mr. ALLISON. May I be allowed to ask a question?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Kentucky speaks of $500,000 for deputy marshals. Will he tell us how much was expended for deputy marshals in 1878?

Mr. BECK. I stated that he could, if he saw fit, while the total appropriation was in a lumping sum, give $500,000 for electioneering purposes. I read what he said in this letter that—

> These two items will in my opinion amount to $200,000, of which $75,000 will be for the expenses of the deputy marshals, and $125,000 for the expense attending the prosecutions.

That is what the Attorney-General said in that letter.

Mr. ALLISON. That does not cover the point I wanted to ascertain from the Senator; that is, how much was expended in 1878 for deputy marshals?

Mr. BECK. The amount expended has been published in tabulated form during the long debates we have had over and over again.

Mr. ALLISON. I only ask for information.

Mr. BECK. I did not keep it in my mind for I did not expect to speak upon this subject. But what was spent in 1872, in 1876, and in 1878, and the character of the men to whom it was paid, has all been set forth in the public prints of the country and in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I do not pretend to know at this moment to a cent how much was expended for these purposes. This I do know, that we are pursuing the true course; and judging from all that has taken place in the past, when we limit the expenditures to particular items, and when after he said that $2,800,000 was all that the demands of the Department required for the current fiscal year, we have cut down the expenses of that Department $190,000 by reducing the pay of jurors, and then have given him $2,690,000, we have given a sum largely in excess for the current fiscal year of what he himself stated was necessary for the legitimate purposes for the current fiscal year. Then surely we have done all that an officer desirous to carry on his Department and not to run it as a mere political machine ought to ask for. When he asked that $250,000 deficiency even from a republican Congress and a debate was had last March upon that deficiency, we said, "You shall not have that $250,000," and we gave him $50,000 in order to stop the expenditure of that money.

Mr. BLAINE. May I ask the Senator a question, with his permission?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. BLAINE. Where did the Committee on Appropriations, if the Senator understands the course of information, get their information on which this partition was made of what has formerly been appropriated in bulk? On what information was this partition made, and from whom?

Mr. BECK. I have not got it in detail.

Mr. WALLACE. It was obtained by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the House from the Attorney-General, in detail, on the 10th of December.

Mr. BLAINE. That is what I supposed. Here is a tremendous broadside from the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, and now from the honorable Senator from Kentucky, about making a great reform in the mode of appropriation, whereas it was formerly in bulk and now it is divided; and when we get down to the bottom of it it is divided exactly according to the mode the Attorney-General has heretofore expended it.

Mr. WALLACE. But the Senator from Maine forgets that the Attorney-General itemized it in accordance with a request from the Committee on Appropriations of the House, and that they asked him for the details.

Mr. BLAINE. He itemized the appropriation according to the mode he has been expending it. That is all the information they had, and here is a great outcry made about the same expenditure of money made in the very manner it is provided this shall be expended.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) The Senator from Kentucky declines to yield further.

Mr. BECK. There is no declining about it. I gave way for a question, and I wish to answer it.

Mr. BLAINE. There is no declining about it, only the Senator wants me to sit down and go no further.

Mr. BECK. I would be obliged to the Senator if he would; but I did not like to ask him, because he would not obey me; and, therefore, I did not care about requesting him to do anything he would not do. I was about to give the answer that I know nothing about it personally, except the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House said to me that he was going to the Department to endeavor to get all the aid he could in having the expenditures itemized, the House and the Senate having determined to itemize them and prevent the Attorney-General from putting it in bulk as he had been in the habit of doing, and for any purpose he saw fit, and using it, as we thought, for the very worst of purposes. When he did as was required by the committee of the House we said to him we will give you two million dollars and a half, or $2,690,000, or what is necessary for the legitimate purposes of your Department, but we do not intend to give you a slush fund to run elections, to get up false prosecutions, and to make your Department a great political machine; if it is to be a department of justice, it shall not be made a department of corruption and injustice. When he was told that he must give it or they would itemize it themselves, on the best lights before them, or on the demand of his subordinates for information, I suppose he gave it; no doubt he gave it reluctantly; no doubt it curtails him very much; but we have got it and are using it, and we intend to hold him to it if we can. The complaint now is that we are doing that, instead of allowing him to have it all, as he had it before and as he would doubtless like to have in all time to come, to use as he pleases.

I repeat again, the Senator from West Virginia is more familiar with the details of the exact savings made by the democratic party than I am, but I think I can state the figures with great accuracy, in reply to the Senator from New York. Notwithstanding all the deficiencies and all the irregularities, the fact remains, shown upon the books of the Department, that the democratic party since they have come into power have reduced the expenditures of this Government, even in a growing country, on an average of from ten to twenty million dollars a year each year since they even had a partial control of affairs. This is an effort still further to reduce the expenditures, still further to control the use of money for corrupt purposes and for electioneering purposes and for partisan purposes. We are endeavoring to hold the Attorney-General and his Department to legitimate expenses for legitimate purposes.

Mr. BLAINE. Before the honorable Senator from Kentucky sits down I should like him to answer a question. The political purposes to which he adverts are the employment of course of deputy marshals. In this bill, at lines 14 and 15, I find this appropriation:

> For fees of United States marshals and their deputies, $600,000.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] will be good enough to refresh my memory as to the amount expended in any one year for deputy marshals used in elections.

Mr. ALLISON. I was trying to get at the details, and supposed the Senator from Kentucky would have them, because his mind seems to be full of the subject.

Mr. BLAINE. But that is not the kind of knowledge he wanted probably.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the expenditure last year was about $68,000 in all; that is, in 1878.

Mr. BLAINE. I want the honorable Senator from Kentucky, or the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia,] who is on the floor, to give me the maximum amount that ever was expended in any one year for the deputy marshals employed at elections.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator appeals to me. I do not recollect, but my impression is now that in some years it amounted to between $250,000 and $300,000.

Mr. BLAINE. Then you have appropriated double the amount this time.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, no.

Mr. BLAINE. Why not?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator will recollect that a part of those funds is paid from what is known as a permanent annual appropriation.

Mr. BLAINE. The marshals?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The supervisors; and they have construed it in the Department so that they may pay the marshals, I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand they have.

Mr. ALLISON. I know they have not.

Mr. BLAINE. Then I want to know why the honorable Senator from West Virginia has been assisting his brother democrats in making all this row in regard to an annual appropriation if the Department could pay them from a permanent appropriation? What have we been wrangling over these three months, if these very appropriations are all permanent appropriations? Do I understand the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to state that?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I stated that the Department in some cases had construed the Revised Statutes under the permanent annual appropriations to allow them to pay certain marshals, and I have been so informed by the Department.

Mr. BLAINE. And now I understand the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to say that in addition, beyond the permanent appropriation which the Department says they have got, in order to have a full amount to carry out the deputy marshals at elections, you appropriate $600,000 specially in this bill.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. BLAINE. I have got the floor this time.

Mr. BECK. I thought I had the floor and yielded for a question.

Mr. BLAINE. Of course I will yield to the Senator from Kentucky; but then I am able to stand, and not sit.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly, all the time the Senator wants.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Maine, as I understood, said, "Before the Senator from Kentucky sits down I desire him to answer me a question," and he put a question in regard to those two lines, and I supposed I was answering the Senator.

Mr. BLAINE. That was the trouble, I did not get the answer.

Mr. BECK. I think I can answer the Senator, if he will allow me, right now.

Mr. BLAINE. That is what I want.

Mr. BECK. As I understand it, lines 14 and 15 allow $600,000 for fees of United States marshals and their deputies—that is, the marshals of the United States and the deputy marshals of the United States who are employed in the legitimate business of attending to courts and everything connected with the ordinary carrying on of the business of the Department of Justice, outside of everything else.

Mr. BLAINE. You do not say so. The bill does not say so.

Mr. BECK. When the Attorney-General brings in his account and the account is balanced, as to how he has used this $600,000, I guarantee he will not have a single dollar of it that he will dare to say he gave to Mr. John I. Davenport or anybody else to carry an election with.

Mr. BLAINE. On what ground does the Senator make that "dare?"

Mr. BECK. Because, on the ground of calculation——

Mr. BLAINE. I want the Senator to avow the ground on which he will make that "dare." Here is an appropriation "for fees of United States marshals and their deputies, $600,000." How do you say that the Attorney-General will be empowered to employ one class of deputy marshals and will not dare to employ another class? I wish to get a specific avowal on that point either from the Senator from Kentucky or the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the Senator allow me to answer?

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly.

Mr. WALLACE. This is an appropriation of $600,000 for United States marshals and their deputies, and the concluding clause of that section is:

> And no part of the money hereby appropriated is appropriated to pay any salaries, compensation, fees, or expenses under or in virtue of title 26 of the Revised Statutes, or of any provision of said title.

Under that clause alone the deputy marshals are to be appointed.

Mr. BECK. That settles it.

Mr. BLAINE. Now——

Mr. BECK. Let me finish the rest of my answer. That finishes the first question. The next question was, could I tell how many deputy marshals were appointed and what they were paid? I could not at the moment when the question was asked me by the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Maine, but I turn to a speech made in the last Congress (and I can refer to that it not being the present Congress) by one of my colleagues from Kentucky, Judge Durham, on the expenditures of the Department of Justice, on the 19th of February, 1879. Gentlemen can see it by turning to the RECORD of the 20th of February. He went to the Department of Justice to ascertain all those facts, and he presented a table containing a list of supervisors and deputy marshals employed in the Federal elections in 1876, and their pay, and also the pay of chief supervisors and United States commissioners under the election laws. He gave it by States, how much was paid to each, and the total paid was $275,296.60, as the Department told him. He then gave a list of supervisors and deputy marshals employed in the Federal elections in 1878, except for chief supervisors in the northern and southern districts of New York, which had not been sent to the Department, and those of New Jersey, Eastern New York, and Pennsylvania not fully adjusted. With all those outstanding he again gave it by States, and he showed that the total paid for the elections in that year was $202,291. Those statements would be very useful again to go into the RECORD for this Congress, and I will hand them to Mr. Murphy, if there is no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. There will be no objection.

The tables referred to are as follows:

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me just a moment?

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Failing to secure an answer from the Senator from Kentucky with reference to the very question he now answers I sent for a speech more recently made than the speech of the Senator's colleague. I find in a speech made by Hon. Mr. WALLACE, on the 3d day of June, in the Senate, that the total expenditures as reported and stated by him for deputy United States marshals in elections was one hundred and twelve thousand dollars and a few odd cents, and the total for 1878 was $68,446; so that of all this vast sum for the two years the amount is a little over $150,000.

Mr. BLAINE. Yesterday it was quite admitted before we got through with the singular bill that passed, that no gentleman on that side of the Chamber could possibly explain its provisions, or the amount it involved, or what it tended to. Now I am in hopes that this will be clarified, and that we will get a perfect apprehension of its contents through the kindness of the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Pennsylvania.

I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania to advise the Senate and the country that this bill, by the inhibition which he read, is intended to effect for the year 1879–'80, (the fiscal year on the eve of which we now stand,) with reference to United States deputy marshals at elections precisely what was intended by the bill for the repeal of the general law which the President vetoed. Is that the understanding?

Mr. WALLACE. I think the Senator states it as fairly as it is possible for us to do it. It is what we intend to do, to direct what shall be done with this money, and to so legislate that it cannot be used for the payment of special deputy marshals to be used at elections.

Mr. BLAINE. You intend to say to the President of the United States that, having vetoed a bill repealing a general law, we are going to force you to sign a bill which will make that law invalid and helpless for one year; and then when the next year comes around for an appropriation we will do it for the other year. We will make you stand up before the country and write yourself down an ass by signing a bill which prohibits your doing for each consecutive year what you refused to do in a permanent way under the law. Is that the contemplation?

Mr. WALLACE. We undertake by this bill to decline to appropriate any money for United States special deputy marshals. If refusing to sign a bill because it does not contain something, excuses a President from being written down an ass, then he will not be so written down.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the honorable Senator say that this bill stops there?

Mr. WALLACE. It prevents the payment of money for that purpose for this year. It proposes to do no more.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the honorable Senator intend to create the impression before the Senate or the country that this bill stops by merely not appropriating for deputy marshals?

Mr. WALLACE. That is about what it does.

Mr. BLAINE. "About;" but is that all it does?

Mr. WALLACE. I do not think it does any more.

Mr. BLAINE. You do not? Then of course you will agree to strike out the second section?

Mr. WALLACE. The second section enforces upon the marshals a provision touching the appointment of special deputies. That is what that section is intended to effect.

Mr. BLAINE. I will read the second section. The Senator says the bill does nothing more than merely not appropriate. Of course the little pages that carry our letters know that merely not appropriating a sum of money is not cause for rejecting a bill by the President of the United States by vetoing it, if it appropriates on other points; but when I ask the Senator whether it contains anything more, he rather dodges. He says that is about what it is, and edges around; he does not come square up and face it.

Mr. WALLACE. Oh, the Senator cannot misrepresent me. I certainly did state it emphatically.

Mr. BLAINE. I want the Senator to represent himself.

Mr. WALLACE. I proposed to do it, and thought I did as emphatically as any man could. I said this bill appropriated no moneys for special deputy marshals emphatically, and I said it did endeavor to fasten upon the marshals of the United States a prohibition against appointing any special deputy marshals by the second section. That is the purpose of this section of the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. The second section of the bill provides—

That the sums appropriated in this act for the persons and public service embraced in its provisions are in full for such persons and public service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880; and no Department or officer of the Government—

That includes the President—

no Department or officer of the Government shall, during said fiscal year, make any contract or incur any liability for the future payment of money until an appropriation sufficient to meet such contract or pay such liability shall have first been made by law.

Since the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania seems willing to answer, I should like to ask him another question. Does the Senator understand that section to prohibit marshals using deputies even if they agree to serve without pay? Is it the fact that that "incurs a liability?"

Mr. WALLACE. There is no liability incurred then by the General Government, by the very terms of the section itself.

Mr. BLAINE. Would the Senator from Pennsylvania as a lawyer say that the marshal accepting the services of a hundred deputies in his city of Philadelphia upon their personal assurance that they would not charge anything for it—has the marshal the dispensing power to say that that would not incur a liability and that they might not in justice come in for their pay afterward? Does he state that as a lawyer?

Mr. WALLACE. I do not think the Government with a law upon the statute-book like this could be called on for the payment of a dollar.

Mr. BLAINE. You do not think so?

Mr. WALLACE. I do not.

Mr. BLAINE. The Government would not incur any liability?

Mr. WALLACE. I think not.

Mr. BLAINE. Do I understand the honorable Senator, then, to give it forth as his opinion to the country that marshals who will serve without pay, or marshals who will serve with pay provided from other sources, are to be clothed with full entire authority under this bill just as much as if they were appropriated for by Congress?

Mr. WALLACE. By no means, for the section expressly says that no officer shall "make any contract or incur any liability."

Mr. BLAINE. No, no, the officer makes no contract; suppose other persons come up and offer him a hundred deputy marshals, and they are paid for?

Mr. WALLACE. I think they would have to get their pay the best way they could.

Mr. BLAINE. Then we gradually get out the fact, palpably made where no man can deny it, that this was intended to be a positive inhibition upon every officer of the Government, from the President down, not to do anything whatever during the fiscal year of 1879–'80 for the appointment of deputy marshals at elections. I have met a good many bills and I have seen a good deal of brass attempted in legislation, but I never saw anything yet equal to this, where a President of the United States had himself given conclusive reasons, reasons conclusive to the country why the law in regard to deputy marshals should not be repealed, and you ask him to sign a bill that for the year 1879–'80 does repeal it and render it as nugatory and as void as though it had never been enacted. I have heard down in my State of Ensign Stebbins, who was in favor of the Maine law but opposed to its enforcement. The President of the United States who would sign such a bill as that after having declared in a public veto message that he was in favor of maintaining the law on the statute-book would go far beyond the folly of Ensign Stebbins.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not know what the President of the United States has to do with this bill now. I do not know why his name is lugged in here unnecessarily, and he threatened by the Senator.

Mr. BLAINE. He will have a good deal to do with it before it gets through, as you will probably find out.

Mr. WALLACE. The Senator, I presume, is endeavoring to have him have something to do with it. I imagine that is the purpose of his "stalwart" declarations on this occasion.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the Senator expect to get along with this bill without the aid of the President?

Mr. WALLACE. We expect him to obey the law which is on the statute-book in these words:

No department of the Government—

I suppose that includes the President—shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess "of such appropriations."

And we expect him to obey the Constitution, which says:

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

That he is sworn to support and we expect him to obey it.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator finds enough in the statutes as they now exist, why does he want to enact more as in this bill? The Senator reads from the statute those things which he thinks justify his position, and why then is there need of this additional legislation?

Mr. WALLACE. The words "officer" and "liability" are added.

Mr. BLAINE. Ah, there is something added. Then the Senator does not find that the statutes as they exist cover the point?

Mr. WALLACE. A marshal of the United States is not a "department of the Government," and this money is to be paid to him.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator comes to an admission. He reads the statute in a way that sounds to me as somewhat vain glorious as covering a point that was not covered without additional legislation, to which the President is expected to assent.

Mr. WALLACE. We want to cover the duty of the marshals who are officers of the Government.

Mr. BLAINE. You want to cover this particular case?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAINE. In other words, the Senator from Pennsylvania finds the statute good for a great many other things, but not good for what he is trying to achieve, and therefore he asks us to help him out by making a new one.

Mr. WALLACE. There is also on the statute-book this law:

All sums appropriated for the various branches of expenditure in the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively made, and for no others.

Mr. BLAINE. What I ask the Senator is, if he finds the statutes sufficient, why add to them? I keep repeating the question.

Mr. WALLACE. I have said repeatedly on this subject since I have been on the floor that the purpose was to decline to appropriate money to the payment of special deputy marshals at elections.

Mr. BLAINE. But you do not stop there?

Mr. WALLACE. And the further purpose is to control the marshals themselves in the appointment of special deputies, and to prevent them from incurring any liability on the part of the Government for the special deputy marshals at elections, and to that end we have re-enacted the statute in section 2, which is found in the Revised Statutes as sections 3678 and 3679. We have by this language covered the point we sought to cover, and it is simply a repetition to all the officers of the Federal Government of the duty enjoined by those two sections upon the Departments.

Mr. BLAINE. I will leave that point now. I have got as much enlightenment on it as the Senator from Pennsylvania seems disposed to give me.

Mr. WALLACE. I want to make the distinction, though, before I leave the floor as to the purposes for which these $600,000 are appropriated.

For fees of United States marshals and their deputies, $600,000.

Those $600,000 are appropriated for the legitimate purposes and expenses of the courts and the cost of the process of the courts in the hands of the marshals and their general deputies. It is intended to cover all of the expenses of the marshals and their pay, exclusive of election expenses and special deputies at elections.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask the honorable Senator to enlighten me now on another point. I did not hear all that was said about the juries, and I am seeking information. It is now arranged, I believe, in section 3 of the bill. I was glad, as the honorable Senator went along, to see that with a good Pennsylvania education he spoke of the sums that are appropriated. The bill we passed yesterday spoke of the sums that is appropriated, and it has gone into the law in that correct and elegant form. The bill in the third section provides that the jurors—

Shall be publicly drawn from a box containing, at the time of each drawing, the names of not less than three hundred persons, possessing the qualifications prescribed in section 800 of the Revised Statutes, which names shall have been placed therein by the clerk of such court and a commissioner, to be appointed by the judge thereof, which commissioner shall be a citizen of good standing residing in the district in which such court is held, of good standing—

I do not know whether that means the court or the citizen—and a well-known member of the principal political party opposing that to which the clerk may belong, the clerk and said commissioner each to place one name in said box alternately, without reference to party affiliations.

Will the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania be good enough to tell me just the full extent and meaning of the phrase "without refernce to party affiliations?"

Mr. WALLACE. I presume the Senator from Maine understands what "party affiliation" is. He is a party man.

Mr. BLAINE. I do, perfectly.

Mr. WALLACE. He knows what "party affiliations" are.

Mr. BLAINE. But the former bill that passed the Senate provided that the clerk of the court should stand on one side of the box and the commissioner of good standing of the opposite political party should stand on the other side of the box, and then they should begin a game of odd and even, one to put in one of his side and the other to put in one of his side till the three hundred names were all in. We all agree that that would result in getting one hundred and fifty partisan republicans and one hundred and fifty partisan democrats. Now you have changed it. When you get down to these men, the one a republican and the other a democrat, each of these men is now commanded to draw without regard to party affiliations. What does the Senator understand that restriction to mean? If it has any significance, and I will leave it to the honorable Senator to tell me whether I am right or wrong, I understand that to mean, if it has any meaning, that each officer shall draw first a man opposed to him and then one in favor of him, and that instead of three hundred divided into two lots of one hundred and fifty each there shall be four lots of seventy-five, that is, the clerk shall draw seventy-five republicans and seventy-five democrats, and the commissioner shall draw seventy-five democrats and seventy-five republicans, and then this avoiding party affiliation ends exactly where the other did, by having the names of one hundred and fifty partisans from each side in the box. Is that the true construction?

Mr. WALLACE. It is an endeavor to procure from the clerk and commissioner, in filling the box, the names of men who are fittest for jurymen in that locality, whether they are democrats or republicans. They are to be placed there without reference to party affiliation.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes, but you require the two men who draw the jury to be party men. You require them to be party men standing opposite to each other, and presiding over the jury-box.

Mr. WALLACE. The Senator from Maine has admitted that he is a party man. Is it possible if acting under oath that he would not take a man as a juror who voted occasionally for a republican and occasionally for a democrat if he knew he was otherwise fit?

Mr. BLAINE. And that is all that has been done? That would have been done by an honest man without this law.

Mr. WALLACE. Very well.

Mr. BLAINE. Why do you want to inject into the laws of the United States for the first time in our judiciary department the idea of partisan politics, to land exactly where the honorable Senator admits we have all the time stood? We have got what the Senator claims this measure will give us. We have always enjoyed that. Now you say that we must have two partisans of each side, and that then they must get up and try like good little boys to shake the partisanship out of them and to draw without party affiliation.

Mr. KERNAN. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Does he not think that even such a law would be better than to have, as we have learned we have in certain States, a partisan jury on one side to fill the ballot-box?

Mr. BLAINE. Is that the case in the Senator's own State?

Mr. KERNAN. No, sir.

Mr. BLAINE. Then the Senator speaks about some other State; that is, outside of his.

Mr. KERNAN. I say in certain States, having learned on authority that is good, that they have packed a jury that would convict the angel Gabriel, and that the jury is packed by the public prosecutor.

Mr. BLAINE. I have heard a good deal about the conviction of men as pure as the angel Gabriel, if you can find any of those in the South or in the North either, but I have never heard of the particular men thus convicted. I should like any Senator from any Southern State to give the name of any man who has ever been unjustly and unduly convicted of a crime by any of these juries that are asserted to be drawn in a reckless and partisan manner. The Senator from New York bears of some other State, just like the statements in the early times in the West when the "ague" was always in some other county; it was not in the county where the man himself was stopping. The Senator from New York would do well to speak for his own State of five million people. That is enough for one man to speak for.

Mr. KERNAN. I will speak for my State. The supervisor of each town in my State, and he always belongs to one side or the other, returns the jurors to the county clerk, and we never fail to have fair juries.

Mr. BLAINE. Very well. Then the Senator gives a very good account of his own State, as I expected to find it, without regard to party.

Mr. KERNAN. That is done under the State law.

Mr. BLAINE. Now we understand that somewhere else there have been very corrupt juries drawn, and men have been tried before them and convicted unjustly. I should like to hear the names of the men. I should like to hear any Southern Senator give me the name of a man who was unjustly convicted before one of these partisan juries. I do not profess to be able to answer at the moment, but I will engage at hazard within forty-eight hours, from the records in the Attorney-General's Office, to confute and refute the assertion.

Mr. SAULSBURY. There have been a great many convictions of men who do not belong to the gentleman's party, who have been pardoned out by the President.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Delaware thinks because in a gracious moment of clemency, after sufficient punishment had been inflicted, and the President had exercised the pardoning power, that that must be taken as proof of innocence. By no means. There are often a great many reasons, personal and political, for granting a pardon. There were a great many ku-klux prisoners taken out of the Albany penitentiary upon special representations to the late President of the United States, General Grant, that great good would result in the South, that a good condition of affairs would be brought about by such a display of executive clemency. Does the honorable Senator understand that in the opinion of General Grant he had any doubt whatever of the guilt of those men? Not at all.

Mr. CONKLING. Many of them pleaded guilty.

Mr. BLAINE. Many of them, the Senator from New York says, pleaded guilty. They were sent to the penitentiary by scores and shoals. Many besides those sent had nol pros. entered who would have been convicted had not official instruction gone from this city to show clemency. I have heard what the Senator from New York [Mr. KERNAN] says, bandied about on this floor and everywhere as a piece of political claptrap, that juries were corruptly drawn and convictions corruptly obtained in the South. I want the names—I want the names of twenty or ten or five or one such man, and if Senators cannot give it I hope it will be the end of all this talk about the necessity for the first time of inserting into the laws of the United States a provision that you shall have a man of well-known political character of the opposite political party to be stationed on the opposite side of a jury-box to the clerk of the United States court, and that they there shall agree to settle on political grounds what shall be the jury in the courts of the United States. It is the first time such a thing was ever attempted, and it is an absolute and deep disgrace to the statutes of the United States to put it there.

Mr. WALLACE. The Senator from Maine——

Mr. BLAINE. I am not through yet.

Mr. WALLACE. I thought the Senator had finished and sat down.

Mr. BLAINE. Now, Mr. President, from the beginning to the end of this bill it is a sham. The Senator from Kentucky paraded with a good deal of confidence how they had now brought about a reform, and that instead of giving $2,700,000 or $2,800,000 in a lump to the Attorney-General of the United States they had divided it under general heads. I asked them on what principle they had divided it?

Why they had gone up to Mr. Devens's office and found out how he expended it, and then they put it under the heads as he had furnished them; and then they came back and said, "See how we are putting the bit in the mouth of the Attorney-General; we are not going to let him run loose with $2,700,000 or $2,800,000. We are going to force him by law to expend that money in exactly the way he would have expended it anyhow."

Mr. DAWES. Just as he had expended.

Mr. BLAINE. Just as he had expended it, the Senator from Massachusetts well says. That is a magnificent reform! The Senator from Kentucky made that display and I believe retired. Then the Senator from Pennsylvania takes up the jury clause.

Mr. WALLACE. In answer to the invitation of the Senator from Maine——

Mr. BLAINE. Of course I mean that, with all due courtesy to the Senator. First on the marshals' clause, I want to sum up a little, he admits to us openly before the country that this bill was intended to do and in his judgment does do for the ensuing fiscal year all that the repeal of the law by the bill which the President vetoed would have effected for this year, and that thus, year by year, the same insertion in the appropriation bill by a democratic Congress can effect exactly that which a repeal of the law would have effected. I am correct, I believe, in stating the Senator that way. He nods assent. Then, a word as to the jury law, this new experiment, this blot upon the pages of the statutes which the Senator from New York [Mr. KERNAN] says was put there in order to insure good juries elsewhere. He admits they are as good as they could be in New York, considering that they have to be made of men; but then in order to arrest some great corruption in the jury-box elsewhere by which innocent men are dragged to unjust punishment this provision should be made. I have asked every Senator, and have received no response from any one on that side of the Chamber, to give me the name of one man that was ever convicted by a jury that was alleged to have been improperly impaneled. I will be glad now to hear the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALLACE. I have very little to say in reply to the Senator from Maine. In his peculiar manner he sets a great big chip on his shoulder and he invites some Southern Senator to knock it off. There has not been any response; I have not heard any response to that invitation. The fact is the question he has been discussing has nothing whatever to do with this bill. Suppose there does not exist such a case; here is a bill which on its face provides for two parties being represented in the filling of the jury-box with three hundred names, and then it provides that the men selected shall be chosen without reference to party affiliations. Is there anything unwise, unjust, improper in this provision? The Senator says that this is a disgrace to the statutes of the United States. The Senator from New York [Mr. KERNAN] has told us that this system is practically in operation there; that is, that the supervisors in each county fill the wheel.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I did not understand the Senator from New York to say that there is any provision in the laws of New York which recognizes any political division of parties.

Mr. WALLACE. But the supervisors are of different political parties, chosen I suppose as the jury commissioners in our State are chosen, each party voting for one. They select the jurors and of course their party affiliations are regarded in filling the wheel; but at the same time as men who have taken an oath they put in men of integrity, men who have the qualifications that the States of New York and Pennsylvania provide, and we get a jury-box that is filled with men of both parties.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask a question?

Mr. WALLACE. When I conclude the present sentence. We thus get a jury-box filled by men of integrity, and there is not the opportunity, there is not the effort that would come from an attempt by a single political party to make the courts the vehicle of party passion and party prejudice and of convictions in the courts because of political offenses.

Mr. ALLISON. Pardon me; I want to ask the Senator what the object is in appointing men of two political parties and then providing that they shall select the jury without reference to party affiliation? If it is necessary to have two parties represented, why is the bill that we passed a few days ago reversed so as to require these commissioners to select jurors without reference to party?

Mr. WALLACE. It is the plainest proposition in the world. There are two views that might be taken of it. One is that it is to prevent them from making the jurors all of one political party.

Mr. ALLISON. But before, the object of the jury bill which we passed a few days ago was to get men in of different political parties, and now we say that they shall be selected without reference to party.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. WALLACE. One at a time.

Mr. BLAINE. An idea this moment occurs to me as to the interpretation of this measure, and I will offer it for the benefit of the Senate. In the Senate it was openly avowed that the republican was expected to choose republicans and the democrat was expected to choose democrats, and that would get rank partisans of both sides. The only construction I can give to this new provision, upon full deliberation, is that the republican is expected to select the democrats and the democrat is expected to select the republicans. I have always found that that class of democrats who were especially popular with the republicans and that class of republicans who would be chosen by the democrats make up at large and collectively about the meanest assortment that can be found in any peaceful community, and I think that the jury as provided for in that section would be of that stamp.

Mr. WALLACE. I am glad the Senator from Maine has demonstrated to the Senate and to the country how much of a partisan he is. He is clearly a party man. He has plainly demonstrated that now.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not deny that at all.

Mr. WALLACE. He is for the republican party pure, simple, and stalwart. He does not want any of these fellows who are between the parties.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not. They are the cow-boys of modern days, as they were in the Revolution.

Mr. WALLACE. I understand the Senator, then, to avow himself a partisan, a decided partisan, and he has demonstrated to the Senate and the country that partisans ought to be in the jury-box.

The other interpretation that might be placed upon this bill would be that these men were honorable and just men and would obey their oath, and when they had filled the box with three hundred names, without political affiliation, filled it with good people, people who were honest, people who were not known partisans—and I differ with the Senator from Maine there—not known as strong politicians, either democrats or republicans, they would have performed their duty and the court would get an intelligent and honest jury to decide between the litigants, whether they were the government or individuals.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator think that is best attained by getting two men prominent in different political parties to accomplish that end; in order to get men into the jury-box who are not prominent politicians, to get the men to select them the most prominent and decided party politicians possible, and that thereby they would more likely select men to put into the boxes that are not so? Is that the object?

Mr. WALLACE. For the purpose of preventing that very thing, the words "without reference to party affiliations" are here inserted.

Mr. DAWES. Why provide by law that two men shall be appointed of the most positive party affiliations for the purpose of selecting men who are not so? Why do that?

Mr. WALLACE. Just because we want fair play on both sides.

Mr. DAWES. If you want in the box the names of men who are not prominent politicians, why not select men to put the names in the box who are not prominent politicians themselves? Are prominent politicians more likely to put in the box the names of men who are not prominent politicians than men are who are themselves not prominent politicians?

Mr. WALLACE. I do not know how the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Maine are going to reconcile their views on this subject.

Mr. BLAINE. It is not for us to do it. We are trying to ask you to do it.

Mr. WALLACE. The one fears that cow-boys, as he terms them, and the other fears that politicians will get into the box.

Mr. DAWES. I did not understand the Senator from Maine to say that cow-boys will get into the box, being put in there by men who are the most prominent in the political party to which they belong.

Mr. WALLACE. No, the Senator does not say that, but he says the fellows who are not put in are the cow-boys.

Mr. DAWES. No, the fellows who put them in are to be the most intense politicians; active partisans are eligible and no others are eligible. If a man can be found more prominent than anybody else he is the only man eligible to appointment under this proposed statute, and he is the man selected in the eye of the Senator from Pennsylvania to get non-partisans into the jury-box. That is a non sequitur that I have not seen equaled.

Mr. WALLACE. When the Senator rose I was about to say that the statutes of Pennsylvania since 1867 have authorized the selection of jury commissioners. They are always selected of different political parties, and they fill the jury-box with men of character, of reputation, and of standing, not always ardent republicans or ardent democrats, but they are placed in the box because of their integrity and their qualifications.

Mr. BLAINE. Are those especially to be found outside of the line of ardent democrats? Do qualities of integrity lie outside?

Mr. WALLACE. They are mainly found within it.

Mr. BLAINE. I should think so. I would trust ardent democrats a great deal more than the class to which I referred.

Mr. WALLACE. They are sometimes found within it in the judgment of democratic jury commissioners; and so these qualities are generally found within the pale of the republican party, according to the judgment of the republican jury commissioners.

This law operates well in our State. There are no complaints in regard to it. It was passed by a republican Legislature—republicans joining with democrats in passing the statute. It was originated by a Senator from one of the democratic counties in the Commonwealth, and six or eight republican senators joined with the democrats in passing it. There has been no complaint of it. There are few political prosecutions, and it works well. I think this bill will be found to work equally well.

I have here a statement in reply to the figures that have been quoted as to the amount of expenditures by the Department of Justice from the judiciary fund.

Mr. CONKLING. Before the Senator comes to that would he allow me to ask him a question upon the topic which he is about to leave?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. The difficulty I have in understanding the use of this change begins a step behind that to which other Senators have called attention; and as the Senator from Pennsylvania seems to be very obliging in his willingness to afford information this morning I venture to bring it to his notice. As the statutes stand now, as they have stood for a long time, not only in the State of New York, not only in the State of Pennsylvania, but in every one of all the States, juries for the national courts are drawn under the laws, usages, and regulations of the respective States, and the jurors have the qualifications of jurors in the States. My question to the Senator is this: How does it happen, indeed how can it happen, that juries in the national courts in any State are mis-selected or packed, unless that occurs either by a violation of existing law or by reason of defects in the laws of the States themselves?

Let me now, if the Senator will allow me, restate this, because I have several times sought information on this point, and I find myself as ignorant as I was when the session began. Ever since 1802, indeed since a statute prior to that, preserved in all the statutes, in the statute of 1842 among others, is the provision that jurors to sit in a national or Federal court shall in every State be drawn, as far as practicable, according to the laws, usages, and practice of that State.

Now I inquire how it can be in any State, unless the laws of that State are viciously defective, or unless the marshal, the judge, or the clerk of the court, (all of whom are triable and impeachable,) violate the law—how can it happen that juries are packed, that men of irresponsible or dissolute character are drawn upon juries? So far as I am informed of the laws of the States, no man's option selects the whole panel of jurors. They select themselves. How? Because they do or do not possess the qualifications required. In the State of New York a man must be a citizen between the age of twenty-one and the age of sixty. Then follows a long list of exemptions. If he be the superintendent of a mill he is exempt; if he serves in a fire company he is exempt; and so on. He must also be a freeholder or a tax-payer. No supervisor, the officer referred to by my colleague, determines who shall or who shall not go into the jury-box. The men who compete in the struggle of life determine that. A man who is a vagabond, a drunkard, an idler, a spendthrift, who is not a freeholder or tax-payer, never can get into the jury-box. Why? Because by law he does not possess the qualifications that entitle any man, no matter what may be his politics or his political creed, like every other man, to go into the body of men from which the jury is drawn. Therefore the Senator will see that this does not rest upon anybody's option.

Now I beg him to tell me how it can happen in a national court, the jury being drawn in accordance with the laws which prevail in the State courts and the usage in every instance, that a jury can be packed, unless the State has failed to pass laws in that regard, or unless the marshal or other officer defies and violates the law, for which he may be not only impeached and removed from office but for which he can be indicted under the Statutes of the United States.

Mr. WALLACE. I imagine that the Senator from New York argues of course from the practice in his own State, and from that standpoint he is perhaps correct.

Mr. CONKLING. No, if my friend will pardon me, I do not, and I beg him not to misunderstand my question, if he will indulge me. I ask it in the best of faith. I have asked it once or twice before and I want to know what the answer to it is.

Mr. WALLACE. The reason——

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will pardon me, it is not the laws of the State of New York, but the statutes of the United States which provide that in every individual State the jurors who sit in the national box shall be drawn according to the laws and usages of that State.

Mr. WALLACE. In substance.

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAILEY. In the State of Tennessee, in our system, which was derived from North Carolina, each county is divided into what we call civil districts, and two justices of the peace, who have criminal as well as civil jurisdiction, and when called together have police jurisdiction in the county, select jurors and appoint them, when they are thus called together monthly or quarterly, under the law. How is it possible to apply our system to the drawing of jurors in the courts of the United States?

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator pardon me? Do they have fair juries in the State of Tennessee in the State courts?

Mr. BAILEY. We have fair juries in the State courts.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the jury system there work well?

Mr. BAILEY. It works very well with us, and for this reason, permit me to say: there are democrats and there are republicans in the State; there are democratic justices of the peace and republican justices of the peace; and every jury that is selected by these justices of the peace, when they are assembled quarterly or monthly as the case may be, is composed of republicans and of democrats. Their names are put into a box and are drawn just as it is proposed to draw them here; but the courts of the United States cannot apply our system in the selection of their juries.

Mr. CONKLING. Why not?

Mr. BAILEY. Because the appointing power is different.

Mr. CONKLING. What appointing power?

Mr. BAILEY. Those who appoint the jurors for the United States courts.

Mr. CONKLING. Let me understand the Senator. Are not the national courts held at the county seat or at the court-house where also a State court is held?

Mr. BAILEY. Exactly.

Mr. CONKLING. When a State court is held in any one place, say at Memphis,—I believe there is a Federal court there, and I will take that for illustration——

Mr. BAILEY. There is one in Memphis, one in Nashville, and one in Knoxville.

Mr. CONKLING. I will take Nashville; either will illustrate. A State court is held periodically at Nashville. In that State court a State jury sits, and that jury is composed in the manner denoted by the Senator. Will the honorable Senator tell me why it is, when the statute of the United States commands that the jury to sit at Nashville in the national court shall be composed of men having the qualifications of jurors in the States, and that they shall be selected as near as may be in the same mode, under the laws, under the usages, under the practice of the State of Tennessee, that they cannot be so selected?

Mr. BAILEY. Simply for the reason that they are not, nor in my opinion can they be, so selected. By whom would they be selected? By the State officers? Certainly not.

Mr. CONKLING. I want, if I may, to continue one moment this instructive dialogue,—instructive to me, I mean,—with the Senator from Tennessee. Is there a jury-box in Tennessee, a box from which names are drawn, I mean?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. CONKLING. Who draws them for the State court? I refer now to that court which sits at Nashville, the circuit court, I suppose.

Mr. BAILEY. As I said before, the jurors who are placed on the list from which the juries shall be selected are appointed by the justices of the county court in each county or district. When the court assembles these names are placed in a box and are drawn under the direction and order of the court; a sufficient number being drawn for the grand juries and a sufficient number for the petit juries.

Mr. CONKLING. That is thirty-six for each, is it not?

Mr. BAILEY. The number is forty-eight.

Mr. CONKLING. Forty-eight for each?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. CONKLING. Who draws them?

Mr. BAILEY. They are drawn either by the officers of the court or under the orders of the court.

Mr. CONKLING. But who does it, in point of fact?

Mr. BAILEY. In point of fact it is usually done by the clerk.

Mr. CONKLING. By the clerk of the court?

Mr. BAILEY. By the clerk of the court. The names are put in the box and thus drawn out.

Mr. CONKLING. When a national court comes to sit there, here is a jury-box containing the names of all the men from whom the panel for the State court is to be drawn. Will the Senator tell me why the clerk of the national court cannot shake this box up and draw out one name at a time and have it written down as the clerk of the State court does?

Mr. BAILEY. The clerk certainly might do that thing, but the clerk does not select the jurors.

Mr. CONKLING. I am not speaking of the selection.

Mr. BAILEY. Nor does the judge of the court select the jurors.

Mr. CONKLING. I understand it.

Mr. BAILEY. These names are selected by the justices of the county court.

Mr. CONKLING. I understand it.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not mean to say that the names are not in the Federal courts; that the names chosen by the marshals are not drawn from the box; but I do say it is impossible to apply the Federal system to our system in Tennessee for the reason that you have not the same appointing power.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the Senator cannot understand me, and that is, no doubt, my fault. Let me state the case as it is in New York, in a word, which is the identical case for all practical purposes in Tennessee, as disclosed by the Senator. The county clerk, and I may say for brevity the county court, although the phrase is not accurate in New York, which it seems it is there, draws from the general body of jurors the names of those to constitute a grand and petit panel at every term of the court. That is so in Tennessee. When a national court is held in New York, the same thing is done. What is it? The clerk of the court and the marshal who assists for aught I know, see to the drawing of the names; it makes no difference who does it; whether it be a man or a child, whether he be blindfolded or with his eyes open, because the box is thrown about and a hand is put into it and a name drawn out and opened and written down, and another name is drawn out and written down until the thirty-six names have been written down. So it is in Tennessee in substance, in the State courts.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me interrupt the Senator. So far they have not been selected in Tennessee by the clerk of the court. I mean the names that are put in the box.

Mr. CONKLING. I am talking about the State courts in Tennessee.

Mr. BAILEY. I am talking about the State courts.

Mr. CONKLING. Very well. Who select?

Mr. BAILEY. The names put into the box are selected by the justices of the county court, meeting quarterly or monthly as the case may be, quarterly usually. Each justice of the peace selects from his own civil district the names of the persons who are to appear at the next term of the court and whose names are to be placed in the box.

Mr. CONKLING. Forty-eight in number?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes. I will state also that in all criminal cases the jury is drawn from the box. When they have been summoned their names are drawn from the box by a little boy—some one under twelve years of age—unless the parties waive that right.

Mr. CONKLING. I know that is done in some of the States. Now I come back, and I want an answer, if the Senator will indulge me, to this question: what is the reason why from that same box, from that same body of jurors, the clerk of the court, or the blindfolded boy, or the marshal, or whoever is there to do it, may not draw exactly as the drawing takes place for the purpose of a State jury?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly he may draw from the names that are selected, but suppose all the names selected belong to one political party, as is the case in many instances?

Mr. CONKLING. I am talking about Tennessee. Let us deal with one State at a time. Do they belong to any one political party in Tennessee?

Mr. BAILEY. They do not, because they are selected as I have stated.

Mr. CONKLING. Precisely so.

Mr. BAILEY. They are selected some by democratic and others by republican justices of the peace. They are selected generally, I will say also, without regard particularly to their political affiliations, but looking to the character and integrity of the parties whose names are presented. Still there are men of all parties whose names are thus put in the jury-box.

Mr. CONKLING. The honorable Senator from Tennessee rose in form to answer what I was saying. I welcome his aid, because he comes to my side and makes my argument so far as the State of Tennessee is concerned. What is that argument? That the laws of the United States command that in Tennessee juries shall be selected as the laws of that State say they shall be, as near as practicable. He tells us that the State laws provide the mode; that the mode works well; and that there is, as we all would know without his saying it, no difficulty in a Federal officer or a national officer putting his hand into the box and drawing out, as the State officer does, from this fairly selected body of jurors the particular panel to try a particular cause.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me? He says that from this body of fairly selected jurors shall be drawn the names of those who shall serve upon the jury. Under the Federal system it is impossible that this practice of drawing jurors, fairly selected as the Senator says, can be adopted as it is now followed in Tennessee in referenee to the State courts.

Mr. CONKLING. Why not? I am trying to find out.

Mr. BAILEY. Because in one case they are selected by the body of the justices of the county; in the other case they are selected by the officer of the Federal court, and by him alone. At most, the number of those who are said to be fairly selected, the names of the jurors, are selected by whom? By either the court or an officer of that court.

Mr. CONKLING. Not unless the statute of the United States is violated—never.

Mr. BAILEY. How can they be selected? Who can select them?

Mr. CONKLING. I will tell the Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. May I ask a question?

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAILEY. Can the justices of the county court of Davidson County, in which stands the capital of our State, and where is the Federal court, nominate the men whose names are to be put into the box?

Mr. CONKLING. Is that the Senator's question?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly it is.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg to answer it. The statute declares that when the national court meets at Nashville, the jury to sit in that court shall be drawn according to the laws, the usages, and the practice of the State of Tennessee. If the practice and the law of the State of Tennessee is not that the supervisor of the county shall bring forward the qualified jurors, but that the officer of the county court shall bring them forward and shall put into the jury box that whole number, which the Senator says is forty-eight, from which particular juries are to be drawn, then the statute of the United States, as I understand it, requires that the same thing shall be done in the Federal courts.

Mr. BAILEY. And appointed by the justices of the county court of that county, do I understand?

Mr. CONKLING. Why, Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly that is a new construction of the law that was never before made by any court.

Mr. CONKLING. I have not given any such construction as that.

Mr. BAILEY. Then what?

Mr. CONKLING. I will tell the Senator if he will hear me. He is talking about one thing and I am talking about another. Let me go to my own State for illustration to answer his remark. Does the statute of the United States require that the supervisors in all the towns of the sixty counties of the State of New York shall bring forward the lists of qualified jurors? No, the statute of the State of New York requires that and requires other things under which there comes up to the shire-town, the county seat, where the county clerk's office is situated, a body of qualified jurors larger than that which the Senator has indicated in Tennessee. Then the statute requires that from that body, in a way prescribed, the drawing shall take place. The national statute declares that in the case of the national courts the drawing, the selection of the jurors to sit, shall be in the same mode, but it does not therefore provide that supervisors in the way indicated shall bring forward these original names. That is left to the laws of the State of New York. It does, however, after this body has been brought forward, act upon them by declaring in effect that from those names—because it says from the men qualified by the laws of the State—the drawing shall be made, and in the mode, as near as may be, declared by the laws of the State. Is that a new construction? If it is a new construction, then for, lo, eighty-one years in the State of New York the statutes of the United States have been misunderstood and violated.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him who selects the jurors?

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAILEY. I mean the list of fair names from which the jury is selected in the Federal courts.

Mr. CONKLING. In the organism of the State of New York every county has what I may call a local legislature; we call it a board of supervisors. It is composed of one man from every rural town, and in counties where there are cities divided into wards, of one man chosen in each ward. When the board of supervisors meet, each one of these constituents of that board brings forward the qualified jurors of his town or his ward. That is not everybody, but the citizens of the requisite intelligence and property qualifications, freeholders they must be, among others, of suitable age, and not falling within any of the numerous exemptions tolerated by the laws of the State. When each supervisor has brought forward the names, they are all there and they all constitute the body of men from which in that vicinage every panel of jurors must be drawn. They go up to the office of the county clerk, as we call him, whose office is at the shire-town, or if there be counties, as there are, my own is one, where there are two shire-towns, the law fixes that one at which the county clerk's office shall be located. On a day fixed by law, preceding by a convenient time the day on which a term is to be holden, the officers indicated by the law, the county clerk and the others—I shall stop to enumerate them if the Senator cares to hear it—take this body of names and from it proceed to draw a panel, thirty-six in number, for a petit jury; and a panel of twenty-four in number for the grand jury. The drawing is done by shaking up the box as I have said, putting in a hand and bringing out a name, and that name is written down; the next name is drawn out and that is written down; and thus the whole panel is made up; and then the sheriff under his venire summons all the men whose names are thus drawn. They come to court and their names go into the box used in court. When the first cause on the docket is reached, if the parties are ready, the judge says, "Impanel a jury." Thereupon the clerk of the court who has this box, with a convenient hole in it, or a sliding or rotating cover, opens the box, puts in a hand, and draws out a name, and reads it.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him? I understand it thoroughly, but how are the jurors for the United States courts selected? The Senator is describing how the jurors in the State courts are selected.

Mr. CONKLING. I will tell the honorable Senator. I could tell him truthfully and briefly in words, in the same way.

Mr. BAILEY. Who places them in the box?

Mr. CONKLING. The clerk of the court places them in the box.

Mr. BAILEY. That is never done, permit me to say, in Tennessee. It is never done as the Senator from West Virginia informs me in his State, as the Senator from Oregon informs me in his State, as the Senator from Maryland informs me in his State. We have no box. As I said a little while ago, in my State the number summoned is selected by the justices of the county court, and from that number thus selected the jury is drawn under the orders and supervision of the particular court, whether it be a court of common law or of criminal jurisdiction. It is impossible to apply our system to the selection of jurors in the United States courts, for who will summon? Where are the persons whose names are to be placed in the box? They are summoned in fact by the marshal and the clerk.

Mr. CONKLING. Again I thank the honorable Senator for the great weight of authority which he brings to the proposition that I advance. Let me go back to that proposition. I said there could be no failure save only from one of two causes; either because of defect in the laws of the State, or because of a violation of the national laws by the national officer. I repeat that proposition, and I summon the honorable Senator from Tennessee to testify as he has already done that that proposition is correct.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from New York inform me whether our system is defective, or whether the courts of the United States can possibly apply our system? Is it to be required that the States shall change a system that has continued for seventy-five years in order that the courts of the United States may be able to apply the same system?

Mr. CONKLING. There is an old story about a collision over the question whether the mountain should go to Mohammed or whether Mohammed should go to the mountain. Here is a national system which has stood unchanged much longer than any man who hears me has lived. It has stood during all this century, and during several years of the century which is gone. It is a system inaugurated in the presence of and by the very men who framed the Constitution. It is a system adopted by the men who voted for that perhaps best piece of legislative literature to be found in our statutes, drawn by Oliver Ellsworth and known as the judiciary act. It is a system which has worked unexceptionably in every State which has a suitable jury system.

The honorable Senator asks, is the State of Tennessee, which for seventy-five years has had a system of its own, to change that system? With the greatest respect for that historic Commonwealth, I say yes. Yes, if the State of Tennessee is suffering by reason of defects in its own jury system, in the name of common sense and common honesty, knowing as the State of Tennessee does better than this National Legislature can, the convenient and better mode of drawing jurors in that State, let the Legislature of Tennessee enact the proper statutes, statutes which will not be hide-bound, which will not be those that might do if a Chinese wall environed Tennessee, but statutes applicable as well as State statutes readily can be, as all experience shows, for use in the national as well as in the State jurisdiction. I say yes without hesitation, and I say nothing that I would not say of the State of New York. If the State of New York had some jury system which involved a particular inconvenience and incompatibility, something which would require Federal officers to journey, if you please, long distances far in advance in order to take the preliminary steps for selecting jurors—if it were only that, had I the honor to be a member of her Legislature I should say as one of her citizens, I say now as one of her Senators, it would be not only advisable, not only convenient, but in my opinion the duty, the manifest duty, of the State of New York to so modify her machinery for selecting juries as to adapt it to that use which our fathers designed should be made of it, and which for four generations the country has proceeded in believing was the wise and wholesome way of assembling juries in the national courts.

Why not? And yet I think the honorable Senator from Tennessee, if he will pardon me, involves himself in a paradox because he has told us that they have good juries there; that their jury system works well. He has told us that under that jury system a jury is drawn periodically in every vicinage in which a national court is held. Yet curiously enough, he tells me, in effect, that the marshal goes out without limit upon arbitrary discretion, and one is left and another is chosen. Therefore he says (and there I think is the non sequitur) that the statutes of the United States should be changed, when those statutes as they stand now say that the marshals and the court and everybody else shall proceed as the State courts under the State laws proceed to select juries.

Now, Mr. President, I, too, have heard a great deal of talk about juries being packed in this State and in that State and in some other State; always I believe in the State from which the informant does not come. And I have heard how men have been convicted unrighteously, innocent men. That is a very rare occurrence. Such instances are very sparce in the whole volume of judicial annals in the most stormy, the most bloody, and the most barbarous times. I do not believe an instance, unless one so rare, so conspicuous as to be the exception which is said to prove all general rules, can be found of any such thing; and I am so venturesome as to do this: I will enter into this engagement with any Senator: if he will show me an instance in which in the national courts a jury has been packed, I will show him an instance in which the marshal is impeachable and indictable, or else I will show him an instance in which the State where that occurrence took place has been so heedless in devising jury laws that the dereliction is absolutely flagitious. Now I see my excellent friend from Indiana has risen.

Mr. McDONALD. I wish to state to the Senator from New York that within the last three weeks the district court of the United States for the district of Indiana sitting at Indianapolis set aside a jury in a criminal cause because it was a partisan and packed jury, and ordered a new venire.

Mr. CONKLING. If my honorable friend will look at the eleventh volume of Johnson's Reports, which is a report of decisions made in the State of New York, he will find that Ambrose Spencer, who was there a competent judge, set aside an entire panel of grand and petit jurors in a State court; and if he will look at the decisions made in the State of New York he will find that that has occurred perhaps as often as once in a generation, and he will find the same thing in England. And as long as human nature is human and men are made of clay, all mortal processes will be imperfect; and it will occur under the best devised system that some sheriff in the drawing of a jury or the doing of something else will commit some fraud for which he can be prosecuted and punished.

Mr. McDONALD. I will state to the Senator from New York that within this same generation and in that same State another instance of that kind occurred where a panel was set aside by the judge presiding, on the express ground that it was a partisan jury. That judge is now a member of this body and the party who made the application to him was myself.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the plot thickens so much and the Senator from Indiana is getting so complicated with it that I should like to ask him one or two questions. How are juries drawn in the State of Indiana, in brief?

Mr. McDONALD. The regular panels in the State courts are drawn from the boxes in each county.

Mr. CONKLING. Who draws them?

Mr. McDONALD. They are drawn by the clerk of the court from names placed there of qualified jurors by the clerk and sheriff.

Mr. CONKLING. Do they get fair juries in the State courts in Indiana?

Mr. McDONALD. Usually they do.

Mr. CONKLING. Do you ever have any of them set aside?

Mr. McDONALD. Yes, sir. I knew a grand jury to be set aside in the State courts by a democratic judge because the make-up of the jury was entirely of his own party.

Mr. CONKLING. He was a democrat with a conscience, I take it. Now, Mr. President, may I inquire how are the national jurors drawn in the State of Indiana?

Mr. McDONALD. They are drawn from boxes, from the names that are placed there by the marshal and the clerk of the court.

Mr. CONKLING. Where do they get the names?

Mr. McDONALD. They take them from over the State at will. So many names are selected by them and placed in the box, and the requisite number of jurors for the term is drawn from that box from the names placed there by the marshal and clerk. That is by a rule of court.

Mr. CONKLING. I was going to say that my honorable friend from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] mentions to me in his seat—I heard it before—that that is by a rule of the court. I have not been speculating upon what a court would do in a particular case. I am talking, and I want to adhere to my point, about the jury laws of the United States, and I say that under those laws jurors in the State of Indiana are to be drawn, and should be drawn as nearly as may be, according to the provisions made by the laws, the usages, and the practices of the State of Indiana; I use those three words because they are all used in the national statutes. And I have to say that if the State of Indiana has a system under which it seems to happen somewhat frequently from the familiar way in which the Senator from Indiana speaks of it, that in the State courts juries are set aside because they are partisan or dishonest or improperly drawn for some reason or other, then my honorable friend had better look to the outside and the inside of Indiana's cup and platter before he goes to reform the nation at large. He and his Legislature had better look into the mode of drawing juries, because one of two things is true, if I am to judge from his remarks of the frequency with which these mishaps occur: either that the laws of Indiana are lax, are inartificial, are inadequate, and ineffectual; or that my honorable friend from Indiana has succeeded during all these years in which we have heard of him in so lashing into partisan fury the minds of the people of Indiana that they are really mad, party wild, that the democrats there are so crazy that they cannot sit in a jury-box and do justice between man and man. Well, now, when you come to a State which has been subjected to this tuition and which has grown so partisan and so frenzied, if the followers of my friend have done so, what sort of a law would enable you to extract a fair jury from them? I admit it may be one of those things which in the language of a play "no fellow can find out."

Mr. McDONALD. I gave one instance under our State law where a grand jury had been discharged by the judge presiding, and I gave two instances in the Federal courts where the judges presiding had set aside the traverse juries that were called in because of their partisanship.

Mr. CONKLING. And then I asked the honorable Senator whether that occurred in the State courts sometimes, and he said oh, yes.

Mr. McDONALD. I said in one instance, which I gave.

Mr. CONKLING. Only one?

Mr. McDONALD. Only one instance that I remember. Perhaps it is the only time that the officers of a county had so far forgotten themselves as to undertake to select a partisan jury.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator mean to tell me that, during the time he has practiced law in Indiana, there has never been but one panel set aside in the State courts?

Mr. McDONALD. For being partisans.

Mr. CONKLING. Pardon me. Does the Senator mean to say that never but once has an entire panel been set aside, during his experience in the State of Indiana, in the State courts?

Mr. McDONALD. Certainly not.

Mr. CONKLING. I suppose not.

Mr. McDONALD. I apprehend the motion has been frequently made where the panel was irregularly summoned.

Mr. CONKLING. I have no doubt of it. In the State of New York, where I am bound to believe the jurors like the people are not only the most intelligent on earth, but the purest, the freest from political bias and impurity of every kind,—even in that most enlightened of Commonwealths, it does happen sometimes that a panel is moved to be set aside, and that the motion prevails. I thought from the Senator's way of stating it that it was a sort of disorder which had visited his State with more virulence than had appeared in the common run of Commonwealths, and I rather think now from the emotion which the Senator evinces and his change of color that he feels himself that Indiana is not entitled to such an encomium as I have very truthfully passed upon the State which I have the honor in part to represent. The Senator has my sympathy in that regard. I will only say to him that if he will move to the East and take up his residence in the State from which I come, he will be permitted to breathe an atmosphere, not only judicial but political, which will strengthen him, and he will stand "redeemed, regenerated, and disenthralled" from many of the vagaries which now so much impair his usefulness, so far as his political course is concerned.

Mr. McDONALD. That would depend on what part of the State of New York I lived in.

Mr. CONKLING. There is some force in that. If the Senator will consult me apart, I will advise him what part of that State to come to, although all parts are so desirable that the choice is not as great as the Senator might suppose. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, coming back to what I was saying, I have not heard from any Senator, I shall be bold enough to express the belief that I shall not hear from any Senator, one instance in a State from Maine to the Gulf and all around to Oregon, in which, if the State has a suitable jury system, there is or can be any difficulty in getting a jury in the national courts as fair as any jury that is produced to sit in the courts of that State; and I believe that a more groundless, sensational, fanciful outcry has not been heard even within these walls than the hue and cry to which we have listened in respect of the juries. I heard some time ago a Senator whom I do not discover now, the juinor Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. HAMPTON,] deliver an address to the Senate, when this very bill was pending as it left the Senate, the bill reforming the jury system of the United States—I heard him declare that he understood that the whole purpose was to restore the laws which had existed for I think he said seventy years. I do not know but that I have his words here. I find I have, and I will read them:

> If the repealing acts which have been suggested were passed to-day, we should simply be remanded to the legislation under which the country has lived and moved and had its being for seventy-five years of its existence.

That is the way he understood this, that we were going back by passing this act to laws under which the country had lived and moved and had its existence for seventy-five years; whereas the laws under which the country has done all those enumerated things for more than eighty years exist this hour, and at this hour the Senate is engaged in prostrating them and in erecting upon their ruins a system which I earned the displeasure of the some-time presiding officer of this body by characterizing the other day as indecent; and notwithstanding the admonition and rebuke which I received from that Senator, I take this occasion to repeat deliberately that in my judgment this enactment, if it shall become one, which I hold up to the Senate, is indecent, and it will disfigure and disgrace the statute-books of the nation; and I measure my expression, I say that is indecent which, in the presence of eight centuries of British history, in the presence of the experience of a realm which for eight centuries has had a Parliament, which history comprises the common law and its teachings; that is indecent which in the presence of one hundred years of national experience here, reading a provision in the Constitution referring to a fair trial by an impartial jury, proposes for the first time to put into the jury-box, alternating the process, a partisan on the one side and a partisan on the other, and requiring all men to submit to those partisans all the issues of life, of liberty, and of property. And for such crime as I do in denouncing that as indecent, I am willing to be adjudged in this presence or in the broader presence in which all of us are adjudged.

There is nothing in the Constitution which prevents distinguishing between the religion of men who may sit upon a jury. The Constitution does say that no religious test shall be applied to the right to hold offices and trusts of honor. I do not understand the position of a juror sitting in the box to be an office or in that sense a trust. Therefore, in respect of constitutional power, we may provide that so many Protestants and so many Catholics, so many Episcopalians and so many Universalists, shall be put in the jury-box, and we may provide for the composition of juries in other like ways; and when we do, should I be here, I will venture again to say that that is an indecent statutory provision, indecent in a free country where every man has a right without challenge to religion and politics of his own.

I know that it has been sought to muffle the oars by the use of some words here "without reference to party affiliations" a troop of horse shod in felt, intended that the ring should not be quite so loud; but is there a man here who ever tried a cause in court or witnessed a trial, who has ever belonged to a political party who understands anything about the anatomy of human nature, that can wink so hard as not to see through and through that transparent provision? Look at it a moment:

> The names of not less than three hundred persons, possessing the qualifications prescribed in section 800 of the Revised Statutes, which names shall have been placed therein by the clerk of such court and a commissioner, to be appointed by the judge thereof, which commissioner shall be a citizen of good standing, residing in the district in which such court is held, of good standing—

"Good standing" is repeated. That is doubtless intended as one of the ornaments of discourse, as a great English judge said:

> and a well-known member of the principal political party opposing that to which the clerk may belong, the clerk and said commissioner each to place one name in said box alternately, without reference to party affiliations, until the whole number required shall be placed therein.

It has been said, I believe it is a principle in hydraulics, that the stream never rises higher than the head.

Mr. EATON. Unless you use machinery.

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON,] with not only the wit but the mechanical contrivance of a Yankee, suggests that what I say is true unless you use some machinery; and for that reason I propose to turn attention to the machinery proposed by this bill to be used.

Mr. EATON. We propose to improve on that machinery which you have been using.

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend, I judge now, is an applicant for a patent for an improvement on somebody else's invention. [Laughter.] Let us look at this machinery a little. In the first place, I inquire, as somebody has asked already—the Senator from Massachusetts, I believe—what is the object of selecting a man who is to be of "good standing" twice repeated? Possibly upon the principle, it occurs to me, that two affirmatives make a negative, it may have been thought that by repeating twice over that he was to be of good standing,—the honorable Senator from Massachusetts makes a suggestion that in the absence of the Senator from Connecticut I hardly feel at liberty to repeat——

Mr. EATON. I am here.

Mr. CONKLING. Oh, the Senator is here now. The suggestion is that this "good standing" repeated twice over is intended to be equivalent to the mark XX. I do not know what that mark XX signifies, but I suppose that the mechanical genius of the State of Connecticut would be able to inform me on that point.

Mr. McDONALD. "Double excellent" is the meaning on a beer-barrel.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Indiana thinks this has something to do with a beer barrel. I do not understand that. I leave it to the Senator to see where that occurs, unless it relates to a saving at the spigot to let it run out at the bung. Possibly that may be the resemblance the Senator finds.

I inquire, Mr. President, why is there to be "a well-known member of the principal political party opposed to that to which the clerk belongs?" To ask the question is to answer it. Every man of common sense knows that the mission of this commissioner is to be to select from the party which he represents not only the partisans who are iron-clad, bomb-proof, not shaky, but to select the men who by reason perhaps of not having much else to do will find it convenient to hang about a court and get $3 a day, and to be doing a variety of chores and other things of that sort in the mean time. Men whom it will be convenient to have attend the county seat, or wherever it may be, for two or three or four weeks to manage the politics, to assist the aspirations of men, will under this convenient authority be put forward, and they will get their $3 a day and their five cents a mile mileage to and fro, and their presence will be enjoyed for all that their presence is intended to accomplish.

But now I want to ask the attention of the Senate to another point about this bill. "The principal political party opposing that to which the clerk may belong." What party is that to be? Is it true that the clerks of these courts belong invariably to one of the political parties? Here is some man who has been for years and years clerk of a court; he began long before the present division of parties. Perhaps he is a temperance man, or, as some people say, a teetotaler, and when the temperance issue arises he votes upon that; he does not vote otherwise at all. This is not an imaginary case that I am stating. I think I address more than one person who knows that it is a real case. Here is another clerk of a court who was an old anti-slavery man. He voted for James G. Birney in 1844, and in spirit he has voted for him ever since. It has been said that the spirit of Richelieu ruled France forty years after Richelieu died; and so the spirit of James G. Birney has inspired the politics of a good many men ever since James G. Birney died. Well, such a man as that is the clerk of a court. Here is some other man who is a non-partisan; he is not a democrat; he is not a republican. Of which party is the commissioner to be who is to belong to the principal party opposing him? Is it to be the party in the majority as between the two? If the democrats having in that district a majority of two or three thousand, there he is to be a democrat, I suppose; then nobody is to represent the republican party.

How is it to be in States where there are three parties? I believe in the State of Ohio now in some sort there are three parties. A Senator behind me suggests that there are vulgar fractions there, there are two parties and a half, and no longer three parties. It is understood that the recent doings in that State, which have produced such painful disquiet, sometimes even within the range of my own observation here, and for one I feel grateful that the State convention of the democrats has met and adjourned, because I think that event having passed conduces very much to the serenity to be found in the city of Washington, as distant as that is; but that convention has managed, it seems, to put a part of one party and the whole or a part (I do not know how that is) of another party together, and they call it one party; and then one half perhaps of what was known as the greenback party remains, and I think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] will have to correct his arithmetic, for now that I think of it, I understand that that portion of the democratic party which believes in honest money does not come in under this tent which has been fixed for the democratic dwellers in Ohio, so that I believe a portion of the democratic party is by itself, a portion of the greenback party is by itself, and the present democratic party there is made up of fragments of these two dissevered organizations. Now in that case I do not know which of these four parties would be represented in the State of Ohio.

The Senator from Georgia, [Mr. HILL,] whom I see in his seat—I am always glad to see him—told us the other day, in answer to a question which I believe I ventured to ask myself, that the opposing candidates for Congress in Georgia were all democrats, and he added, that nobody but democrats ran for office there. How is it to be in Georgia?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I say to my friend that I do not think I said exactly that nobody ran for office but democrats.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator think he did not say it?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I think I did not.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, one of my uncomfortable possessions is rather a tenacious memory. If the honorable Senator will look even at the RECORD, which I have not looked at, and shall not find that he said that, I will take public occasion to apologize for quoting it.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I know the Senator does not intend to misrepresent or misunderstand me. I do not mean to say he has any such intention.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator does know that perfectly well.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I simply remind him that we were talking at the time of the last election in 1878 for members of Congress, and there were no other candidates in the districts then spoken of. We were talking especially of certain districts. There were certain districts in which there were two candidates, and I said they were all democrats; nobody ran in those districts for that office but democrats. I was speaking of certain districts in reply to the Senator from Maine; but I never said that nobody ran for any office in Georgia but democrats.

Mr. CONKLING. I will accept anything which the Senator from Georgia likes me to accept. In doing so, however, I will venture to say that if the honorable Senator from Georgia does not find on the RECORD the words which I will repeat, I will take public occasion to withdraw this statement: "Nobody but democrats run down there;" I give him now the very words and the RECORD shall decide between us.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The Senator will remember certainly that I was speaking about the particular election in regard to which we were talking.

Mr. CONKLING. That may be. I quote the words of the Senator from Georgia. When asked "Well, the other man who ran was a democrat also, was he not?" Yes, he said he was, and then added "Nobody but democrats run down there."

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Of course I meant nobody in those districts at that election. Everybody understood that.

Mr. CONKLING. Very well, so be it. There was no startling announcement made by the Senator. We all knew that nobody but democrats run for office down there, and the only inaccuracy of the Senator's statement was that he omitted the latter words. If he had only said "nobody runs for office in Georgia but democrats," it would have gone without saying. Those who are not democrats and who run in Georgia do not run for office. [Laughter.] They are very likely to run for their lives or for some other strong inducement; but office is not one of the things for which they are permitted to run. That I understand, with or without the testimony of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I must beg pardon of the Senator from New York. I thought that he was not using a mere play of words when I got up to interrupt him, and I beg his pardon.

Mr. CONKLING. Oh, no, Mr. President, I did not wish to play at all, and I would not dare to play with the Senator from Georgia because a caution has been given about playing with fire and playing with edged tools; and when I want to play I shall not be venturesome enough to undertake to play with the so well-equipped Senator from Georgia.

I say, however, that in Georgia it will be very difficult—so it will in a good many other States—should this strange contrivance ever see the light as a law, to ascertain what party is to be represented by the commissioner who along with the clerk of the court is to make up a jury as used to be said in the valley of the Mohawk with a streak of lean and a streak of fat, until they get the whole of it made.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, rose.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I am not going to prolong this discussion. I shall move, unless some Senator anticipates me, to strike out of this bill in line 36 of section 1 after the word "dollars" everything down to the end of line 39; but I will not now, as the Senator from Pennsylvania wishes to make a motion, give my reason for that amendment. I have a reason, however.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) The Senator from New York gives notice of an amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. Simply that, and when I do offer it I will endeavor to be brief in assigning a reason for it in addition to those which have been indicated. I will also, unless some Senator anticipates me in doing it, move to strike from this bill on page 3 in line 4 of section 2 the words following "eighty" and down to and including the end of the ninth line. These amendments precede the jury clause and I take it somebody will move to strike that from the bill also. I shall make these motions with the hope, although not with the expectation, that they may prevail, my hope being inspired by a wish to bring this session to a close and by a wish to have this bill pass, if it is to pass at all, in such a form that it may receive the Executive approval without executive stultification. I hope it may get in such form and substance as not to present to the Executive over again in, if possible, a form more offensive than that already employed, the same question which he has felt himself constrained upon his oath to answer in the negative, to answer by a veto. And I hope my honorable friend from Connecticut will join with me in the laudable endeaver to so perfect this bill that it may not strike on the rock of the Constitution and go down leaving nothing but a bubble to rise to the surface to mark the spot where it fell.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, rose.

Mr. EATON. My friend from Pennsylvania will pardon me a moment. I will say to my friend from New York that I shall be found to join him in the making of a law that I believe to be just and honest and right without any regard to the opinion that any other gentleman may have who lives at the other end of the Avenue. I must give my adhesion to a law that I believe to be just, and leave it to the Executive to exercise the constitutional power, not prerogative—somebody talked about the prerogative of the President the other day—leave him to exercise the constitutional power which he possesses. That is his right; mine is the other.

Mr. CONKLING. That shows that we are to have the better portion of the democratic party uniting with us in perfecting this bill. I am very much gratified to know it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WALLACE. I hope not.

Mr. GROOME. If that motion is pressed, I shall move an adjournment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON.]

Mr. WALLACE. I hope this will not occur. I want to dispose of this bill, if possible, to-night.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. You cannot do it.

Mr. WALLACE. We can try it. The session is drawing to a close. We want to dispose of the bill as soon as possible.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Fix a time on Monday for the vote. This is Saturday, and let us get off soon.

Mr. WHYTE. I suggest that an hour be fixed on Monday at which the vote shall be taken on the bill. I suppose unanimous consent can be given for that purpose. Say Monday at four o'clock.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to any hour being fixed. I am quite willing to stay here on Monday till we finish it.

Mr. CONKLING. Nobody wants to talk against time, but everybody ought to have a fair opportunity to say what he wishes.

Mr. WALLACE. We can go on for an hour longer to-day.

Mr. WHYTE. There is some executive business that I would appeal to my colleagues to allow us to have disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. GROOME. I simply wish to make a statement not in the way of debate. If we go into executive session I am entitled to the floor.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator has no right to make that statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland cannot make such a statement as he has just made in open session with regard to executive business.

Mr. GROOME. I made it unwittingly, and beg pardon. I am a new Senator. I can say this, that I know the executive business for which a session is asked cannot be transacted this afternoon.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. We shall do our best to dispose of it; that is our duty.

Mr. GROOME. It is utterly impossible.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to know what is the wish of the Committee on Appropriations in relation to this bill?

Mr. WALLACE. To go forward with the bill, as I have already said, and pass it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will go with you.

Mr. GROOME. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask my friend from Pennsylvania to withdraw his motion for an executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania withdraw the motion?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I do not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 16, noes 22.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Allison,	Chandler,	Kellogg,	Paddock,
Blaine,	Conkling,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,
Booth,	Dawes,	Logan,	Windom.
Burnside,	Ferry,	McMillan,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill of Colorado,	McPherson,
Cameron of Wis.,	Ingalls,	Morrill,

NAYS—27.

Bailey,	Eaton,	Jonas,	Slater,
Bayard,	Garland,	Kernan,	Vest,
Beck,	Groome,	McDonald,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Walker,
Coke,	Hereford,	Morgan,	Wallace,
Davis of Illinois,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,	Withers.
Davis of W. Va.,	Houston,	Saulsbury,

ABSENT—28.

Anthony,	Farley,	Jones of Florida,	Saunders,
Bell,	Gordon,	Jones of Nevada,	Sharon,
Bruce,	Grover,	Lamar,	Teller,
Butler,	Hamlin,	Platt,	Thurman,
Carpenter,	Harris,	Plumb,	Vance,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Randolph,	Whyte,
Edmunds,	Johnston,	Ransom,	Williams.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE. I have no desire to force the Senate to remain here to a late hour to-night, but I should like very well to fix an hour on Monday for taking the vote on this bill. If there be unanimous consent to fix an hour on Monday for taking the vote on the bill, I will yield.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us agree that on Monday we will finish the bill before adjournment, without fixing an hour.

Mr. WALLACE. That entails a night session. I simply ask unanimous consent to fix an hour. I would suggest that the vote be taken at four o'clock on Monday.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the object of that?

Mr. WALLACE. To dispose of the bill on Monday.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator suppose that any Senator on this side wishes to talk, to debate for the sake of consuming time? Has there been any indication of that?

Mr. WALLACE. I have seen nothing of it yet.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I suggest to the Senator that the soonest way to get a vote on the bill is to go on in the ordinary mode. I do not think that there is one Senator on either side that has the slightest idea of debating the bill merely in order to consume time.

Mr. WALLACE. Then what prevents us from going on this evening? If an hour was fixed on Monday we could talk up to that point, and dispose of the bill then, and have no night session pending this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, to test the sense of the Senate on the proposition of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I move that the Senate do now adjourn. I think we shall have no trouble about reaching a vote on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I did not intend to take any part in this debate, but the challenge thrown out by the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] and repeated several times, that no instance could be shown where Federal juries were selected otherwise than under State laws, I think calls for some notice.

Mr. CONKLING. What does the Senator say?

Mr. VOORHEES. I understood the Senator from New York—and I think that understanding has been shared generally—said that the juries were drawn pursuant to State laws upon that subject and that, wherever there was vice or evil, it was due to the laws of the States rather than to the laws of the United States or the practice of the Federal courts.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will pardon me, "unless the law was violated by those who drew or selected the jurors."

Mr. VOORHEES. I think I can show the Senator from New York that the law itself rebukes his statement, and I can appeal to Senators about me and others who have given me information, that the fact in practice is otherwise. The law on this subject is found on page 150 of the Revised Statutes, section 800:

> Jurors to serve in the courts of the United States, in each State respectively, shall have the same qualifications, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, and be entitled to the same exemptions, as jurors of the highest court of law in such State may have and be entitled to at the time when such jurors for service in the courts of the United States are summoned; and they shall be designated by ballot, lot, or otherwise, according to the mode of forming such juries then practiced in such State court, so far as such mode may be practicable by the courts of the United States or the officers thereof.

The law itself leaves the Federal courts a margin, and gives them the right to depart in every instance from the State laws upon this subject. They are not bound in holding a court in any State by the laws of that State on the subject of selecting juries. "As far as practicable" is the language of this statute, and that is a much larger loop-hole than is necessary for the Federal judges to get out at and avoid the local law; and, in point of fact, the practice is in every instance, notably in a case in South Carolina under Judge Bond's jurisdiction, for the Federal court to prescribe a rule of court by which juries are selected; and, as I was informed but a few minutes ago by a reputable gentleman, Judge Bond is in the habit of appointing his own commissioners. I regret to say anything in connection with party politics in discussing a jury law; but when the Federal courts themselves act as partisans how are we to help discussing that question? Judge Bond appoints his own jury commissioners and appoints them all the time strict partisans of his own party, and the State laws of South Carolina are nothing to him, or the laws of any other State can be set aside in the same way and are set aside daily and constantly, and this hour the Federal courts of this country are in one respect lawless, a law unto themselves, and that is in regard to selecting jurors. They prescribe the practice under the permission given by this statute, which is a direction to adhere to the State laws as far as practicable, and whether it is practicable or not is to be decided by the judge, and all he has to do is to decide that it is not practicable and then he prescribes a rule and does as he pleases.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask a question?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes.

Mr. CONKLING. Does Judge Bond, as reported to the Senator by this reputable gentleman, observe or disregard the law?

Mr. VOORHEES. He observes this law, which gives him the liberty to disregard the State law of South Carolina.

Mr. CONKLING. Then, if I understand the Senator, Judge Bond, as reported to him, does proceed according to law?

Mr. VOORHEES. He proceeds according to his own capricious notions.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator would indulge me in an answer to the question, it is, whether Judge Bond, as reported to him, proceeds according to law?

Mr. VOORHEES. I will answer the question. This law that I have read is a permission to Judge Bond and to any other Federal judge to do as he pleases, and Judge Bond does that; and now, if the Senator from New York is satisfied that that is obedience to law, then he is obeying the law.

Mr. CONKLING. Having asked my question three times, I thank the honorable Senator from Indiana for the answer he has not given.

Mr. VOORHEES. The answer has been given, and I repeat my answer. I have read the law in the hearing of the Senator, which requires a Federal judge as far as practicable to adhere to the State laws in the selection of juries, and whether it is practicable or not is left to the judge to decide. In deciding that it is not practicable to adhere to the State laws in the selection of juries, he is not violating any law. That is certainly true. He is not violating any law because he has permission here to disregard the State laws. The Senator from New York, with his great and commanding ability and his fine discrimination, is not going, I think, to be able to shift the issue between him and me upon this point. The issue is this: the Senator from New York sought to impress, and doubtless did impress upon the minds of some, that the jury system in the Federal courts was regulated by the laws of the different States, so that when a Federal judge came to Indiana to hold a court, if we had good jury laws, we should have a fair selection of jurors; if we had not, then it was our fault, and therein once in a while the Senator from New York becomes a pretty good State-rights man; but when I point out the fact that these judges are not bound to adhere to any State law, but are permitted to judge for themselves that the mode prescribed by Indiana is not practicable, then his whole argument falls to the ground, necessarily so. There is no binding force whatever in this law on the subject of drawing jurors; in other words it is a permission to the Federal courts to do as they please upon that subject, and they do so. They prescribe the mode of drawing the juries and, as in the case of the judge that I have cited, I am informed that he appoints his own commissioners with not the slightest attention to the laws of the State, without the slightest regard to them, without the slightest notion of adhering to them he appoints his own commissioners of his own party and selects his jury in his own way.

That is what I desire to say upon this point; and I think a more pernicious principle than is involved in that section I have never known. It pretends, and with enough of color to deceive, to remit this jury question to the States and the State laws, when in fact it does nothing of the kind, but leaves it to the breast of the judge to set aside the State laws, and in their place there is no law here. It leaves it to him to prescribe a rule of court, a regulation of his own.

Mr. CONKLING. Before the Senator sits down I should like to know from him, and I ask him now in his character as a lawyer more than otherwise, whether he means to say deliberately that when a judge finds laws, usages, and practices for drawing jurors in a State, and the statute commanding him declares that he shall proceed according to those laws, usages, and practices as near as practicable—are those the words?

Mr. VOORHEES. "So far as such mode may be practicable."

Mr. CONKLING. Very well. So far as they may be practicable. I ask the Senator whether he means deliberately to say that a judge who disregards—that was one word he employed—who sets aside—that was another of his phrases—the laws of the State, does not violate that statute?

Mr. VOORHEES. I can only answer in my own way. I do not claim pre-eminence as a lawyer, and I would not seek a judicial position; but if I was a judge on the bench and this law was brought before me on the one hand, and the laws of a State were submitted to me on the other prescribing a mode for the drawing of jurors, I should feel that I had a clear and unquestioned right, without any violation of law, to say that such mode as was contained in the State laws was not practicable for the court, if I saw fit to do so, if that was true.

Mr. CONKLING. I would, if it had been respectful to the Senator, have asked for the yeas and nays for him on the question which I asked him, for I thought it could be answered by a "yea" or a "nay" response. I understand him now, however, if he will allow me, to mean that he thinks the court would not violate that statute although it is practicable to draw the juries according to the State mode——

Mr. VOORHEES. No, I said if it was not practicable he had a right.

Mr. CONKLING. Oh, if it was not practicable. The Senator has been arguing that because the statute says "as far as practicable" or "as near as practicable," whatever the words are, therefore Judge Bond might proceed, as he understands he has done—I do not wish to be understood as indorsing that statement at all because I hear a contrary statement to the one delivered to the Senator—he has been arguing that Judge Bond did not violate the law at all, and he has also been arguing that these words "as near as practicable" permitted a wide, open discretion to the judge to do just as he pleases.

Now I remind the Senator that the statutes of his own State and of mine declare that in certain cases of partition of real estate, for example, a division shall be made so that each party shall receive the same value, quantity, and equivalent as near as may be. "As near as may be" is a customary phrase. Would the Senator say that a commissioner or a court did not flagrantly violate that law by proceeding to make a division in which the equality was not "as near as may be?" There is discretion of course; but it is only the discretion of judgment; and when Judge Bond goes to South Carolina and finds a mode of drawing juries which is actually practiced, which is shown by experience to be efficient, he then as the Senator says sets aside the whole thing and by a rule of court directs it to be done in an entirely different way—assuming that he does that, I am very free to say that in my opinion he utterly violates the law. And if it were true that he does that and he were impeached for doing it, and it was proved, the Senator from Indiana, notwithstanding the declarations he has made to-day, would I think be constrained to the painful duty of voting to convict him for thus disregarding and setting aside the law; and it would be no answer to say that the statute says "as near as practicable," so that if some particular ceremony were found which could not be observed in the Federal courts, meaning that that may be disregarded; it would be no answer to file to that to say for that reason he disregarded and set aside the whole thing.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, whenever a question is left solely to a judicial officer to determine, it is very hard to say where the infraction of law by him begins or where it ends as a misconstruction of law. The Senator from New York will see that point. It is hard to say where a judicial officer violates law, where the question before him is one of construction. The two things come together without a very distinct or well-defined line between them. I have heard a judge (so has the Senator from New York, I have no doubt) consciously pervert law by a ruling, by a construction, and yet it would be hard to say that that man was committing a violation of law. Here is a statute on our books that leaves to each Federal judge as a question of construction whether the State law of the State in which he is holding a Federal court prescribes a practicable mode of drawing jurors for the Federal court. He is left to decide that for himself, and when he says "no, these laws are not practicable," while the Senator from New York and myself and others might think they were practicable, still it is a question left to him for his construction, and with that we have to be in a great measure content. It takes a large abuse of power on the bench to constitute a willful violation of law for which impeachment would lie.

Mr. CONKLING. On that point of discretion, I wish the Senator would enlighten me a little further, for he has touched a point which troubles me a good deal in this bill. It declares:

> And all juries to serve in courts after the passage of this act shall be drawn in conformity herewith.

I wish the Senator would tell me what is to happen in this not improbable case: suppose these two politicians or partisans as they are presumed to be, if there are two and if they get on opposite sides, select three hundred unfit men, or men a large part of whom are purposely selected for their bias, for a reason which the Senator would agree with me would make them improper jurors at a particular term, what is to be the remedy for that? And in connection with that question I wish the honorable Senator would answer this, which is a part of it: suppose, when the jury is drawn in court, under the right of peremptory challenge, challenge for cause, and challenge to the favor, the panel is exhausted, under this bill how are talesmen to be supplied? Who in such a case as that is to constitute the jury? Is the trial to be given up; is the court to disband; or what is to happen in either of these cases which I have mentioned to the Senator?

Mr. VOORHEES. In all good faith I shall leave the details of this bill to the Senator from Pennsylvania who has it in charge. I rose for one simple purpose, and that was to point out what I think to be an error or defect in the statement made by the Senator from New York, and further than that I do not desire to detain the Senate with a system of cross-questioning.

Mr. CONKLING. The honorable Senator was inveighing, justly in part at least, against the danger of committing discretion to the courts. Now, I point out to him here a very glaring instance, as it seems to me, in which very wide discretion is to be left to the court to do what it pleases without let or hinderance, or else there is to be a failure in justice, or else here is a hiatus in the statutes.

Mr. VOORHEES. Why would not this meet the question of the Senator from New York as propounded? This is the existing law, section 804:

> When, from challenges or otherwise, there is not a petit jury to determine any civil or criminal cause, the marshal or his deputy shall, by order of the court in which such defect of jurors happens, return jurymen from the bystanders sufficient to complete the panel; and when the marshal or his deputy is disqualified as aforesaid, jurors may be so returned by such disinterested person as the court may appoint, and such person shall be sworn, as provided in the preceding section.

That stands as existing law.

Mr. CONKLING. The difficulty about it is first that it is repealed by this bill, as I understand it, by implication. Second, this bill provides that all juries, for talesmen become a jury when they are impaneled, all juries to serve in the courts after the passage of this act shall be drawn in conformity herewith. Therefore, the Senator cannot go back and appeal to something that is the law now, but which will not be the law then, and tell me that would remedy the defect.

Mr. WALLACE. A question was originally put to me by the Senator from New York, and before I could answer it the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from New York became engaged in a colloquy. I had in my hand then a decision to read, and perhaps I could have answered the question then more directly than I may be able to do now, for I shall not now take up the time of the Senate to answer in detail what has already been answered. The last paragraphs of section 800 are as follows:

> And for this purpose the said courts may, by rule or order, conform the designation and impaneling of juries, in substance, to the laws and usages relating to jurors in the State courts, from time to time in force in such State.

Now I read from 1st Woods's Reports of cases before Judge Bradley, and Judge Woods, circuit judge, the case of the United States vs. Collins, page 499. The syllabus of the case is as follows:

1. The act of Congress of July 20, 1840—

Which is in substance section 800 of the Revised Statutes—

prescribing how jurors in courts of the United States shall be designated, does not require a minute adherence to the State practice on that subject by the United States courts.

2. It is not necessary, under said act, for the United States courts to employ State officers to perform for them any part of the duty of designating jurors. They may and should impose that duty entirely on their own officers.

3. The law of Georgia required that the names of jurors should be taken from the book of the receiver of tax returns; held, that this requirement was not binding on the courts of the United States. Those courts were only required to take care that their jurors had the same qualifications as jurors in the State courts.

4. A rule of the United States court for the southern district of Georgia, which prescribed that the names of five hundred persons, having the qualifications of jurors under the State law, should be selected from the body of the district by the marshal and clerk and three United States commissioners, to be designated by the court, and that the names of grand and petit jurors should be drawn from such list by the marshal and clerk, by lot, is in substantial accord with the law of Georgia prescribing how jurors shall be selected, and is a compliance with the act of Congress on the subject.

Mr. CONKLING. Exactly.

Mr. WALLACE. Those commissioners were appointed by the court, however, and this, it seems to me, demonstrates what has been argued throughout, that the practice under this law is that the courts of the United States in the circuits and districts appoint the officers to draw the jurors in their own way. That difficulties have arisen from this process, I shall endeavor to show from the reports of the Attorney-General.

Attorney-General Pierrepont, in his report to the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, said this:

> There is no uniform system of obtaining jurors in the United States, and great abuses have sprung up, and much favoritism and corruption are complained of. It is easy to provide a uniform mode of selecting jurors for the courts of the United States, and I respectfully suggest that an act be passed to accomplish this result.

Mr. Devens, in his report to the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress, said:

> My predecessors thought that a uniform method of drawing jurors for United States courts should be adopted for the whole country, and I add thereto my conviction of its propriety and usefulness.

Now, we have both the recent Attorneys-General recommending the adoption of a statute of this kind.

Mr. CONKLING. We have in this decision an elaboration of a very famous decision in a case to which the Senator's own Commonwealth was a party, a case which arose, if I remember aright, under the fugitive-slave act of 1793; which imposed upon justices of the peace certain duties. The Supreme Court in the case of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania vs. Prigg decided that, although justices of the peace were State officers and if they chose to do so, were competent to execute this duty, they were not bound to do it; that if they did it, they did it as volunteers and because they pleased to do it. Following in the wake of that decision, Judge Bradley says here two things: First, that the court is not bound to rely on the State officers, but may rely upon its own officers, and had better do so. No doubt of it, because no State officer is bound to act at all. Then he says nothing else that bears upon this point, except that the statute "does not require a minute adherence" to the State modes; that where in any particular it is not practicable literally and exactly to follow the usage of the State, there the court is at liberty to depart as far as is necessary to make it feasible and practicable. That is just what I have been arguing; that is just what this case says. And he goes on to say that when the jury has been drawn in accordance, in substance—"in substantial accord" is his language—"with the law of Georgia prescribing how jurors shall be selected," that "is a compliance with the act of Congress." That is what I have argued all the way, and it is all I insist upon.

Mr. EATON. I desire to say to my friend from Pennsylvania that an absolute answer to the question of the Senator from New York is to be found in another part of this bill. This bill does not prevent Judge Bond or any other judge of the district or circuit court of the United States from taking the jury in precisely the same manner that the State does; because it says:

> But nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any judge in a district in which such is now the practice from ordering the names of jurors to be drawn from the boxes used by the State authorities in selecting jurors in the highest courts of the State.

Therefore, if it should turn out that a panel was ordered of three hundred men, and that that panel became exhausted, that very moment the district judge could refer to the State law for the purpose of completing it.

Mr. CONKLING. Could be before it became so?

Mr. EATON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CONKLING. I am sorry the Senator from Indiana is not present; because this answers his argument. This is to leave Judge Bond and all these people free as before to commit the wrongs he has described.

Mr. EATON. Not so. By this statute he is governed entirely, except that he must take the State law; not his own will, but the law of the State, and take his jurors precisely as they are taken for the highest court in the State, and that can be done under this law.

Mr. CONKLING. That is the law now.

Mr. EATON. That is the law now, and it may be if this bill becomes a law. There need not be a single juror drawn under this law. If Judge Bond and other district and circuit judges throughout the United States do their duty fairly, fully, and manfully, then this law will not be used. I have no idea under this bill, if it passes into a law, that the district judges of New York or Connecticut will change the mode of drawing jurors at all. I have no idea that it will be done. But it is to cure a defect which exists in certain States of the Union.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. As the laws of Georgia have been referred to, I think I ought to say a word. If I understood the Senator from New York in his construction of section 800 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, I concur with him as to the construction of that section entirely. I believe as a lawyer he is right, if I understand him; and I think I do understand him, because I caught his idea clearly in the colloquy with the Senator from Indiana. I was not in when the Senator from New York made the chief part of his argument; but I believe his construction of that section is right, and I concur with him fully in that construction. The trouble, I will say to the Senator from New York, is that the Federal judges do not so construe it as I understand. They do not concur with his view and mine. The decision which has been read by the Senator from Pennsylvania I do not think correctly presents the facts of that case, at least as far as he read. I made an argument in that case when it originated in Atlanta. We had a very interesting trial there which excited a good deal of feeling. The point we made was that in the manner of drawing jurors in that court and in the qualifications of the jurors drawn the court had disregarded, as we insisted, the laws of the State. I then put exactly the same construction on section 800 which the Senator from New York has put on that section to-day. I therefore believe he is right. But the judges differed with us, and the result has been, without going into particulars, that the judges in passing their order, as they did, prescribing the manner of drawing jurors down there, have succeeded in having juries in the Federal courts, I do not think more than half of whom have the qualifications of jurors in the State courts. They say, however, that they do substantially comply with the law of the State. We think they do not by any means comply with the law; and we think a tree is known by its fruits.

I will state briefly the issue there as I recollect it, and I do not wish to do the judges injustice, because they are very excellent gentlemen. The constitution of 1868—framed by what was called the reconstruction convention down there, under the laws of Congress, the constitution framed by which was approved by Congress—provided that the persons to serve as jurors must be upright and intelligent persons. That clause was inserted by one whom I consider the most intelligent and distinguished republican in the State, for the express purpose of preserving the purity of trial by jury, no less a person than the ex-Attorney-General himself, Mr. Akerman. I remember precisely his reasons for inserting that clause in the constitution, and I concurred with him, and I think that he rendered the State a great service when he did insert that clause in the constitution, and he deserves the thanks of the State for it, and I have no hesitation in saying so. He did it from the highest and purest of motives. The republican Legislature of 1870, I think, or 1869 it may have been, passed an act to carry out that provision of the constitution, and in that act they provided that upright and intelligent jurors should be selected by a board of commissioners, that board of commissioners to be composed, among others, of the ordinary of the county, the officer having charge of the probate of wills, we call him the ordinary. I have not the statute before me, but the board was to be composed of the ordinary of the county, the clerk of the superior court, and three freeholders, to be appointed by the judge of the superior court presiding in that county, called the circuit court. That board of five commissioners meet at appointed times and select every man in the county that they deem upright and intelligent within the constitutional qualifications, and put the names selected in a jury-box, and from the jury-box thus selected the judge of the superior court, in open court in term time, draws the juries for the term, unless prevented by providential or other cause. The Federal courts in Georgia followed that system for years to about the time—the year I have forgotten, but I think in 1872 or 1873—when the Federal judges departed from that, as we insisted, and passed a rule of their own, and did not select the juries in the mode thus prescribed, and did not select as qualified jurors the persons declared qualified by the laws of the State.

My judgment was that section 800 required that the jurors in the Federal courts should have the same qualifications—that was the language, and I dwelt on it—as jurors in the highest State courts, and I took exactly the view of that whole section that the Senator from New York has presented here to-day. The judges, however, said that they were not bound by the rule to that extent; that their own officers had not only a right under their own rule to select jurors as to the mode of selecting, but they had a right to be the exclusive judges of who was upright and who was intelligent. So they departed entirely from the State law. No man was qualified under the State law to serve as a juror, by express enactment, both constitutional and statutory, unless he was qualified in the manner provided, unless he was adjudged upright and intelligent by this board of commissioners.

Mr. CONKLING. And the words "upright and intelligent" were in the constitution of the State?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes, sir, he was required to be upright and intelligent by the constitution, and the act provided how it should be ascertained whether men were upright and intelligent, and it was by a board of commissioners, composed of the ordinary of the county, the clerk of the court, and three freeholders. I think—and I know the Senator from New York by his construction will agree with me—that a man qualified to be a juror in the State court had to be in the box selected by that board of commissioners. They selected every man in the county, without regard to race, color, or previous condition, whom they regarded as upright and intelligent, and all others were cast out without regard to color. We held that the Federal court were bound to select jurors in the Federal courts having the qualifications of jurors in the State courts, and, as evidence of that, whose names were found in the jury-box. The Federal judges overruled that and held that they complied with the qualifications fixed by the law when their own officers adjudged a man upright and intelligent, whether he was so regarded by the State board or not.

Then as to the mode of proceeding, I think just as the Senator from New York does, and I believe it is the correct construction of that section. I listened to his argument with great pleasure; it was clear and correct in my judgment on that point. They departed from the method of selecting the jurors that was used by the State courts upon the ground that they could not follow it, that it was not practicable, and they were not required to do it; and they made a very broad margin, as was said by the Senator from Indiana. Now, what is the condition? I submit to the distinguished Senator from New York, while I concur with him fully in his view of the law as presented by section 800, we do know that in our own State, for instance, that law has not been followed; certainly it has not been construed as it is construed by the Senator from New York and by myself; and the result is, I say frankly—and I say it in kindness, because I have great esteem for the judges down there, both the district judge and the circuit judge, for they are very excellent gentlemen—the result is that what I consider a palpable departure from that section has been allowed; they have jurors to be drawn in the Federal courts from that day to this, not more than half of whom, and sometimes not that number, are qualified by the State laws. Indeed, I am told by a distinguished lawyer from the other House who was here a moment ago that scarcely any of the Federal jurors are qualified as provided by the State law; and yet that is the practice.

I think it is wrong and ought to be corrected. But if the construction of the Senator from New York was adopted by the judges, I should agree with him that the law was sufficient.

SATURDAY, June 14, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. ALFRED H. AMES, McKendree Methodist Episcopal church, Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the following titles:

The bill (H. R. No. 2251) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; and

The bill (H. R. No. 2263) supplemental to "an act to establish post-routes."

ARTHUR P. BAGBY.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time the bill (S. No. 650) to remove the political disabilities of Arthur P. Bagby, of Texas.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The bill relieves Arthur P. Bagby, of the State of Texas, of all political disabilities imposed upon him by the third section of the fourteenth article of amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CONGER. Let the petition be read.

The petition was read, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The petition of Arthur P. Bagby, a resident of Hallettsville, Lavaca County, Texas, would respectfully show that he graduated at the United States Military Academy in June, 1852; was commissioned by the President of the United States a brevet second lieutenant in the Eighth Regiment of Infantry, United States Army, and so continued until the 30th day of August, 1853, when he resigned his said commission and the same was duly accepted, and that he is not in any wise indebted to the Government of the United States, for all of which he respectfully refers to the Adjutant-General's Office of the United States Army; that after his resignation aforesaid he entered the military service of the late Confederate States and continued therein until the close of the war, and that upon the close of the same he returned to his home in Texas, and has resided in said State from thence to the present time, with the exception of a few months, performing all the duties incumbent upon him as a peaceable and law-abiding citizen.

Wherefore he asks the removal of his political disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States in the manner therein prescribed. And as in duty bound your petitioner will ever pray.

ARTHUR P. BAGBY.

The SPEAKER. The petition is accompanied by a letter from the Secretary of War, which, if there be no objection, will be printed in the RECORD without being read.

There was no objection. The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, June 2, 1879.

SIR: I have the honor to return the petition of Arthur P. Bagby, who resigned as second lieutenant Eighth Infantry in 1853 and subsequently entered the confederate army, for removal of his political disabilities, inclosed in your letter of the 19th ultimo, and, in reply to your inquiry, to state that the accounting officers of the Treasury report that there is no evidence on their books that Mr. Bagby has any unsettled accounts with the United States.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. W. MCCRARY,
Secretary of War.

Hon. A. G. THURMAN,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate.

Mr. CONGER. The additional promise of the petitioner to "ever pray" is more than is usually made by those who seek the removal of their political disabilities.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

NAVIGATION OF TWELVE-MILE BAYOU, ETC.

Mr. REAGAN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1915) to improve the navigation of Twelve-Mile Bayou and the lakes between Shreveport, Louisiana, and Jefferson, Texas, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time the bill (S. No. 674) for the benefit of the widow and children of General James Shields, and to increase the pension of Caroline S. Webster.

The bill was read.

Mr. WHITE. This bill ought to receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I hope he will not do so.

Mr. WHITE. I feel very much like doing it. I do make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The bill will go back to the Speaker's table.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. WHITE said: It is very hard to resist the appeals made to a member to withdraw his objection in a case of this kind. My objection to it is that it establishes a precedent. There are a number of cases just as deserving.

Mr. COX. This is a case without precedent.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw his objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WHITE. I do.

Mr. VAN AERNAM. I renew the objection.

INDUSTRIAL TRAINING SCHOOL FOR INDIANS.

Mr. POUND, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 1735) to increase educational privileges and establish additional industrial training schools for the benefit of youth belonging to such nomadic Indian tribes as have educational treaty claims upon the United States, and moved that the bill and amendments and accompanying report be printed and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to.

SITE FOR BALTIMORE POST-OFFICE.

Mr. KIMMEL. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. No. 1478) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate for the purchase at private sale, or, if necessary, to procure by condemnation, a site for a post-office in the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland, with amendments by the Senate, my object being to move concurrence in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CONGER. I reserve the right to object until I hear the amendments read.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 2, after "negotiate," insert "and contract."
In line 2, after "the," insert "conditional."
In line 7, after "post-office," insert "court-house and other public offices."
In line 15, after "site," insert "until the purchase and contract for the same shall have been approved by Congress nor."

Mr. CONGER. I do not object.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. KIMMEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF MONTANA.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I ask unanimous consent to put upon its passage a bill concerning the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana. A similar bill has been agreed to by the Committee on Territories as a substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 1321) concerning the legislative assemblies of the several Territories of the United States, and placed in the hands of a gentleman, not now in his seat, to be reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman introduces the bill in his own right.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I wish to say, and the chairman of the Committee on Territories, [Mr. MULDROW,] whom I see in his place, will bear me out in saying, that a similar bill to the one I now offer has been ordered by the committee to be reported by Mr. FROST, of Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman introduces the bill in his own right, and that it has received the assent of the Committee on Territories.

Mr. MAGINNIS. It has.

No objection being made, the bill (H. R. No. 2274) concerning the Legislative Assembly of Montana was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provisions of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1878, pertaining to government in the Territories, shall not be so construed as to impair or shorten the tenure of office of any member of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana until the redistricting and reapportionment of such Territory as is therein provided, nor until at the next regular election thereafter the twelve members of the council and twenty-four members of the house of representatives of such Territory shall have been elected and their term of office begun; and if in any case the reapportionment and redistricting of any Territory shall not be done by the Legislative Assembly thereof, it shall be the duty of the governor of such Territory, before the next general election to be held in such Territory, to divide such Territory into proper council and representative districts, upon the basis of the census of A. D. 1880.

Mr. CONGER. I do not object to this bill, because I wish the gentleman from Montana to have an opportunity to show why the general law of the land in regard to the Territories should be set aside in regard to this particular Territory.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I will do that. The appropriation bill passed by last Congress reduces the number of the Legislatures of the different Territories in terms "after the next session." The Legislature of Montana failed to agree upon a reapportionment and reductions at such "next session," and consequently several respectable local lawyers are of the opinion that the legislative term of the members thereof was in consequence of this failure shortened, and say that the Legislature of the Territory has expired without any provision for its reassembling, or for any new apportionment to be made. This bill is simply to remove that legal doubt, and further, as an enabling act, carrying out the intentions of Congress to reapportion the Territory. I do not myself believe that our Legislature has been abolished, or that Congress has the right to do so. At all events no such action was intended, and this bill will more clearly show that the law was not intended to interfere with the tenure of office of any member of our Legislature, and that the Legislature has not lapsed. That is all there is to it.

Mr. CONGER. It then gives additional power to the governor to apportion the Territory.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Only in case the Legislature fails to do it at its next session. The gentleman will see that this will be an additional incentive for the Legislatures to perform the duty imposed on them by Congress.

Mr. WHITE. I think that is right.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MAGINNIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill, as amended, was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE DETROIT RIVER.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to report back with amendments, from the Committee on Commerce, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 87) relating to a bridge across the Detroit River at or near Detroit, Michigan. It is unanimously recommended for passage by the committee.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas recent progress in the art has shown the practicability of constructing bridges having spans of five hundred feet, or possibly more: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and required to convene a board of officers of the Corps of Engineers of the Army, whose duty it shall be to inquire into and report whether, for railroad purposes, the river Detroit can be bridged at the city of Detroit, or within one mile above or below said city, in such manner as to accommodate the large trade and commerce crossing the river at that point, and without material or undue injury to the navigation of said river; a good and sufficient tug being always kept by the bridge-owners to assist any craft when required.

The amendment recommended by the committee was to insert after the word "bridged," in the seventh line, the words "or tunneled."

Mr. ACKLEN. Did this joint resolution come from the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. It did; and its passage is recommended by a unanimous vote of the committee. It only directs the Secretary of War to appoint a board of engineers to examine into the matter and report to Congress at its next session. It involves no expense whatever to the Government. It is a resolution desired by all parties.

Mr. ACKLEN. Will the gentleman explain the matter?

Mr. REAGAN. I will state that we have quite a number of bills and petitions before the Committee on Commerce having reference to the bridging or tunneling of the Detroit River. It is a subject of great interest, and this is simply a provision to have a board of United States engineers appointed to examine into the subject and report to Congress such information as they can obtain.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TOWNSEND] states that it is the unanimous report of the Committee on Commerce, and asks for its present consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. CONGER. This is a river running between the United States and Canada, and such questions arise which render it necessary to have an investigation. I think it very proper that a board of engineers should be appointed to make the investigation, so that the House may be informed upon the whole question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, then, is in advocacy of the joint resolution and not objecting to it?

Mr. CONGER. I have generally objected to this class of measures and I wished to give the reason why I did not do it in this case.

Mr. COX. I would like to know whether the international question has been considered?

Mr. REAGAN. That is not involved in this bill.

Mr. COX. How do you get the right to fix this bridge on the Canadian side of the river?

Mr. REAGAN. We do not do so; but those who build the bridge must obtain the consent of the Canadian government before it can be done. That is a matter for future consideration.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITE. Had we not better have the regular order?

Mr. ELAM. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BENNETT. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ELAM. I do not object to that.

GRASSHOPPER PLAGUE.

Mr. BENNETT. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report a bill extending the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands," approved March 3, 1877, until the 1st day of October, 1880.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill provides that all the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands," approved March 3, 1877, Statutes at Large, second session Forty-fourth Congress, page 405, chapter 127, shall be continued in full force and effect until the 1st day of October, 1880, when crops may be destroyed or seriously injured in manner stated in said act during the year 1879.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Dakota [Mr. BENNETT] is authorized by the Committee on Public Lands to report this bill for consideration at this time.

Mr. BENNETT. I am so instructed by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certain statutes are referred to in the bill which we do not understand from the simple reference.

Mr. SAPP. The act referred to is one for the relief of the grasshopper sufferers in the Northwest.

Mr. BENNETT. I ask that the Clerk read the original act which this bill proposes to continue in force.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be lawful for homestead and pre-emption settlers on the public lands or pre-emption settlers on Indian reservations where crops were destroyed or seriously injured by grasshoppers in the year 1877 to leave and be absent from said lands until the 1st day of October, 1878, under such rules and regulations as to proof of the same as the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall prescribe; and where such grasshoppers shall reappear in 1878 to the like destruction or injury of crops the right to leave and be absent as aforesaid shall continue to October 1, 1879; and during such absence no adverse rights shall attach to said lands, such settlers being allowed to resume and perfect their settlements as though no such absence had occurred.

SEC. 2. That the time for making final proof and payment by pre-emptors whose crops have been destroyed or injured as aforesaid is hereby extended for one year after the expiration of the term of absence provided for in the first section of this act; and all the rights and privileges extended by this act to homestead and pre-emption settlers shall apply to and include the settlers under an act entitled "An act to encourage the growth of timber on western prairies," approved March 3, 1873, and the acts amendatory thereof.

There being no objection the bill (H. R. No. 2275) was received, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. BENNETT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BENNETT. I have another report which I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to make to this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so many applications from members for recognition that he deems it but just to recognize a member for only one proposition.

Mr. WHITE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ACKLEN. I trust the gentleman will not insist upon his demand for the regular order. There is no necessity for hurry this morning; gentlemen will filibuster the morning hour out any way.

Mr. WHITE. I insist upon the call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the morning hour will now begin at seventeen minutes before one o'clock. The first business in order is the business pending at the close of the morning hour on Thursday last, being the bill reported by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] from the Committee on Civil Service Reform.

CONTRIBUTIONS FOR POLITICAL PURPOSES.

The bill (H. R. No. 2266) to prohibit Federal officers, claimants, and contractors from making contributions for political purposes was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall not be lawful for any officer, clerk, or employé of the Government of the United States to contribute or pay to any committee or person, or into any fund, any money, property, or other valuable for any political purpose whatsoever, or to pay any assessment or percentage upon the income or emoluments of his salary or compensation for any political purpose, or give, lend, advance, or pay any money, property, or valuable thing with the intent, assent, permission, knowledge, or understanding that the same may be applied to such purpose; and any of said officers, clerks, or employés who shall violate any of the provisions of this section shall be immediately dismissed from the office, clerkship, or employment which they may hold.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of each of the heads of Departments of the Federal Government to issue and keep posted a standing order in their respective Departments prohibiting the officers, clerks, and employés in said Departments from violating any of the provisions of the first section of this act.

SEC. 3. That it shall not be lawful for any head of Department or other superior officer of the Federal Government to collect or permit or allow any other person to collect or receive from any officer, clerk, or employé in his Department or under his supervision any assessment, percentage, contribution, gift, loan, or advance of any money, property, or other valuable thing with the knowledge, intent, understanding, or permission that the same shall, or may be, used for any political purpose; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section or any head of Department who shall fail or refuse to promulgate the order as mentioned in the second section of this act or who shall fail or refuse to dismiss from office or employment any officer, clerk, or employé in his Department who shall violate any of the provisions of the first section of this act on the same coming to his knowledge shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment for a period of not less than one month nor more than six months, and in the discretion of the court by a fine of not more than $5,000.

SEC. 4. That any person having a contract with the United States or any officer thereof or who shall have had such contract within three months previous, or who shall have such contract within three months thereafter, who shall pay or contribute either directly or indirectly any money, property, or other valuable thing for any political purpose shall be deemed to have forfeited all rights and the same shall thereby be rendered null and void; and all officers of the Government are hereby prohibited from executing any contract with any party so offending, and that any person having any pending claim against the United States or before any Department, or officer of the Government thereof who shall pay or contribute any money, property, or other valuable thing for any political purpose shall thereby forfeit said claim and all right to recover or receive anything on the same.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] to lay the bill upon the table, pending the demand made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] for the previous question.

Mr. WHITE. I will withdraw that motion for the present.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table the bill of the House No. 2251, returned from the Senate with amendments, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and, with the amendments of the Senate, be printed.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 2251) making appropriations for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, together with the Senate amendments thereto, was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and, with the Senate amendments, ordered to be printed.

CONTRIBUTIONS FOR POLITICAL PURPOSES.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is upon the demand for the previous question upon the bill (H. R. No. 2266) to prohibit Federal officers, claimants, and contractors from making contributions for political purposes.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I am willing that this bill shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. There are some gentlemen on the other side who desire to debate it, and I have no objection, on condition that after reasonable debate gentlemen will remain in their places and not break up a quorum.

Mr. CONGER. I object to that kind of remark; it is impertinent to this side of the House. Let the gentleman go on with his business.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I am very loath to say a word to offend gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman makes propositions that are insulting to this side of the House he must not expect any leniency from us at least.

Mr. COX. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on seconding the demand for the previous question.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 70, noes 1.

Mr. CONGER. No quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOSTETLER and Mr. CONGER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 66, noes none.

Mr. CONGER. No quorum has voted.

Mr. COX. I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 53, noes 42.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll; when the following-named members failed to answer to their names:

Mr. WAIT. My colleague, Mr. HAWLEY, is detained from the House, being in attendance on a committee of conference, of which he is a member.

Mr. BAKER. My colleague, Mr. CALKINS, is absent from the House by reason of sickness, and is paired with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. KNOTT.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BAKER. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not. The question recurs on seconding the demand for the previous question as made by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOSTETLER.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CONGER. Has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has. There are two bills coming over as unfinished business, from different avenues of procedure in the House, and they will come up for consideration in the order which the House may determine. One is the bill known as the pleuro-pneumonia cattle bill; the other is the bill in relation to the manner of drawing United States jurors. Whichever bill shall first come up as unfinished business, the other will immediately follow on the disposal of said first bill; and the House can determine which bill it desires to give preference.

Mr. McGOWAN. I call up the special order, the bill (H. R. No. 1378) known as the pleuro-pneumonia bill. I had the floor on that bill about a week ago, and I desire to make some remarks on it.

Mr. WISE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill No. 681, and to have it referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. WHITE. I hope that unanimous consent will be given to my colleague [Mr. WISE] for the purpose he has indicated.

Mr. CONGER. Let this question of precedence between the two measures coming over as unfinished business be determined first.

RESERVE OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. BUCKNER. I rise to make a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on Banking and Currency to offer a substitute for House bill No. 931 requiring the reserve of national-banking associations to be kept in the standard gold and silver coins of the United States in lieu of lawful money. I ask that the substitute may be printed and recommitted to the committee.

Mr. CONGER. Is that a privileged question?

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Banking and Currency has the right to report at any time.

Mr. CONGER. I submit that the report of a committee having the right to report at any time cannot take precedence of a special order of this House.

The SPEAKER. Why not?

Mr. CONGER. There is a special order of the House from day to day until disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The bill does not lose its place, but the rule distinctly says that the Committee on Banking and Currency shall have a right to report at any time.

Mr. CONGER. There is no doubt of that, but they may report at any time when it is proper for a committee to report.

The SPEAKER. Then there would not be any time when they could report except under the call of the committees under a different rule. The rule says that they may report at any time.

Mr. CONGER. Then they might interrupt a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. They could hardly interrupt a call of the House. That generally takes place when there is no quorum present and business in consequence is interrupted.

Mr. CONGER. They might interrupt a roll-call.

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. CONGER. Then there are points at which they could not report at any time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that this is one of those points nor times.

Mr. CONGER. I wanted to have the opinion of the Chair on that point.

The SPEAKER. If they have a right to report at any time they must have a right to report after the morning hour.

The bill (H. R. No. 2276) was read a first and second time, and recommitted to the committee.

EXPENSES OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. BUCKNER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the sum of $2,000, set apart from the contingent fund of the House, by resolution of June 4, 1879, to defray the expenses of the Committee on Banking and Currency in making the investigation ordered by said resolution, shall be paid by the Clerk of the House out of the contingent fund to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, whose receipt to the Clerk shall be a good and sufficient voucher therefor in the settlement of the accounts of said Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms shall disburse the said sum of $2,000 on vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee, and he shall as soon thereafter as practicable make report in writing to the House of the manner in which the sums thus paid to him have been expended, accompanied by vouchers in detail, which report and vouchers, when examined and approved by the Committee of Accounts of the House, shall be deemed a sufficient settlement of his accountability for the money thus paid to him, and any unexpended balance remaining in the hands of the Sergeant-at-Arms after such settlement shall be paid by him into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the fund for which it was appropriated.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WISE. I desire to introduce a bill.

Mr. CONGER. I object, and call for the regular order.

Mr. McGOWAN. I call up the unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that the member in charge of the jurors' bill does not antagonize this motion, as he is not in his seat, and this bill, the bill which the gentleman from Michigan desires to call up, comes up as the unfinished business in consequence of there being no contention about it.

Mr. McGOWAN. Before proceeding I will yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LAPHAM,] who desires to make some reports.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman can hardly yield for that purpose now, as other requests of like character have been just refused.

Mr. LAPHAM. It will take but a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York hereafter whenever he can. There are several gentlemen who have applied to the Chair for recognition, and the Chair will recognize them when there is opportunity.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is there an objection to an understanding that the remainder of to-day's session shall be for debate only?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the House desires to vote upon this bill to-day.

Mr. GARFIELD. I doubt very much whether there is a quorum here.

The SPEAKER. The understanding was that there would only be about one hour longer occupied in debate.

Mr. McGOWAN. I think the House can dispose of the bill very soon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Michigan to state when he last sought the floor that not more than one hour would be occupied in debate.

Mr. McGOWAN. That is correct.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not wish to have this debate limited so as to prevent me from having an opportunity to make some observations on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McGOWAN] is entitled to the floor. After he has concluded the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.]

EXCUSED FROM COMMITTEE SERVICE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. ROBINSON, asks to be excused from further service on the special committee appointed to investigate the election in Cincinnati. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and will appoint in place of Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, the gentleman from New York, Mr. MCCOOK.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Unanimous consent was given for the withdrawal of papers as follows:

To Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, in the claim of Ellen Radner, no adverse report; and

To Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, in the claim of John D. Ryan; which were ordered to be referred to the Committee of Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LADD, for ten days, on account of sickness;

To Mr. O'REILLY, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. HALL, indefinitely, on account of important business;

To Mr. LEWIS, for ten days, on account of serious sickness in his family;

To Mr. FRYE, for one week from Tuesday next; and

To Mr. CABELL, indefinitely, on account of severe indisposition.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. COFFROTH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 595) to amend an act for the relief of Joseph B. Collins, approved March 3, 1879.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois, from the same committee, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 95) to pay Patrick Doran for services as messenger, House of Representatives.

CATTLE DISEASES.

The SPEAKER. The House now resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1378) to prevent the exportation of diseased cattle and the spread of infectious or contagious diseases among domestic animals, upon which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McGOWAN] is entitled to the floor for one hour.

Mr. McGOWAN. So much time has elapsed, Mr. Speaker, since the discussion of this bill was interrupted by other business, that I ask the attention of the House for a moment while I refer briefly to the several provisions of the bill before I enter upon my argument.

The first section of the bill provides that no railroad company or any other transportation company shall carry along its route or along interstate lines of travel any cattle having contagious or infectious diseases.

The second section prescribes the punishment for a violation of any of the provisions of the preceding section.

Section 3 provides simply how and where the violation of section 1 shall be prosecuted, and directs that the United States district attorneys shall take charge of the prosecutions for violations of the provisions of this act.

Section 4 provides that for the purpose of preventing violations of this act it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Agriculture to select suitable localities on all lines of communication where he has information that the disease among cattle is prevailing, and to appoint inspectors to be known and designated as inspectors of live cattle, whose duty it shall be to inspect all cattle arriving at such points or passing through them, or from one State into another, from one State into a Territory, or from any State into the District of Columbia. The section also provides that the number of such inspectors shall be limited to three in any one State, and further provides that the Commissioner of Agriculture may appoint three skilled veterinary practitioners for special duty.

The fifth section provides that the Commissioner of Agriculture shall make all necessary rules and regulations to govern such inspections, to the end that the transportation from one State to another of live cattle afflicted with contagious or infectious diseases may be prevented.

The sixth section prescribes the salaries or per diem of these inspectors; the ordinary inspectors to be paid not exceeding $4 per day, and the skilled veterinary surgeons to be paid not exceeding $10 per day.

Sections 7, 8, and 9 of the bill make provisions for the prevention of the exportation of diseased cattle, and prescribes that it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to establish regulations for that purpose. Of these three sections I shall have nothing to say.

Section 10 provides that when any infectious or contagious disease affecting domestic animals, especially the disease known as pleuro-pneumonia, shall be brought into or break out in the District of Columbia, it shall be the duty of the commissioners of said District to take measures to suppress the same promptly and to prevent the same from spreading; and makes provision as to how the commissioners shall proceed for the purpose of preventing the spread of the disease in the District.

Section 11 provides that nothing in this act shall be so construed as to supersede or impair any sanitary or quarantine law of any State. And section 12 provides that the act shall take effect from and after its passage.

Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to furnish the machinery for an external and interstate quarantine. The object of this quarantine is to prevent the importation and spread of contagious and infectious diseases among cattle. The measure is aimed largely at the disease known as pleuro-pneumonia. I shall be pardoned for a brief reference to the history and treatment of this disorder, as introductory to any discussion of the bill. It is purely a contagious disease and does not have its origin in this country. Originating on the vast plains, or steppes, of Asia, it has spread over nearly the whole of Europe, including the British islands. It reached England in 1842, possibly as early as 1839. In 1858 it was introduced into Australia by a single cow shipped from England, and spread through the vast herds of that island until it has come to be impossible to stamp it out without killing all the cattle.

It is supposed to have reached this country first in 1843. A cow imported from Holland brought the disease to Brooklyn, and from that time, Dr. Law says, it has never been entirely absent from our soil. It has prevailed in at least eight of the States and in the District of Columbia. From Brooklyn it is supposed to have spread to New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, and Connecticut. Massachusetts was also afflicted with it in 1859 as an importation from Holland.

No disease among cattle has ever been so fatal or so difficult to control. After half a century of the most intelligent study and experience no specific has been found for its cure or prevention. Nothing better is offered than stamping it out by killing the diseased and infected animals. England, from 1842 to 1869, lost from this disease 5,549,780 head of cattle, worth $400,000,000, and her losses since are estimated at $100,000,000 more, making, in thirty-six years, a loss of $500,000,000. This was the loss from deaths alone. Add to this the loss from the deteriorated health of those that sickened but did not die, the loss from caring for the sick, and the interruption of trade, and the sum swells into much vaster proportions. Australia, France, Russia, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and Switzerland have each suffered untold losses by this terrible plague. But the experience of all these countries leads to but one conclusion. That conclusion is now corroborated by our own experience. The only remedy is to kill.

The European countries of Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holstein, Oldenburgh, and Switzerland adopted this remedy, and to-day are comparatively free from the disorder. Australia allowed it to spread until to exterminate it by killing the diseased and the exposed was nearly equivalent to killing all the cattle on that vast island continent. In that country and parts of Russia the cattle roam in great herds over immense unfenced plains. When the plague once got a foothold it spread so rapidly and so many places, as well as so many cattle became infected, that it was impossible to stamp it out, and in those countries to-day the pleuro-pneumonia has a permanent residence. In our own country the exterminating theory has been applied with success in Massachusetts and Connecticut, and at this hour is being successfully applied in New York.

A brief allusion to the experience of Massachusetts in dealing with the plague will be interesting and valuable in this connection. The old Commonwealth never does things by the halves and seldom bunglingly. In April, 1860, the Legislature, finding that the disease prevailed in some portions of the State, enacted that the governor should appoint three commissioners who should visit without delay the places where the disease was known or suspected to exist, and should have full power to cause all cattle belonging to the herds in which the disease had appeared to be forthwith killed and buried, and the premises where such cattle had been kept cleansed and purified. The cattle were appraised at a fair market value and paid for out of the treasury of the Commonwealth. Persons disregarding the orders or directions of the commissioners were to be fined not exceeding $500. Ten thousand dollars were appropriated, and the commissioners went to work.

They did exactly what the law required of them. They ascertained the affected herds, estimated their market value, and then killed them. In less than two months the money appropriated had been expended, and the governor, at the request of the commissioners, called an extra session of the Legislature. Before a joint committee of the senate and house of this Legislature the commissioners appeared and demanded more money and enlarged powers. Upon this they were met by those disbelieving in the theory of extermination. The opposition was led by so able and distinguished a gentleman as the late Governor Andrews. Testimony was taken and arguments made before the committee. The learned and eloquent gentleman [Dr. LORING] who to-day so ably represents the sixth Massachusetts district upon this floor was a member of that commission, and made a speech before the committee which effectually silenced all objections. He there reviewed the history of the disease, stated the efforts that had been made to treat it and prevent its spread, and showed so conclusively that killing was the only effective remedy that all opposition went down before him. The Legislature gave the commissioners what they asked, and they proceeded with the work of extermination until they stamped out the disease, and since 1861 or 1862 there has not been a single case in the State.

Connecticut, I believe, has been equally successful in stamping out the disease among her herds.

I have given this brief history of pleuro-pneumonia and its treatment that we may more intelligently discuss the provisions of this bill, which now proposes to deal with it as a national question.

The supposed necessity for present legislation is embraced in statements that the disease is now prevailing in Virginia, Maryland, the District of Columbia, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and probably other places. It is very generally believed that it has never found a lodgment west of the Allegheny Mountains. Yet there was some evidence last winter tending to show that it had obtained a foothold in Ohio.

The present extent of the plague in the States is not well known. But from what I have said of the nature of the disease and the sad havoc it has produced in other countries, and to considerable extent in our own, it becomes apparent that the subject is a most important one to the whole country and should receive thoughtful consideration at the hands of Congress.

It is estimated that we have in this country forty millions of cattle. England in struggling with pleuro-pneumonia during a period of less than forty years, and with only six million head of cattle, lost $500,000,000 by death alone. At the same rate our loss would have been more than $3,000,000,000.

Many of the conditions which have made it so difficult to control the disease in Australia and Russia exist on our western prairies. The great herds and the wide extent of unfenced pasturage in many of our western States and Territories would make it impossible to eradicate it should it once get a hold there. This would strike down one of the great commercial interests of the country, effectually cut off our export trade in meat and live cattle, which during the last year amounted to many millions of dollars, endanger the supply of wholesome meat for food, greatly increase the expense of maintaining the Army, and financially ruin tens of thousands of good citizens.

It will be a black day for our country when pleuro-pneumonia goes west of the Alleghanies. Heretofore the constant tide of shipment has been from the West to the East. To this, no doubt, we owe our immunity from the plague in our great western herds. But the quality of the western cattle must be kept up and improved. Blooded stock is constantly sent there for that purpose. A single infected animal turned loose on the Illinois prairies would do mischief that years of time and millions of treasure could not undo. Admitting, then, as I do, the tremendous importance of the subject, I am brought, as we all are, at once to face the inquiry: What can Congress do in the premises? I answer frankly, something, but not all the subject demands.

I have no doubt but under the power which Congress has to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States we may do something to prevent the importation and spread of contagious diseases both among persons and animals. As to prohibiting the importation of disease, there is no doubt of the complete and ample powers of the General Government. But when contagions and epidemics have once found a lodgment in the States, the power to prevent their spread is not so clear. The exercise of national jurisdiction for such a purpose can only be along interstate lines and upon interstate commerce and travel. To that extent, no doubt, the jurisdiction is complete. The simple words of the Constitution, in section 8 of article 1, are:

> The Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes.

The Supreme Court say, in Gibbons vs. Ogden, 9 Wheat., that "this power, like all others vested in Congress, is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution." The bill before us seeks its power wholly under this section. I believe the Congress has power to enforce what is sought by its provisions, and I am in full sympathy with its objects. But there are some things in the bill to which I object, and, if retained, I shall feel compelled to vote against the whole measure. I object to it first, because it puts too great power and discretion into the hands of a single individual; second, because the inspectors are too few in number and to be selected only from the residents of the localities where they are to act; third, because section 11 of the bill subordinates the national authority to State and local dictation.

As to my first objection. For the first time in the history of the country it is proposed to use the power which Congress has over internal commerce for sanitary purposes. It is provided that the Commissioner of Agriculture shall select suitable localities on all lines of railroad, river, or canal interstate communication that he may have information the disease exists, and appoint inspectors to inspect all live cattle received at such localities for shipment, or passing through the same in transitu from one State to another, or from any State into the District of Columbia. And the Commissioner shall prescribe the duties of such inspectors, and make all needful rules and regulations to govern them, to the end that the transportation of cattle affected with contagious or infectious diseases may be prevented. Here is a tremendous power. An indiscreet use of it might ruin the cattle trade of the country. The Commissioner is to act upon information. What is his information to be? Simply that the disease exists? Who is to furnish this information? The bill is silent. Not the inspectors, for they are only to be appointed after the information has been received. But the information is to be that the disease exists. What disease? Any contagious or infectious disease. He may quarantine against the cowitch as well as the pleuro-pneumonia. In this country there are not many experts in pleuro-pneumonia. It is often mistaken for ordinary chest disorders, and a common lung fever, which is not contagious, is frequently thought to be this contagious disorder. The Commissioner of Agriculture, even should he be an expert, cannot make these examinations himself. He must then rely for the information necessary to put the machinery of the act in operation upon common rumor and such aid as he can get from the three special veterinary practitioners which he is allowed to appoint. The commercial interests of the country are jealous of any interference with trade. Even quarantine and health laws looking to the preservation of the lives of the people are a prolific source of trouble and complaint.

To illustrate the possible practical workings of the bill in this regard let us suppose that information reaches the Commissioner that pleuro-pneumonia has broken out among the cattle west of Chicago. He promptly, as his duty would be, sends his inspectors to Chicago with instructions to examine all the cattle coming in there for shipment east, and detain all those infected or diseased or so exposed as likely to come down at some future time with the disease. What do gentlemen suppose would be the instant result? Why, the whole shipping interest, which is a powerful one at Chicago, would be on the alert. The "information" would be sifted. Veterinarians would be called to examine matters. Shrewd, keen men who buy and sell cattle to make money, and not to give reputation to a Commissioner of Agriculture or to point a moral by patriotic self-denial, would contest the authority and the methods adopted at every step. And if it should prove in this first application of the new law that the information was not correct, that the cattle did not have pleuro-pneumonia at all, in fact had no contagious disease, that "a heifer exposed to a rain-storm had sickened from a cold and died of common pneumonia," then until the law should be amended and recast it would be a dead letter.

Again, the power that permits the General Government to follow commerce from State to State and regulate its transportation, is nearly allied to certain powers expressly belonging to the States. The line is not always clearly drawn, and the Supreme Court have from time to time expressed their embarrassment in settling questions which border upon it. Here troublesome questions would arise. In short, this bill imposes some of the most difficult and delicate duties ever laid upon an officer by Congress. Without the slightest reference to the qualifications or want of qualifications of any official, it has struck me that they should not be imposed upon any one man. It is due to the official, and especially due to the objects sought by this proposed legislation. In a multitude of counsel there is safety. There should at least be a board of three, and so constituted that the law officers of the Government might be consulted. And at the proper time I shall offer an amendment looking to that end.

My second objection to the bill is that the inspectors provided for are too few in number, and are to be selected from the residents of the localities where they are to act. The absurdity of limiting the number appointed in any one State to three will be sufficiently apparent by a single illustration.

In the Chicago Tribune for the 16th instant I find the statement that, during the year ending January 1, 1879, there was brought into the city of Chicago 1,083,000 head of cattle. This would be an average of nearly three thousand head a day for every day in the year, Sundays included. Should all the inspectors allowed to a State be engaged in the inspection at this one point, working ten hours a day and giving ten minutes to each head of cattle, it would take them forty-nine years and sixty-five days to inspect the shipments of a single year. I seriously suggest that the later inspections in such case might have a flavor of spoiled meat.

Suppose for an instant that the disease should generally prevail throughout the State of New York. How could any three men inspect the cattle passing over the various interstate lines of travel and transportation running into and through that great State? To ask the question suggests the answer. It would be impossible. The attempt would result in a farce, and the certificates granted would not be worth the paper they were written upon.

Again, I believe it to be a serious mistake to make it obligatory that the inspectors should be chosen from the locality where they are to act. The position will be one of great responsibility, requiring nerve, and firmness, and unflinching integrity. The pressure to secure certificates of soundness will be very great. Temptations to fraud and wrong-doing will surround the inspector on all sides. Now, add to the necessary difficulties of such a position the inducements that would be urged upon a resident, the claims of friendship, the temptation to save the trade of his home city, his own business interests, and we have done much to make the law inefficient by weakening the instrument which is to execute it. Aside from these considerations, it may not always be possible to secure men having the necessary knowledge and experience to perform such duties, at the localities where they are to be performed.

Hence, when the proper section is reached, I shall propose an amendment leaving the number of inspectors and the place from whence chosen entirely at the discretion of the appointing power; also, changing their pay from four to six dollars per day.

My last serious objection to the bill is found in section 11, which reads as follows:

> That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to supersede or impair any sanitary or quarantine law of any State.

Do my colleagues of the committee who framed and present this bill believe they have proposed to Congress a constitutional measure? Does the Constitution confer upon Congress the jurisdiction assumed in the bill? Can the General Government legally take charge of the commerce passing over interstate lines and make all needful rules to regulate the same? Certainly the honorable and learned gentleman having charge of this bill believes this or the measure would not be here for action. Then if Congress has jurisdiction over the subject why is it sought here to subordinate that power to State and local dictation? There can be but one answer. It is simply another symptom of the malady known as State rights. This disorder is becoming more prevalent and quite as dangerous among our brethren on the other side of the House as the pleuro-pneumonia among cattle. It crops out everywhere. It is both contagious and infectious. Many a bright democrat has been sent to this corral with a clean bill of political health, when lo! in a few short weeks he was down with the distemper.

A few years ago this miserable plague broke out into a brisk epidemic, and it became necessary to apply heroic remedies. It was thought for a while that, like Massachusetts with the cattle plague, the thing had been fairly stamped out. But this was a delusion. A few cases again appeared here and there about the country, but the doctors said they were sporadic. There was no danger. The thing was dead. It never could spread again. To flourish, it required the poisoned atmosphere of slavery, and that had been purified by the thunders of war. Here was our grand mistake. We should have extended the quarantine. But we did not, and again the plague is upon us. It creeps in everywhere; puts its mark upon the offspring of every committee in the House. We think it might have spared the Agricultural Committee, but it did not; here is our baby, and he has it too; has it bad, and must die unless purged of the disorder. Better treat him as the Massachusetts commission did the diseased cows—shoot him on the spot, slash his hide with sharp knives, and bury him deep in the earth.

The tendency of a large part of the legislation proposed by the majority in Congress is to limit and cripple the national power. The General Government is viewed in the light of an alien power, constantly threatening the liberties of the people.

When it is proposed to pass laws to sustain the Army and Navy, to maintain the arsenals, and guard the elections of members of Congress, why should the Representatives from any State put out their hands as though an enemy were to be held at bay? My own State of Michigan has had an existence for forty-two years, has now a population of nearly two millions, has been steadily prosperous, is settled with an intelligent and thoughtful people, has an able Legislature in session every two years, is surrounded with great lakes which are national highways, and is bordered on one side by a foreign state; yet my people have never complained of usurpations on the part of the General Government. We have lived under the same laws with South Carolina and Mississippi and have not felt ourselves abused.

There is no desire in Michigan that the national wings should be clipped. No fear that we shall be smothered by the great bird. Within the powers reserved to the States we have all the liberty of action and of legislation that we desire. And acting strictly within those powers we have built up the finest school system in the world, where the poorest child in the State may go from the lowest primary, step by step, through all the grades until he is graduated from a university which is second to none on this continent. And this without money and without price. The State cares for her indigent and pauper children, making them her own wards, and at her own expense training them into useful citizens. It furnishes elegant homes and bountiful care for all the unfortunate ones, and safe and economical prisons for the criminals. We have done all this without ever dreaming that we were liable to be trampled upon by a military despotism having its head centre in Washington. I venture to say that no man in Michigan ever thought his liberties were menaced, or in the slightest degree endangered by the National Government. Is it possible that all this time we have been so stupid that we have been oppressed by a dangerous and aggressive power and did not know it? If this be true, we are surrounded by stupid neighbors. Ohio, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Iowa have not thought to complain of the "iron heel." Let us ask a kind Providence to pass that kind of stupidity around. The great mass of the American people believe that the United States is a nation, clothed with full powers to enforce its laws, and they never will consent to subordinate those powers to the law of any State.

What does this section mean in this bill? Simply this, that any State may nullify the national law at its option. If the law interferes, or is supposed to interfere, with the cattle trade of Illinois, then Illinois enacts a law which contravenes this, and with impunity pours her diseased cattle across the continent. Attempting to act under one of the plain provisions of the Constitution, we stop, and, obsequiously bowing to State sovereignty, say "by your leave." For one, I am not quite ready for that yet; and if I must choose between plagues, I simply say I prefer the cattle plague.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of some enactment by Congress to aid in suppressing and controlling contagious and infectious diseases among domestic animals, and especially this dangerous cattle plague. At the same time I am fully conscious that the real and effectual remedy rests with the States and municipalities. No national law can authorize the condemnation and slaughter of diseased animals. This power belongs to the States, and if they would have complete protection they must exercise it. For instance, had the State of Virginia, the first of last month, while her Legislature was in session, provided a small appropriation and a commission with the necessary powers there would not to-day be a single case of the disease within her borders. However, instead of doing that the Legislature sends here a petition asking that Congress will enact laws to "stamp out" the plague in that "sovereign State." What has come over the proud Old Dominion that she invites this invasion of her sacred soil? No wicked, republican, centralizing Legislature ever equaled that. It brings a sharp contrast between the "Mother of Presidents" and the "Old Bay State." The one took care of herself, as she usually does, made her own laws, and with her own officers "stamped out" the disease, and then paid the bills. The other, finding one of her great industries threatened, looks languidly across the Potomac, asks the General Government to take care of her, and then folds her hands and waits.

No, Mr. Speaker, Congress has no power to "stamp out" contagion, and what is proposed in this bill is probably the extent of its jurisdiction in the direction of protection. It can only aid in preventing its spread. Whether the vast interests in live stock in this country shall be injured, or eventually ruined, rests with the individual States. Should Virginia do nothing to stop the plague, and it should come to prevail throughout that State, no interstate national quarantine would, or possibly could, protect the surrounding States.

In the hope that the several States will see their interests and responsibilities in this matter, I think it best that this bill, modified as I propose, should pass. It is not strictly a pleuro-pneumonia bill. It furnishes the machinery to guard against the spread of any contagious disorder. It will only be put in operation when the danger is imminent and will cost nothing at other times. By this means at least a portion of the $16,000,000 to $20,000,000 lost every year by contagious diseases may be saved.

I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] who has charge of this bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Agriculture to move that the bill be recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

JURORS IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

The SPEAKER. The next bill coming up as unfinished business is the bill (S. No. 375) in relation to juries and to repeal sections 801, 820, 821, and part of 800 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I am not disposed to press this bill to-day, inasmuch as after a conference with some gentlemen on the other side of the House I think it probable that we can reach a vote on the bill next Monday, or at the farthest on Tuesday. I think it is understood, after consultation among gentlemen on the other side, that they will make no further opposition in the form of dilatory motions; at least I hope that we can obtain a vote on the measure. I do not desire, however, to yield the precedence which the bill now has over anything else on the Speaker's table. I am willing, therefore, to yield for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] state that there is any understanding as to what shall be done in the future with regard to this bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman merely expresses a hope.

Mr. HERBERT. I simply stated that in view of conversations with gentlemen on the other side of the House I hoped that the opposition would be withdrawn. But no gentleman has undertaken to bind the republican party, or gentlemen on the other side, to anything of that kind.

Mr. CONGER. I should presume not.

ESTATE OF HENRY CONARD.

Mr. WISE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. No. 681) for the relief of the estate of Henry Conard be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

ROBERT ERWIN.

Mr. LAPHAM, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on the Judiciary a bill (H. R. No. 385) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of Robert Erwin;" which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DODDRIDGE & DAVIS.

Mr. UPSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2277) for the relief of Doddridge & Davis, bankers, Corpus Christi, Texas, for loss of quartermaster's check; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

POST-ROUTES.

Mr. COOK. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 2263) supplemental to the act to establish post-routes be taken from the Speaker's table and the amendments of the Senate concurred in. The bill contains no legislation whatever, except the establishment of star routes.

There being no objection, the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. COOK moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FARMERS AND MERCHANTS' BANK, PARIS, TEXAS.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table for action at this time Senate bill No. 625, authorizing the granting of a duplicate draft. The bill has passed the Senate unanimously upon the unanimous report of the Committee on Claims of that body.

The bill (S. No. 625) for the relief of the Farmers and Merchants' Bank, Paris, Texas, was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to cause the pension agent at Knoxville, Tennessee, to issue and deliver to the Farmers and Merchants' Bank of Paris, Texas, a duplicate draft of No. 110,309, dated March 13, 1879, drawn by Daniel T. Boynton, as United States pension agent at Knoxville, Tennessee, on the United States assistant treasurer at New York, for the sum of $1,159.60, in favor of Minerva A. Davis, and by her indorsed to said bank; which duplicate draft is directed to be issued in lieu of the original draft as herein described, and which was mailed by said bank on the 25th day of March, 1879, from Paris, Texas, to Donnell, Lawson & Co., of New York, and which was lost in transmission. But the Secretary of the Interior is to be satisfied that the same has not been paid, and the Farmers and Merchants' Bank is to give bond, with security approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, to hold the United States harmless against the payment of the original draft.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. MILLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN POWER.

Mr. BOWMAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2278) for extension of patent of John Power; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

MICHAEL GRANARY AND OTHERS.

Mr. ROBERTSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2279) for the relief of Michael Granery, Nicholas Wax, and Moliere Lange, of the State of Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LAND GRANT TO FLORIDA PARISHES, LOUISIANA.

Mr. ROBERTSON also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2280) relinquishing and granting to the Florida parishes, of the State of Louisiana, public lands as compensation to the people thereof for services in acquiring said territory from Spain in 1810; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 1734) to authorize the Secretary of War to use certain moneys appropriated by act of Congress approved March 3, 1879, "for the protection of the high sand-banks on the Chippewa River" in the completion and protection of improvements in and near the mouth of said Chippewa River.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 641) to grant additional rights to homestead settlers on public lands within railroad limits in the States of Missouri and Arkansas; and

An act (S. No. 697) to establish additional post-roads in the State of Florida.

E. TROISGROS.

Mr. ELLIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2281) for the relief of E. Troisgros, of New Orleans, Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

CHARLES CUTLER.

Mr. WARNER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2282) granting a pension to Charles Cutler; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JAMES H. RICE.

Mr. WARNER also, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 99) authorizing the President to place the name of James H. Rice on the retired list with the rank of captain; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRINTING REPORT OF SILVER COMMISSION.

Mr. WARNER also submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 5,000 additional copies of the first and second parts of the report of the silver commission be printed for the use of the members of the House.

ABIGAIL DEITZ.

Mr. WILLIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2283) granting a pension to Mrs. Abigail Deitz; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

DR. C. W. BRINK.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution (S. R. No. 30) for the relief of Dr. C. W. Brink, bearer of dispatches from the United States minister at Mexico, in 1809, be taken from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time.

Mr. COX. The House Committee on Foreign Affairs has reported a bill similar to this Senate bill.

Mr. NICHOLLS. It simply proposes to pay this man, as bearer of dispatches for General Rosecrans, United States minister to Mexico in 1869.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that Dr. C.W. Brink be paid, for compensation and expenses as bearer of dispatches from the United States minister at Mexico in 1869, $552.69, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. NICHOLLS. The payment of this money is recommended by the Secretary of State, Mr. Evarts, whose letter is with the papers.

Mr. CONGER. I do not object to immediate action on this bill because I know that a committee of this House in a former Congress examined the matter fully and made a report on the subject.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. NICHOLLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FERDON. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill.

Mr. WEAVER. I dislike to enter objection to the introduction of bills; but I hope these bills are not offered at this time with the view of adjourning over till Tuesday. If so, I should have to enter objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot say what may be the motive.

Mr. WEAVER. I make the remark for the benefit of members.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED ORDNANCE.

Mr. FERDON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2284) donating condemned cannon and balls to the Wayne Monumental Association; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

GEORGE W. WALKER.

Mr. LOUNSBERY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2285) for the relief of George W. Walker; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

INVESTIGATION OF EXODUS FROM SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to offer for action at this time the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a select committee of five members, with power to sit during the recess or vacation, to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer and clerk; and that said committee be authorized and directed to investigate and report to this House at an early day in the regular session the cause and effect of the exodus or unusual emigration of citizens of the State of Mississippi and other States of the South to the State of Kansas and other States of the West; and the expenses necessarily incurred in the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. GOODE. This matter is already pending before a committee of the House; and I must object to the resolution.

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. There is objection to the introduction of the resolution.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WASHBURN for the remainder of the present session after Wednesday next.

CLAIM OF ROBERT OTIS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the claim of Robert Otis, administrator of the estate of Roger A. Hiern, deceased; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] that the House adjourn.

Mr. CLYMER. I withdraw the motion.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS IN MISSOURI AND ARKANSAS.

Mr. CONVERSE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. No. 641) to grant additional rights to homestead settlers on public lands within railroad limits in the States of Missouri and Arkansas be taken from the Speaker's table for reference to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and passed the bill (S. No. 669) to remove the political disabilities of James F. Harrison, of Virginia.

The bill was read.

Mr. CONGER. Let the petition be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA, March 19, 1879.

To the Congress of the United States:

I respectfully request that my political disabilities be removed. I resigned my commission as surgeon in the United States Navy in 1861 and entered the Confederate States service, which I believe brings my case within the influence, &c., of the fourteenth amendment.

I am, very respectfully,

JAMES F. HARRISON, M. D.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be considered as read a first and second time, and the question will be on ordering it to a third reading.

Mr. CONGER. I observe that this petitioner speaks of believing that his case is "within the influence of the fourteenth amendment." He does not seem to admit unequivocally that his case comes within the constitutional provision.

The SPEAKER. The intention is clear.

Mr. CONGER. He is an educated man, and ought to know whether he is subject to disabilities under the Constitution, or whether it is a mere question of "influence." I like to see a clear, positive statement from men who come here to ask pardon for their crimes.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The petition is a positive statement of facts. This gentleman is not a lawyer, therefore he merely says that he believes his case comes within the disqualifying provision, and he asks Congress to remove his disabilities. I know that my friend from Michigan is always gracious when a gentleman makes a request of this kind.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed; two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

WILLIAM N. R. BEALL.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. No. 670) to remove the political disabilities of William N. R. Beall be taken from the Speaker's table for immediate action.

The bill was read.

Mr. CONGER. Let the petition be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, William N. R. Beall, a resident of the city of Saint Louis, State of Missouri, would respectfully state that he graduated at the United States Military Academy at West Point, New York, in the year 1848, and entered the United States Army as a brevet second lieutenant in the Fourth Regiment of Infantry in the same year, and continued in said service until the 21st August, 1861, when I resigned, having, at the date of my resignation, the rank of captain of cavalry. My resignation was duly accepted, and, so far as I know and believe, I am not indebted to the United States Government. For the above facts I would refer to the records of the Adjutant-General's Office of the United States Army. After the acceptance of my resignation I entered the service of the Confederate States as an officer in its army, and so continued, when not in prison, in actual service to the close of the war.

Wherefore I petition the removal of my political disabilities.

WM. N. R. BEALL.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, April 4, 1879.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

FONTAINE'S HYDRAULIC ENGINEERING.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table for immediate action the joint resolution (S. R. No. 6) accepting from Professor Edward Fontaine, of Louisiana, certain maps, drawings, and explanations of the same.

The sole object of this resolution is the acceptance from Professor Fontaine of plans and maps connected with the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River. The resolution was passed by the Senate yesterday without objection.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas Professor Edward Fontaine has exhibited certain maps and drawings, with full explanations of the same, of his improved methods of hydraulic engineering and controlling water-currents, which are believed to be valuable, which he proposes to present to the Government of the United States, on condition that they be printed: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the maps and drawings, with the explanations thereof, of Professor Edward Fontaine's improved methods of hydraulic engineering and controlling water-currents, which Professor Edward Fontaine proposes to give to the Government of the United States, on condition that they be printed, be, and the same hereby are, accepted.

SEC. 2. That the regular number of these maps and drawings, with the explanations, be printed in quarto form; and that 100 additional copies be printed for the use of Professor Fontaine.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that almost any gentleman who has prepared maps and drawings to illustrate some views of his own would give them to Congress if we would agree to print them in handsome form and give him one hundred copies. I do not know whether these maps, &c., are of any value or whether this is merely a method by which some gentleman is to have his productions printed at the public expense. I would like to have an opinion on this point from some gentleman who has knowledge of the matter. Having heard for some few years at least that there was a Mississippi River, and having heard that there were somewhere between fifty and one thousand engineers preparing views upon the subject, I have, nevertheless, failed to hear of these particular plans. No doubt the work is praiseworthy; and my ignorance is my only excuse for asking an explanation.

Mr. REAGAN. I will state that Professor Fontaine is an eminent civil engineer who was educated at West Point and has devoted a great deal of time and attention to the study of this subject. The information which he has collected is thought by persons who have examined it to be valuable to the Government; and the expense of printing it will be very small.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, rose.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution?

Mr. CONGER. I would like to hear what the gentlemen from Mississippi has to say.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I wish to add my testimony to that of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] in regard to the value of these maps and plans. Professor Fontaine, though a modest man, is unquestionably one of the most accomplished scientific men in this country. I had occasion to examine these papers, and, so far as my own judgment is worth anything, I consider them of immense value to the whole country bordering on the Mississippi River or interested in its navigation. The plans which this gentleman has brought us for the improvement of that river should not, I think, be overlooked. Scientific men who have examined them think them of great value. I hope the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] will withdraw his objection, for I feel that he and his people are interested in this matter as well as those whom I represent.

Mr. CONGER. A commission having been specially authorized and appointed to examine the Mississippi River and the different modes proposed for its improvement I had thought that perhaps this subject might be referred to that commission; but I withdraw my objection to this proposition, mainly because it may draw the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi to the improvement of our rivers and harbors so that he will assist us hereafter.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I shall be happy to do so when a proper case arises.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS OF MEXICAN WAR, ETC.

Mr. COFFROTH. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions for reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union a bill granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican and other wars therein named, and for other purposes.

Mr. CONGER. I object to that.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. KEIFER: The petition of the officers and members of the Woman's National Christian Temperance Union and 37 others, of Saint Paris, Ohio, that no law be passed to promote the interest of dealers in spirituous liquors—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WARNER: Papers relating to the pension claim of Mrs. Julia E. Barnes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WELLS: Resolution of the Legislature of Missouri, favoring the passage of the bills now pending before Congress for the repeal of the Federal election laws of May 31, 1870, and acts amendatory of February 28, 1871, and June 10, 1872, known as the Federal supervisory election laws—to the Committee of Elections.

By Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee: Papers relating to the war claim of Elizabeth P. Dyer—to the Committee on War Claims.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, June 16, 1879.

Prayer by Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, of Warrenton, Virginia.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the Louisiana State constitutional convention in favor of the passage of a law by Congress creating a new judicial district in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair also presents another memorial from the same constitutional convention praying that the military barracks, arsenal, and grounds at Baton Rouge may be ceded to the State of Louisiana for the use and occupation of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College. The Chair is uncertain whether this paper should go to the Committee on Military Affairs or to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. If no motion be made, it will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JONAS. I also ask leave to present similar documents and memorials, and move that the memorial relating to the military barracks at Baton Rouge be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the memorial in relation to the military barracks at Baton Rouge be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. JONAS. I had previously moved that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JONAS. I think that would be a more appropriate reference. It is a proposition to give up the military barracks at Baton Rouge for educational purposes, and I think that that committee are the best judges whether the Government has any use for them for military purposes. The subject does not come properly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It is purely a military matter, and should go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desire to say that of course the Senate would be unwilling to grant this request unless the Secretary of War should report that these barracks were no longer of any use for the Military Department. Beyond that arises the question whether this should be done in justice to the Government of the United States and to these educational institutions? I do not care myself to which committee the memorial is referred, but it seems to me it is eminently proper that it should be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MAXEY. I believe it has been customary always, where barracks or any military reservation is no longer needed for military purposes, or is supposed not to be needed longer for such purposes, to refer that question to the Committee on Military Affairs. I think that appropriately this memorial ought to go to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands from the Senator from Louisiana that he made a motion to refer the memorial to the Committee on Military Affairs before the other motion was made by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw my motion if there is any objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana, that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WITHERS presented the petition of S. W. Venable, of Petersburgh, Virginia, praying for the passage of a law referring his claim for the proceeds of captured tobacco to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Dunlap & Crawford, of Louisville, Kentucky, praying for the passage of a law referring their claim for the proceeds of captured tobacco to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the petition, or the memorial and appeal, of the officers and members of the Woman's National Christian Temperance Union, and others, which draws attention to the great evils coming from the use of intoxicating drinks, whisky and the like, and asks prayerfully for remedial legislation. Will the Chair suggest to what committee this petition should go?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Similar petitions have heretofore been referred to the Committee on Finance, on the supposition that they touched the revenue.

Mr. CONKLING. My faith in the financial views of that committee is such, that under the suggestion of the Chair, I move that reference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY presented the petition of Samuel S. Anderson, of Louisville, Kentucky, praying for the removal of his political disabilities: which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are next in order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Under "reports of committees," I would state that on the 10th instant the House of Representatives sent a resolution to the Senate fixing to-morrow, the 17th, for the final adjournment. The Committee on Appropriations have considered the resolution and would have been glad to have concurred in the date, but the state of business, which the Senate understands well, is such, that at this time, in the opinion of the committee, a day cannot be named, though it is hoped and believed that at an early day the committee can report back the resolution naming a date. Two appropriation bills are now before the Senate, and the Senate can judge of the day as well as the committee. If it is the desire of the Senate that the resolution shall be reported, I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to do so, but the judgment of the committee is that the resolution had better remain with the committee a day or two longer so as to enable it to determine more definitely what day can be named.

There is one question that some members of the committee were not fully advised upon, and if any of the older Senators desire to inform the committee upon it they would be glad to have information; and that is, to-morrow at noon being the time named, whether the Senate committee can hold the resolution without any discourtesy to the House. I should be glad to hear from the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] who is listening to me, on that subject.

Mr. CONKLING. I have no doubt of it, Mr. President; and the committee can also report it back afterward with an amendment naming a later day. It has been held over and over again that such a resolution by its terms does not expire; neither did I ever hear that it involved any discourtesy to the other House.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Very well.

MEXICAN DOCUMENTS IN STATE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CONKLING. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back the joint resolution (S. R. No. 5) in relation to records, papers, and documents of mixed international tribunals on file in the Department of State, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute which I send to the Secretary and ask to have read, and then I will ask the Senate, if there be no objection, to consider it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The original resolution will be read, and then the substitute.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not think the original resolution need be read. The substitute will speak for itself if the Secretary will read that.

The Secretary read the proposed substitute, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of State be, and he hereby is, directed to deliver to the person justly entitled to the possession thereof three several drafts for the sum of $5,000 each, dated New York, August 2, 1859, and drawn by Santiago Vidaurri, governor of Nuevo Leon and Cohuahuila, by Ignatius Gulindo, agent, on J. M. Mata, Mexican minister, Washington, District of Columbia, and accepted by said J. M. Mata, and made payable at the Bank of the Republic, New York, and all other papers relating to said drafts, the same having been deposited in the Department of State by error.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. You had better state what it is.

Mr. CONKLING. Before asking unanimous consent to consider the joint resolution I will, at the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Illinois, very briefly state the case. An arms company, a company whose business it is to make and vend arms, sold certain arms to the Republic of Mexico, for which arms three drafts were given, as recited in the resolution, being drafts for $5,000 each. They were accepted by Mr. Mata, the accredited agent and minister from Mexico. The Mexican government is ready at all times to pay these drafts, and the drawee of the drafts is entitled to receive them; but meanwhile under circumstances which it is not necessary to particularize, the drafts were handed in to the State Department and became of file there, there being an impression that the matter to which they related might pertain to the mixed commission. The mixed commission held that this being an adjusted, liquidated, and closed account, they had nothing to do with it, and they took no action in regard to it. Therefore for this purpose it is as if no reference had ever been made to the commission. The drafts remain there. The Mexican authorities are ready to pay them. The American citizens are entitled, as the committee finds, to receive the money, and the whole purpose of the resolution is to empower the Secretary of State to deliver over the drafts to those to whom they belong.

Mr. KERNAN. Will the Senator state who the drawees are? I did not catch the names.

Mr. CONKLING. It is possible that if my colleague would look at the resolution he still would be able to say he could not catch the name of the drawee.

Mr. BAYARD. They were drawn on Mata.

Mr. CONKLING. They were drawn on Mata, but my colleague wants the other names.

Mr. KERNAN. The payees.

Mr. CONKLING. They are Spanish names, and although very familiar to me and I could readily pronounce them, yet I refrain from doing so lest other Senators might not appreciate the accuracy of my Spanish pronunciation.

Mr. KERNAN. I asked for the names of the payees.

Mr. CONKLING. They are drafts drawn by the agent of the corporation furnishing these arms upon officers whose names, as I say, I forbear to attempt to pronounce, and then, as the Senator from Delaware says, yes, he is right about that, drawn on Mata, the Mexican minister, and accepted by him. Two other names appear in these drafts which I will not undertake to give.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution relative to certain accepted drafts and other papers in the Department of State."

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRIS. The Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1379) fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia, have instructed me to report it back with amendments. I give notice that I will to-morrow morning, so soon as the business of the morning hour shall have been concluded, ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WITHERS. I will simply say that, as soon as the pending appropriation bill shall have been disposed of, it is my purpose to move to take from the Calendar House bill No. 2175, making appropriations for the support of the Army, &c., and ask its consideration.

Mr. BAYARD. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back the bill (H. R. No. 2046) to authorize a compromise of the claims of the United States under the will of Joseph L. Lewis, and ask that it be placed on the Calendar. In making this report I desire to say that there has been a request from the executors of the will for some delay until the 17th of this month, but owing to the possibility of there not being another meeting of the committee regularly held, the report is now made. I propose that there shall be time for the executors to present any reason why the bill should not become a law, and I will not call the bill up until the day after to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1856) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to extend the area for the taking up and impounding of domestic animals in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

COMMITTEE ON CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report a resolution, which I understand is the usual order at the close of every session, to continue the committee during the recess to audit accounts.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, and that the necessary expenses thereof be paid out of the "miscellaneous items" of the contingent fund.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. McPHERSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 699) to provide a naval peace establishment, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WALKER (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 700) for the relief of such citizens of the Indian nations and tribes of the Indian Territory as lost property and effects on account of the war of the rebellion; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

INDIAN WARS.

Mr. WALKER submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interests, how many soldiers and civilians were killed and wounded; the estimated value of property destroyed, with the expenses incurred by the United States in the following-named Indian wars, namely: The war in Southern Oregon and Idaho and northern parts of California and Nevada, in 1865-'68; war against the Cheyennes, Arapahoes, Kiowas, and Comanches, in Kansas, Colorado, and the Indian Territory, in 1868-'69; the Modoc war, in 1872-'73; the war against the Apaches of Arizona, in 1873; the war against the Kiowas, Comanches, and Cheyennes, in Kansas, Colorado, Texas, Indian Territory, and New Mexico, in 1874-'75; the war against the Northern Cheyennes and Sioux, in 1876-'77; the Nez Percé war, in 1877; the Bannock war, in 1878; and the war against the Northern Cheyennes, in 1878-'79. And that he be requested further to inform the Senate, as nearly as he may be able, how many Indians have been killed in each of the wars mentioned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas ask for the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WALKER. No, sir; not at present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go upon the Calendar.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Rule No. 60 of the standing rules of the Senate be amended by adding thereto, "judges of the Court of Claims."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. No. 669) to remove the political disabilities of James F. Harrison, of Virginia;

A bill (S. No. 670) to remove the political disabilities of William N. R. Beall, of Missouri;

A bill (S. No. 625) for the relief of the Farmers and Merchants' Bank, Paris, Texas;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 6) accepting from Professor Edward Fontaine, of Louisiana, certain maps, drawings, and explanations of the same; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 30) for the relief of Dr. C. W. Brink, bearer of dispatches from the United States minister at Mexico, in 1869.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2263) supplemental to "an act to establish post-routes."

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 2275) extending the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands," approved March 3, 1877, until the 1st day of October, 1880; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2274) concerning the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana.

ENROLLING OF CANAL-BOATS AND BARGES.

Mr. McPHERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 671) to amend the act entitled "An act for enrolling and licensing ships or vessels to be employed in the coasting trade and fisheries, and for regulating the same," passed February 18, 1793.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the provisions of title 50 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be so construed as to require the enrolling or licensing of vessels not propelled by sail or by internal motive power of their own, whether navigating the internal waters of a State or the navigable waters of the United States, and not engaged in trade with contiguous foreign territory,

Mr. CONKLING. I wish the Senator from New Jersey, on whose motion this bill has been taken up, would state to the Senate the effect of its enactment and the reason for it.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, prior to the year 1874 boats engaged in the coasting trade and engaged upon the internal waters of the States, canals, &c., commonly known as canal-boats and barges, it was supposed by some of the officers of the Government were liable to enrollment. An act was passed in 1874 which was supposed to remedy the defect in the law of 1793. It appeared after the act of 1874 was passed that there was then a difference of opinion between the law officer of the Government and the then Secretary of the Treasury as to the construction of the law, the Secretary favoring the view that canal-boats and barges were not entitled to enrollment and should not be enrolled. The Attorney-General of the United States at that time declared that to be the true construction of the law. Quite recently the act was referred to the present Attorney-General and he construes the law to be that canal-boats, barges, and other vessels having no propelling power, unless they are confined entirely to the canals of a State, are subject to enrollment. An order of that kind has been issued, and some of the collectors have undertaken to collect customs duties and to collect enrollment fees under the late decision of the Attorney-General. I have here the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1877, in which he recommends that some action be taken to correct the phraseology of the law so that there shall be no longer any difference of opinion respecting it; and, with the permission of the Senate, I will read it. He says:

In this connection, I would call attention to the fact that a large number of vessels, as defined by section 3 of the Revised Statutes, propelled neither by steam nor sails, go to make up the tonnage of enrolled and licensed vessels, while a large class of vessels with no internal appliances for propulsion is exempt from enrollment and license under the act of April 18, 1874.

This was owing to the loose phraseology of the law of 1874, so that it was impossible to form a just estimate of what it meant.

These vessels consist, mainly, of barges and open flats engaged in the transportation of coal and lumber on the large navigable rivers of the country. For many years this class of vessels has been increasing, and the water-transportation of merchandise upon such rivers has been gradually passing from steam-vessels to barges and other craft of temporary structure, which are towed or propelled by steam or sail vessels. The act of 1874 exempted canal-boats and boats employed on the internal waters of States from enrollment, so that a discrimination now practically exists between vessels propelled neither by steam nor sails, as regards their liability to enrollment, dependent simply upon the question whether they are or are not usually employed on the internal waters of a State in connection with their employment on navigable waters of the United States. The purely temporary character of many of these vessels renders it difficult to apply to them the provisions for enrollment that are applicable to vessels propelled by steam or sails, especially as they are so constructed as to admit neither of a permanent crew nor of a master who remains on board.

He goes on further to say:

The discrimination as regards enrollment is, besides, a gratuitous cause of dissatisfaction among that portion of the mercantile community which makes use of craft not propelled directly by steam or sails. All these vessels should be subjected to a system of license and enrollment different from that now in force, or all should be exempted from enrollment.

That is the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, that there should be a different system of enrollment as to these boats and barges, a reduction in the cost of enrollment, or they should be entirely exempt from enrollment.

I wish to state exactly the operation of this, so far as it applies to my own State, and perhaps when I state that I shall give a very fair idea of how the rule applies in all the States in which there are navigable waters. Along the coast of New Jersey, within a distance of eight miles, we have eight different coaling stations. They are the terminal points of great railroad corporations engaged in the coal trade. Those eight different coaling stations lie within the territorial limits of three collection districts, to wit, the district of New York, in which there are four coaling stations, the district of Newark having two of these coaling stations, and the district of Perth Amboy, also having two. The collector of the port of New York has never believed or thought it to be his duty to impose a tax upon the poor men, as they are generally poor men, engaged in the transportation of coal in these districts. Many of them own one or two canal-boats, which constitute their whole capital and stock in trade; and they go to these different coaling stations and purchase the coal there and distribute it all along the coast.

Mr. CONKLING. Are the canal-boats exempted now?

Mr. McPHERSON. The canal-boats under the construction of the law by the Secretary of the Treasury have been exempted until within the past four weeks. Under the construction placed by the Attorney-General on the law of 1874, they are subject to enrollment. The intention of this bill is simply to say what the law of 1874 meant to say, and as everybody supposed it had said.

Mr. CONKLING. Have you the law of 1874 there?

Mr. McPHERSON. I have the law of 1874.

Mr. CONKLING. Will you not read it?

Mr. McPHERSON. It is as follows:

That the act to which this is a supplement shall not be so construed as to extend the provisions of the said act to canal-boats or boats employed on the internal waters or canals of any State; and all such boats, excepting only such as are provided with sails or propelling machinery of their own adapted to lake or coastwise navigation, and excepting such as are employed in trade with the Canadas, shall be exempt from the provisions of the said act, and from the payment of all customs and other fees under any act of Congress.

Now, let me go on to state the operation of the law. As I said before, in the collection district of New York the collector of that port, to his credit be it said, has never undertaken to compel the enrollment of canal-boats. In the district of Newark also the same rule applied; but quite recently the President of the United States found in the backwoods of New Jersey a gentleman whom he placed in command of the port of Perth Amboy, and he has undertaken, under this recent opinion of the Attorney-General, to levy tribute on every boat coming within his collection district. He has had as high as sixty and seventy boats tied up to the dock at a time simply because they refused to pay the enrollment; something, remember, that never had been exacted in any other collection district along the whole coast of the United States. The effect of the action of this collector has been that it has simply frightened away from that port, where two of the great coal roads have their depots, all of these boats, or nearly all, that have been engaged in the coal trade there; and of course it has been a very disastrous thing to those roads engaged in the coal trade and to the boatmen also.

The law of 1874 if enforced applies to every river in the country. I made an inquiry at the Treasury Department a few days since and I was informed by the gentleman having charge of this particular division that the day before he had received ten letters from points along the Ohio River complaining of the operation of the law of 1874 under the construction given to it by the Attorney-General. There is not a river in the whole country where any kind of packet plies but what is affected by the operation of this law if enforced.

I do not know, Mr. President, that anything further need be said on this subject. One thing I wish the Senate distinctly to understand: whatever the enrollment fee may be that is paid by the poor people who are engaged in this traffic, and, as I said before, nine-tenths of them are people of small means, this tribute is not uniformly levied upon them. Some of the collection districts do not undertake to collect the enrollment fee and others do, and impose heavy penalties. The operation of the law as construed is a discriminating one, and the money received does not go into the Treasury of the United States. Nobody receives any benefit from it except the collector of customs at the port where the collections are made, and we think it is an unjust and an onerous tax and should be abolished.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I asked the Senator from New Jersey to explain this, because of my own lack of information about it; and after hearing his explanation I suggest to him whether this substitute proposed by the committee does not do a great deal more than he has indicated as desirable. The substitute is:

That the provisions of title 50 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be so construed as to require the enrolling or licensing of vessels not propelled by sail or by internal motive power of their own, whether navigating the internal waters of a State or the navigable waters of the United States, and not engaged in trade with contiguous foreign territory.

If I understand the force and effect of these words, it must be to exonerate from the operation of the laws referred to all vessels whatever plying in the arms of the sea, in any harbor, in the East River, in Long Island Sound, as well as on the lakes and on the great western rivers—to exonerate them from all the obligations, whatever they may be, imposed by the act of 1793 and by subsequent acts.

Knowing that the Senator from New Jersey is much more largely informed about this subject than I am, I submit this case: there are, as he knows, great numbers of barges as I suppose they are called, very large vessels employed to carry passengers in great numbers, not regularly, but going in flotillas upon occasions, excursions, and at a variety of times when for business as well as for pleasure people go in large numbers from place to place. Now, is it designed that all these boats, and as many more like them as may come to be from time to time, without any license, without any enrollment, without any let or hinderance, may be put afloat and kept afloat whether they are sea-worthy or not, whether they are safe or not; and if that be the design, how does that tend to relieve the hardship of which the Senator speaks visiting canal-boats and burden boats and other kinds engaged in traffic?

Mr. MCPHERSON. A friend was talking to me so that I could not catch what the Senator from New York said. Will he please repeat?

Mr. CONKLING. I asked the Senator whether it be true that under this proposed language all craft of whatever name or nature, not moving by their own power or carrying sail, but towed by tugs, in the harbors, in the arms of the sea, sometimes carrying a swarm of passengers, as the Senator no doubt many times has seen them as I have seen them black with men, a thousand on one craft—whether it is intended that all such boats, whether sea-worthy or not, whether safe or not, whether used on the Sound, in the harbor of New York, anywhere within the waters of the United States, shall be exempted from whatever occurs to vessels enrolled and licensed and certificated under the act of 1793 and the other acts supplementary thereto?

Mr. MCPHERSON. In answer to the Senator from New York I will say that the phraseology of this bill certainly means to exempt all such vessels from enrollment. It can mean nothing else, although it was solely the intention of the authors of the bill to have it apply to vessels engaged in freight transportation. If there is a necessity existing why barges engaged in passenger transportation for excursions, &c., should be subject to inspection and enrollment, as I think they clearly should be, because very great danger might arise from their not being properly inspected and enrolled by some Government officer, then I will willingly submit to an amendment of the bill to guard that point. It is clearly the intent of the bill and its authors simply to exempt those vessels engaged in the transportation of freight.

Mr. DAWES. I will suggest to the Senator from New Jersey another danger. Perhaps the Senator from New York suggested it when I was out. It opens our waters to all the worn-out craft of the Provinces, coming in here and taking possession of routes of passenger travel in a condition that I think the Senator from New Jersey would not permit them to carry on that kind of traffic, exposing all passenger travel to increased danger. I suggest that to the Senator.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will say to the honorable Senator from Massachusetts that under the construction of law and under the practice at the Department and the orders issued by the Treasury Department, matters can certainly be no worse under this bill than they have been in the past, because there has never been an order issued requiring these vessels to be enrolled, and they have not been enrolled until under the late opinion of the Attorney-General. Therefore, in effect and practice, this can make no difference whatever so far as concerns the old rotten vessels of the Province of Canada coming over here.

Mr. DAWES. Has it always been the law that any worn-out craft in the Provinces, useless there because of its condition, could come here and hold itself out as a common carrier on our rivers without the slightest inspection or certificate of fitness, or a license of any kind? Has that been the law until a recent period?

Mr. MCPHERSON. It has been the practice.

Mr. DAWES. I submit to the Senator from New Jersey whether it is a wise practice, whether the Senator desires to continue it.

Mr. CONKLING. What practice does the Senator from Massachusetts understand the Senator from New Jersey to say has existed?

Mr. DAWES. That any worn-out craft of the kind described in this bill, thrown off because unfit for duty in the Provinces, could come into our rivers without any inspection or certificate of license or anything else, and hold itself out as a common carrier of passengers or of frieght.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not understand such a practice ever to have been permitted.

Mr. DAWES. I did not suppose it was so. I am not very familiar with the routine of the coastwise trade.

Mr. MCPHERSON. In answer to the Senator from Massachusetts, I will simply say again that, whatever the law may have been, it has been the practice of the Treasury Department not to require the enrollment of vessels of this class, and until the late opinion of the Attorney-General under the act of 1874, which I find was issued not more than two months ago, there had been no enrollment of this class of vessels. I do not know what the Senator means by speaking of the old rotten craft that come over here. This bill contemplates nothing of the kind. It only says that "all kinds of vessels" of the class here described shall be exempt from enrollment.

Mr. DAWES. I did not wish to intimate that the bill was for such a purpose or that the Senator from New Jersey would countenance any such purpose. I was only suggesting the possibility of it under the law. I do not know of any such instance myself. It only struck me as a thing to be provided against rather than to be opened to the genius of speculators in old craft.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move the following amendment: in line 6, after the word "own," insert "and not in any case carrying passengers."

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have no objection to that. It is simply to restrict the bill to freight-carriers. I can see an importance in that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the Committee on Commerce.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I see the morning hour has expired, but I do not wish to do anything to prevent the continuing to a conclusion the consideration of this bill. I want, however, to make another suggestion. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Pennsylvania for improving the bill, as I think he has done very much by this amendment.

But now there is another thing. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] has made what seems to me a very cogent suggestion, and if I heard the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] aright he said that the practice had been heretofore to allow Canadian vessels to come here and take part in our coastwise trade. I think that will be news to the honorable Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CHANDLER,] for example. I remember very well in days that are gone, the struggle that went on in the Committee on Commerce to obtain American registers and American enrollment for Canadian vessels. I remember that when constituents of mine went over to Toronto or Prescott and at a judicial sale purchased a vessel which had been libeled, and then sought to use her in the American trade by obtaining enrollment and license for her, he encountered a solid Committee on Commerce against him, and it could not be done. And in another case to which I might refer, where the craft was Canadian, it was sea-worthy, it was meritorious; there was but one defect about it and that was that it was Canadian, and under the policy——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired. The Chair does not observe, however, any member of the Committee on Appropriations in his seat.

Mr. MCPHERSON. We can finish this bill in a few moments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not perceive any member of the Committee on Appropriations in the Chamber, and an appropriation bill is the unfinished business. If there is no objection, then, the Chair will allow the consideration of the bill called up on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to proceed until the regular order is called for.

Mr. CONKLING. I will occupy but a moment; and I do not wish, as I said, to do anything to prevent the final consideration of the bill this morning; but I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] who has this matter warmly at heart and who is promoting it, as well as the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON,] to prepare an amendment which will confine this bill to American-built vessels and vessels owned by citizens of the United States, because the existing laws have both those requisites.

In order that I need not trouble the Senate again, I will, while up, make one other suggestion. All Senators are aware that liens of many sorts attach to vessels, and one not inconsiderable motive in having vessels enrolled and licensed is that their name may be known, the place from which they hail may be known, and every man who has a mechanic's lien or a seaman's lien or a claim for wages or anything else—these latter usually existing in behalf of poor and friendless men—may have some place to go and ascertain where the vessel may be reached by libel or otherwise.

When this proposed bill becomes a law, it is entirely allowable for every man, as I understand it, with a paint-brush to obliterate the name of his barge and put on some other name or no name. Then she is a nameless boat hailing from nowhere; and then what becomes of the claims of mechanics, sailors, and others? Every member of the Senate can judge as well as I can tell him. And when you come to extend this law not as it is designed to be extended in the act to which in one moment I will call attention, but as this language is large enough to extend it to all the boats that ply in Long Island Sound and in the harbors and arms of the sea, then you have substantially covered everything of this kind of craft that there is in the country, for surely there is no sea-going vessel carrying neither motive power nor sails, and thus in one act you exempt all the craft floating on all the waters not propelled by power of its own or driven by the wind, from the requirements of the act of 1793 and its supplements.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator permit me to ask if an amendment confining the action of this bill to American vessels will obviate the objection which he has to the bill?

Mr. CONKLING. It will obviate it to a considerable degree.

Mr. CHANDLER. I presume the committee will accept that.

Mr. CONKLING. I presume so; but if the Senator from Michigan will turn his attention for one moment to this point, very likely he can suggest an amendment that will not cripple the bill and will nevertheless be useful. Although it may be confined to American-built vessels, if it is to cover all the vessels on all the waters, owned no matter in what State, running between States, running anywhere on the public waters, the effect will be to obliterate the record of these vessels; their names may all be painted out; nobody any longer knows where they hail from, and thus every man who has a claim against them might just as well follow a bird that flies in the air. There is nothing by which they may be traced at all. On that point, if the Senator from Michigan will allow me, I will call his attention to the act of 1874 which, as I remembered it and as I read it now, was designed to be guarded in this respect. See what it provides:

That the act to which this is a supplement shall not be so construed as to extend the provisions of the said act to canal-boats or boats employed on the internal waters or canals of any State.

There we see how little liability to wrong there is. Here is a canal-boat on the Erie Canal. Some man paints out her name; she plies back and forth on this canal; whoever has a claim against her can follow her. But now suppose in place of being that boat, it is a barge floating on the sea, to-day she is in the harbor of New York; to-morrow she is in the harbor of Boston; the next we hear of her she is in the harbor of Baltimore. She is registered nowhere; she is enrolled nowhere; she has no name. All Senators will see that so far as these laws are designed to protect creditors and particularly the poorer class of creditors in whose behalf liens upon vessels have been given, so that they may proceed to libel the vessel, her tackle, apparel, and furniture in the language of the law, so far as they are concerned, this is virtually an emancipation of all these vessels from any sort of obligation.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from New York yield to me to perfect the amendment to meet his views? In line 5, after the word "of," we can insert:

Require the enrolling or licensing of American-built vessels and owned by citizens of the United States not propelled by sail or by internal motive power of their own.

Mr. CONKLING. In substance I might agree with the Senator. I will suggest to him, however, to change the phraseology "licensing or enrolling of vessels built in the United States and owned by citizens thereof."

Mr. McPHERSON. I will accept that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator send the amendment to the Secretary's desk?

Mr. McPHERSON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "vessels," in line 5, it is proposed to insert:

Built in the United States, and owned by citizens thereof.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce as it has been amended.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I wish to offer an amendment to come in at the end of the section.

Provided, That all vessels described by this act shall be enrolled without cost or fee.

That meets the objection made by the Senator from New York, with regard to barges which may be transporting passengers from place to place.

Mr. McPHERSON. I would add the words "or licensed" after "enrolled;" so as to read "enrolled or licensed without cost or fee."

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. That is right. I accept that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be so modified.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce as a substitute for the bill, as that substitute has been amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to have the bill read as it now stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill as amended will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the provisions of title 50 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be so construed as to require the enrolling or licensing of vessels built in the United States and owned by citizens thereof, not propelled by sail or by internal motive power of their own, and not in any case carrying passengers, whether navigating the internal waters of a State or the navigable waters of the United States, and not engaged in trade with contiguous foreign territory: Provided, That all vessels described by this act shall be enrolled or licensed without cost or fee.

Mr. FERRY. I want to call the attention of the Senator from New Jersey, if he desires to relieve barges that are usually towed by some steam craft, not by any motive power of their own, to the fact that many of those barges have sails. It appears to me that he should use the word "wholly" before "by sail."

Mr. McPHERSON. It does not apply to vessels having propelling power of their own.

Mr. FERRY. "Or by sail" is the language.

Mr. McPHERSON. I think the words "propelling power of their own" covers the whole point raised by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERRY. I should like to have that clause read again

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read as amended.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. FERRY. Now, I desire to offer an amendment, to put in the word "wholly;" so as to read "not propelled wholly by sail."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Where does the amendment come in?

Mr. FERRY. Before the word "by," in the fifth line.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator from Michigan permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FERRY. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. What reason is there for exempting vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam of this class? What is the reason of the thing?

Mr. FERRY. The reason of the thing is stated by the Senator from New Jersey. The object is to relieve them from the ordinary duties and the expenses that are attendant upon craft that are propelled by steam or entirely by sail. These are barges that are towed by steam craft, and the steam craft is subject to the expenses that are attendant upon the navigation of the inland waters. Many of these barges have one mast and one sail; others have two masts and two sails, and sometimes in a light wind they are dropped by the steamer and propelled by sail. Usually, though, they are drawn by steam-tugs. Now, if the language is left as the bill is reported, it would exclude those barges propelled in part by sail. The object now is that that sort of craft, to wit, a barge that has no propelling power of its own, and no steam power, and is not entirely left to its sail force, but a combination of sail and steam, shall be exempt from enrollment charges.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Do you not think that a barge propelled by a sail should on reason and principle be entitled as much to this exemption as one controlled by horse-power?

Mr. FERRY. But my object is to cover it, because many of these barges have sails, and by the language of the bill they would be excluded. My object was to include those that have sails in part and are propelled in part by sail. I have the same object the Senator from Florida has.

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. President——

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, I shall have to call for the regular order if this bill occupies much longer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania demands the regular order.

Mr. McPHERSON. I hope we shall be allowed a few moments longer.

Mr. CHANDLER. This bill can evidently be passed in a single moment. If the Senator will have patience for one moment, it will be disposed of.

Mr. HEREFORD. I would suggest to my friend from New Jersey (although I had the honor of reporting it from the committee) that it appears to me, from the shape in which he has got his bill now by the assistance of the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] aided by the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON,] it means absolutely nothing.

Here comes in a bill to provide that the provisions of title 50 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be so construed as to require the enrolling or licensing of vessels, and so forth and so on. Then comes in an amendment that they shall be licensed and enrolled, but that there shall not be anything charged for that. I should not like to see that go upon our statute-books. I think in view of the position the bill has got in, if I understand the reading of it as amended, it means nothing, and it had either better be recommitted or go over until to-morrow, so that we may see what these amendments mean.

Mr. McPHERSON. I ask the Senator to yield to me a moment.

Mr. HEREFORD. In the position the bill is now it means nothing.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to have the bill again reported. I know the bill is right. If there is any amendment that is not proper, I have not heard it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the provisions of title 50 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be so construed as to require the enrolling or licensing of vessels built in the United States and owned by citizens thereof, not propelled wholly by sail or by internal motive power of their own, and not in any case carrying passengers, whether navigating the internal waters of a State or the navigable waters of the United States, and not engaged in trade with contiguous foreign territory: Provided, &c.

Mr. HEREFORD. Read the proviso.

Mr. McPHERSON. I understand that to be the bill pure and simple as just read. There is no proviso agreed to.

Mr. HEREFORD. There was another amendment accepted by the Senator.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have accepted no amendment, only what has been read.

Mr. HEREFORD. I ask that the Secretary read the last amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON.]

Mr. McPHERSON. If any such amendment was agreed to I ask for a reconsideration of the vote.

Mr. HEREFORD. The Senator from New Jersey accepted the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, which was that these vessels should be enrolled without any charge; and the Senator from

New Jersey added the word "licensed," so that the vessels described in this act should be enrolled and licensed without any charge, whereas the bill itself provides that they shall not be enrolled or licensed at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If Senators will suspend their remarks the Chair will give the precise state of the question. The proviso offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania was agreed to in committee. The Chair then inquired if there were other amendments. None were moved. The Chair then reported the bill to the Senate. The bill is now in the Senate, and the question is on concurring in the amendment made in Committee of the Whole. It is perfectly competent for the Senate to vote down the whole amendment, and then insert what it pleases, and that is the short way out of this trouble.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia, except perhaps in a little excess of emphasis, is quite right in what he says. This is the case of a painter who painted a picture that was to be the most beautiful of all human countenances. He painted one feature at a time, keeping the rest covered up from view, and when he removed the veil it was a frightful thing, because although each feature was beautiful in itself, there was discord among the whole. That is the difficulty here.

Mr. HEREFORD. The Senator from New York will allow me. In this case he has been the painter.

Mr. CONKLING. I will not allow my friend. He would not allow me to interrupt him before, and I ask him not to interrupt me. This bill I venture to say will be all right upon one condition. If the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania will consent, in place of his proviso, to accept an amendment which I will suggest to him, the bill will mean exactly what it was designed to mean, in spite of this discrepancy which has grown in from moving isolated amendments. I propose to leave out this proviso and in lieu of it I ask the Senator from New Jersey to insert in line 4 the words "the payment of any fee or cost for."

Now let me read the bill as it will stand with that amendment adopted:

That the provisions of title 50 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be so construed as to require the payment of any fee or cost for the enrolling or licensing of vessels not propelled wholly by sail or by internal motive power of their own, and not in any case carrying passengers, whether navigating the internal waters of a State or the navigable waters of the United States, and not engaged in trade with contiguous foreign territory.

The effect of that will be to permit gratuitous license and enrollment, costing nothing, of all these vessels. That was the design of the Senator in his proviso.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Either American or foreign?

Mr. CONKLING. Oh, no.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. You leave out "American built."

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will wait a moment he will see that I do not mean any such thing as that. The effect will be to permit a gratuitous licensing and enrolling of all these vessels, and then to leave every other amendment standing, including that moved by the Senator from New Jersey about American-built vessels, which I have not before me, but it is in the bill—that is all right—and the simple change will be to substitute for the proviso of the Senator from Pennsylvania these words in line 4. Then the contradiction complained of will be avoided, discord will be avoided, and the effect of the bill will be to grant to American built and owned vessels of this description a license and enrollment which will cost not a cent to anybody. That is what the Senator wants to effect.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not wish to consent to any such amendment. The bill is exactly as I want it now with the exception of the proviso which I understand was offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania which I wish to have stricken out and let the bill remain then as it is without that proviso. The intention of the bill is that there shall be no requirement at all with respect to enrollment and license.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator object to this amendment of mine?

Mr. McPHERSON. I do, because it contemplates a requirement that there shall be enrollment and license, which would cause a great deal of trouble.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I am very free to the Senator that he will encounter a somewhat strenuous opposition. For one I do not intend to gratify anybody whether he carries passengers or freight by voting for a provision under which every vessel may go scot free and whistle down the wind all its creditors, paint out the name, have no record anywhere by which the owners of the vessel can be found or the vessel herself can be found or anything can be found by which some discharged sailor or some mechanic who has worked upon her can have any recourse upon anybody. There is no sense in it, and it should not be done. It is not asking too much of these vessels to take out a license which costs them nothing on earth of time or trouble except to simply hand in, every vessel-owner, a list of the vessels he owns, and let a record be made of it and take his license. That, I submit, is not too much to ask; and if the Senator declines to accept the amendment in substance, which he did accept before put in the form of a proviso, then, for one, I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to have the bill perfected in such a way as to suit the views of the Senator from New York as well as others.

Mr. CONKLING. I was perfecting it not only in substantial but literal conformity with what the Senator from New Jersey himself indicated.

Mr. McPHERSON. The object and intent of the bill is simply to prevent the collectors of the different ports along the coast imposing this burden on canal-boats and barges engaged in the transportation of coal and other freight.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. What does it amount to?

Mr. McPHERSON. Fifteen or sixteen dollars on a canal-boat. The duty that may be imposed to-day on a canal-boat of one hundred tons by the collector of a port amounts to fifteen or sixteen dollars under the present enrollment act.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Tonnage dues?

Mr. McPHERSON. One boat of about four hundred tons lies to-day at Perth Amboy, New Jersey, on which has been imposed a duty of something like $1,600; it lies there tied up at the dock on account of the penalties, licenses, and impositions of some nature or character that the collector of the port has seen fit to impose.

Will the Senator from New York please state his amendment once more, and if I can possibly consent to it I will.

Mr. CONKLING. Shall I read the whole bill as it will stand amended?

Mr. McPHERSON. Yes, sir; if you please.

Mr. CONKLING. It is:

That the provisions of title 50 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be so construed as to require the payment of any fee or charge for the enrollment or licensing of vessels built in the United States and owned by citizens thereof, not propelled wholly by sail or by internal motive power of their own, and not in any case carrying passengers, whether navigating the internal waters of a State or the navigable waters of the United States, and not engaged in trade with contiguous foreign territory.

That puts into this section three amendments, and if you count the word "wholly" suggested by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] four, every one of which was indorsed by the Senator from New Jersey as I understood, and the whole purpose of transposing this proviso and changing the words so as to have them come into line 4 is to avoid the repugnance correctly pointed out by the Senator from West Virginia, which would arise if in one provision of the bill you say the vessel shall not be enrolled at all and afterward you say it is to be enrolled and nothing is to be charged for doing it.

Mr. McPHERSON. I understood the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania as not absolutely to require enrollment, but if any party desired to enroll his vessel he could do so.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator understood that from the words:

Provided, That all vessels described by this act shall be enrolled or licensed without cost.

Mr. McPHERSON. Your bill does not include the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CONKLING. It includes it in this form: it says these laws shall not be so construed as to require the payment of any fee or charge, the complaint being that these vessels have been visited with excessive exactions, though I cannot understand how that happens.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will simply say this, that the Senator's amendment is in many respects preferable to the present law, and as the session is so near its close and we desire to have this bill go to the House, I am willing to accept almost anything that will relieve us from our present condition; but were it not for that condition of things I should hardly consent to his amendment. As it is I will.

Mr. HEREFORD. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, I think this debate has run long enough and I call for the regular order.

Mr. McPHERSON. I call for a vote on the question.

Mr. HEREFORD. I desire to be heard before the vote is taken.

Several SENATORS. Regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for, which is the appropriation bill.

Mr. WALLACE. I would be content that this bill should go forward if the Senator from West Virginia had not taken the floor. I think by agreement an amendment can be prepared and the bill perfected to-morrow morning.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. INGALLS. Before the unfinished business is taken up, I ask the Senate to excuse me from further service upon the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that the vacancy occasioned by my retirement be filled by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks to be excused from further service upon the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to fill the vacancy, and Mr. LOGAN was appointed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 2275) extending the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands," approved March 3, 1877, until the 1st day of October, 1880, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. No. 2274) concerning the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 2165) to amend section 2297 of title 32 of the Revised Statutes, relating to homestead settlers; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2326) for the relief of settlers upon the Osage trust and diminished reserve lands in Kansas, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 2263) supplemental to "an act to establish post-routes."

A bill (H. R. No. 1478) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate for the purchase at private sale or, if necessary, procure by condemnation a site for a post-office in the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland.

A bill (H. R. No. 1734) to authorize the Secretary of War to use certain moneys appropriated by act of Congress approved March 4, 1879, "for the protection of the high sand-banks on the Chippewa River," in the completion and protection of improvements in and near the mouth of said Chippewa River.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR JUDICIAL EXPENSES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2252) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] in line 9, to insert after the word "hundred" the words "and fifty;" so as to read:

For payment of district attorneys and their assistants, $350,000.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, when I took the floor on Saturday it was not my intention to inflict on the Senate, very much wearied at the time, any extended speech, but to participate briefly in the current debate. As the adjournment cut off that debate, it very largely cut off my desire to trouble the Senate at all upon this bill. I cannot, however, but believe that this is the most vicious of all the measures yet undertaken in the name of this new evangel of reform. There have been during this extra session quite a number of measures inaugurated with more or less success for the purpose of carrying out the proclamation under which this new order of things has been inaugurated. We set out with a new theory of the elective franchise, that the power of that franchise was hereafter to be measured by the number of pieces of paper found in the ballot-box without regard to how they came there or without regard to the number of freemen entitled to deposit them. An attempt was made to seize the Presidency upon this theory; and when it was finally determined by an examination and adjudication based upon the number of citizens who had placed pieces of paper in the ballot-box entitled to do so rather than upon the theory that the elective franchise rested upon a piece of paper instead of upon the freeman behind it, a revolution was threatened here in this Capitol. Power has been obtained in one branch at least of the National Legislature upon this theory, and so obtained an assault has been made upon the Army, first to reduce its number and cripple its power, and then to curtail its functions, followed by an effort to deprive the civil officers of the Government of the power to enforce the peace.

Another doctrine announced in the support of these measures was that there was no peace of the United States to be kept anyhow and by any method of legislation in these Halls. After that came provisions to strip the United States courts of their jurisdiction and limit as far as possible the subjects over which they could exercise any jurisdiction or authority whatever. But it has been reserved to what are supposed to be the last hours of this extra session to set on foot this new measure by which it is attempted to establish a new jury system for the United States, under which party spirit is to stalk into the court-house itself and in the very temple of justice to take its seat under the authority of law in the jury-box, and there to accomplish, if possible, what this most malignant demon of party spirit cannot accomplish elsewhere. In my opinion, sir, no so pernicious measure has yet been undertaken that will so shake the confidence of all justice-loving people in this country in the courts of law and in their judgments as would this measure if it should become a law. In that portion of the country from which I come, pernicious as all the other measures against which we have been contending during this session are regarded in the judgment of the people and upon which their opposition approaches to unanimity, nothing will so strike them as abhorrent to all the principles, to all the notions that have inspired them with confidence in the courts of law of this land, as the proposition to establish by law in their midst party politics as the governing and controlling rule.

Sir, my friend from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] found consolation on Saturday against the enormity of this measure in a provision of the act by which he said it was provided that a judge need not follow it at all unless he had a mind to. Having such confidence in the judges exercising jurisdiction in his State, he rested satisfied that their own conclusion as to the fitness of things according to the standard in New England would be such that they would not follow the very provision of law which he is helping to enact here for others and to open the opportunity for some other judge who may to-morrow sit in the seat now adorned by the judges in his State to follow under the sanctions of law. Sir, party spirit is as strong in the New England States as in any others; party lines are as distinctly drawn; men's political convictions in those States are as firmly fixed and as controlling within their proper sphere as in any State in this Union; they have been for these many years; but the man within all their borders who would suggest that those things should enter within the sacred precincts of the court-house would be discarded as an unsafe man to trust in the conduct of affairs.

I have practiced law somewhat in my own State; I have been cognizant of the practice of the law in other States; I have read the judicial proceedings of my own and other States, and I know something of them. I never yet heard the judgment of a court or the verdict of a jury within its limits criticised from a political point of view. They have had many exciting trials there; they have tried men in the midst of great excitements for aiding in the rescue of fugitive slaves, and men have conducted the prosecutions that had no sympathy with the law, doing their duty fully; men have conducted the defense in the same unbiased spirit with which they conduct any other defense; and the results of the verdicts, however they may have disappointed one or gratified another, have risen in the confidence of the community above and out of the reach of the miserable mists that hang about political organizations and political contrivances.

Sir, within my own recollection, one of the best judges upon the supreme court of my own State, belonging, in the language of this bill, to a well-known political organization in opposition to almost everybody else with whom he was associated, was for more than twenty successive years while sitting upon that bench the candidate of his party for chief magistrate of the Commonwealth, and at the last he held court every day of two weeks within sight and almost within hearing of the Legislature that were determining during that time the question whether or not he was elected governor of the State by a single vote. The parties who went in and out of his court-room and submitted their cases to trial and to the jury under his charges never knew in that court-room that he had any politics whatever. He stepped off the bench at a given hour on one day and crossed the way and took the oath of office as governor, and everybody acquiesced in his work in the court; and the verdicts of juries under his guidance and the judgments of the court rendered by him inspired confidence in all men and in all parties.

Now, Mr. President, how is it that in the midst of party conflicts and party animosities and party bitterness that were in existence in all New England, in New York, everywhere where the public sentiment maintains the purity and the sanctity of the tribunal of justice above and apart from party politics and party malignity, we have been able to maintain such a condition of things? Let me read to you briefly just how it is done:

The selectmen of each town shall once in every year prepare a list of such inhabitants of the town not absolutely exempt as they think well qualified to serve as jurors, being persons of good moral character, of sound judgment, and free from all legal exceptions; which list shall include not less than one for every one hundred inhabitants of the town, and not more than one for every sixty inhabitants, computing by the then last census, except that in the county of Dukes it may include one for every thirty inhabitants.

The list when so prepared shall be posted up by the selectmen in public places in the town ten days at least before it is submitted for revision and acceptance, and shall then be laid before the town, and the town may alter it by adding the names of any persons liable to serve, or striking any names therefrom.

The selectmen shall cause the names borne on the list to be written, each on a separate paper or ballot, and shall roll up or fold the ballots so as to resemble each other as much as possible, and so that the name written thereon shall not be visible on the outside; and they shall place the ballots in a box to be kept by the town clerk for that purpose.

If any person whose name is so placed in the jury-box is convicted of any scandalous crime, or is guilty of any gross immorality, his name shall be withdrawn therefrom by the selectmen, and he shall not be returned to serve as a juror.

Under this system the juries for the several courts are taken, few in number, one, two, or three perhaps from every town in the county, drawn out of this box, one from A, two from B, according to the size of the town. Before their names are put into this box they are all posted up for ten days, so that the whole town shall know who it is proposed by the selectmen to put into this high office, as it is deemed by the people of that State, and then in open town meeting the list is submitted for revision to every voter in the town and every voter passes upon the qualification of every man whose name enters into that jury-box. The towns may be divided by party politics; they may be shaken no matter how much, and the bitterness of party feeling may pervade every other consideration that comes up in that town meeting; but the man is not living, I believe, in that State who ever heard the politics of one of those men discussed in the town meeting. That is a matter, by common consent, by the judgment of the people, forever tabooed and barred from entering into the considerations that determine the fitness of jurors. You see that by this machinery it would be possible for a republican town to pack a jury-box with republicans, and a democratic town with democrats. The town I live in is very strongly democratic, politics intensely dividing its people, but I never heard in any of its town meetings the question what were the politics of a juryman, but the whole town enters into it as a part of its duty, as a part of the price they pay for the confidence they cherish, and maintain, and feel in the judgments of their courts, that they must personally attend to the qualification of their jurors.

Substantially that is the same, with the aid of minor and inconsiderable changes not affecting the principle, throughout all New England, and, so far as I know, wherever good and true juries are impaneled. So far as I could understand the method in Tennessee suggested by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BAILEY] on Saturday, and so far as I could learn that in Georgia as suggested by the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL] on Saturday, they have in them the same elements.

Now, sir, instead of all this, if this bill becomes a law, there may enter the United States court-house in Massachusetts or in any one of these States, a judge, who, instead of this method, may install in its place a commission of two rank politicians, who, instead of sending out to the several towns of the Commonwealth, each for a given number of jurors to be drawn from the jury-box in the way specified as I have read, sit in the court-room or some other dark room, and then those two men pass on the qualifications of the jurors, into whose keeping the dearest rights of my friend from Connecticut and myself as well as others who may be called into those courts, are to be passed. Two men are to be commissioners, one of them the clerk of the court, whatever may be his qualifications for determining the fitness of a jury; the other some man the only qualification required of whom in this statute is that he shall be of good standing in the principal opposing political party. The statute requires that the juryman shall be intelligent, of good moral character, but the man who selects him may be a shoulder-hitter in the purlieus of the streets of New York; he may be a man from the gutters of the streets of Boston; he may be without intelligence, and with less moral character, provided those with whom he associates like him, for that makes him "in good standing" with them.

It is proposed by this bill to make it lawful to substitute that method for the one under which we have grown up, and which we have learned to respect, and in which to have confidence. It is proposed, following out the series of measures to which I have alluded, not only to strip the United States courts of jurisdiction and confine the subjects-matter of their action to the narrowest possible limits, but the little matters that the Constitution itself has reposed in those courts, beyond the reach of this new effort at reform, are to be submitted by this insidious and covert, but on that very account more dangerous, method to the determination of a jury selected by these two men whose qualifications the bill does not even take the pains to say shall be such themselves as to make either of them fit for a juryman. The vilest man to be found in a party, Isaiah Rynders, or somebody of that class, provided he is in good standing with those with whom he associates, may select the jury to try men for their lives or settle their dearest rights; and that when there is a statute already existing providing that the courts themselves shall draw these jurors according to the methods existing in the States where the courts are held, conforming just as nearly to those methods in accomplishing it as is possible in the nature of the laws provided by those States. If, therefore, in any State of this Union there is any condition of things like that described here upon this floor, against which every good and just man ought to rebel in all his feelings and in all his judgment and make haste to correct—if there exists any such condition of things in any State, it is in the power of that State itself to correct it, because it arises from the imperfect jury system of the State itself, and that imperfect jury system in any State is not to be corrected by any such legislation as this. The difficulty lies deeper; the difficulty lies among the people of the State, and cannot be corrected by any such enactment as this; much less can it be corrected by enacting by law that the very spirit of party itself may, under the sanction of the law itself, take possession of the jury-box and administer under the sanctions of the law itself that function of the court that is in theory and ought in practice to be above and beyond the reach of all such malignant and perverse application.

Now, sir, if Senators who find difficulty in the application of the present law would look to the causes of that difficulty, would look to the fact that no sufficient and proper system is provided by law in those States, they would address themselves, if they are honestly desirous (as I have no reason to question they are) of improving the jury system of the United States courts, to providing a proper jury system in their own States, and then this statute of the United States comes in to take care of all the rest:

> Jurors to serve in the courts of the United States, in each State respectively, shall have the same qualifications, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, and be entitled to the same exemptions, as jurors of the highest court of law in such State may have and be entitled to at the time when such jurors for service in the courts of the United States are summoned; and they shall be designated by ballot, lot, or otherwise, according to the mode of forming such juries then practiced in such State court, so far as such mode may be practicable by the courts of the United States or the officers thereof.

Therefore it is in the power of every State to force the courts of the United States to adopt its jury system, and any court of the United States that shall depart from it impanels a jury whose verdict would be void and the Supreme Court would correct the error. So, Mr. President, there is not the slightest need of any such anomalous and pernicious provision as is in this bill. There is no need of doing what is now attempted for the first time, to clothe party politics with the mantle of statute authority and march it into the courts of the land and set it up as the presiding deity there. If Senators are desirous of improving the jury system in their own State or any other State, they have it in their power to make the jury system in the United States courts just what the public sentiment of their own State will uphold and maintain. If a different provision prevails anywhere the difficulty does not lie in the laws of the United States but in those laws of the States that establish and provide methods of obtaining juries. I am free to say, in the language of the distinguished Senators from Georgia [Mr. HILL] and New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] that if any judge of the United States court in any State that has provisions for drawing jurors established, well defined, fails to avail himself of those provisions as far as they go, he departs from the plain requirements of the statutes of the United States, and all that is done under such an order is void.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. So far as the Federal courts in my State are concerned, they have never attempted to obtain jurors in the mode in which they are obtained in the State courts, but the marshal is ordered to go and summon a jury. He summons such men as he sees proper. A case occurred in my State a few years ago in which I was credibly informed by the counsel engaged in the case where a gentleman was sued on an official bond, and the marshal went out and summoned jurors throughout the State, he summoned fifty men from Sussex County, in my State, and not one from Kent County, the residence of the defendant. The counsel who was engaged for the defense in that case charged—whether justly or not I am not sure; but he was a republican—that the marshal had purposely, for the purpose of obtaining a jury against his client, omitted to summon any jurors from the county in which the defendant lived, and summoned them all from another county, prejudicial to the county in which the defendant lived. The Federal courts have never attempted to follow our State system. We have a perfect system in the selection of jurors in the State courts.

Mr. DAWES. May I inquire of the Senator in what method they draw jurors in the State courts in his State?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes, sir. The levy court of the county select and place in the box a large number—I do not remember the precise number in each county—a large number of persons to serve as jurors. Out of that number the prothonotary of the court draws in the presence of the sheriff the men who are to serve as jurors in the respective counties, but no such system has ever obtained in the Federal courts in that State.

Mr. DAWES. I suppose your law defines the qualifications of jurors also, does it not, as of certain age, good moral character, and the like?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly; but that mode of selecting them the Federal courts have never followed.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator see any difficulty in the United States courts availing themselves of those provisions of his statute to secure a jury?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes, sir, I do. I say the practice is——

Mr. DAWES. The Senator does not quite understand me. I do not dispute that the practice is as he states, but what I asked was, did he see any difficulty in the United States courts following the State law?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do. In the first place they would have to have a jury-box in each of the counties composing the district. It may answer very well where, as in New York, a single county or part of a city forms a Federal judicial district; but when the judicial district is composed of different counties, it is wholly impracticable to put it in operation.

Mr. EATON. It is so in the State of New York. Each of the judicial districts consists of several counties.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Whether it is practicable or not, they do not attempt to carry it out.

Mr. DAWES. In the State of Massachusetts, when the United States court desires to impanel a jury the United States court sends out an order or a request to the selectmen of the towns all over the Commonwealth to draw from their jury-box a certain number of jurors for the United States court. What is to hinder the United States court in Delaware from sending out to the State officers to draw so many jurors. I do not see; but two things I see: if that provision is practicable, then the United States court is bound by it, and it is bound to follow it as far as it can, not to disregard it altogether because it cannot follow it altogether, but to follow it as far as it can, which is the language of the statute in substance; and if it fails to do so, it is in the power of any party aggrieved, through the Supreme Court to reverse and annul all that has been done; and I hold that it is the duty of parties aggrieved, through the agency of this court, established for the purpose of the correction of errors in courts below, to avail themselves of that right and that guarantee. But if the machinery for the drawing of juries in the State of Delaware, as I suggested in regard to other States, is so deficient that the United States courts cannot follow it, and the United States courts are therefore thrown upon a method of their own devising, then why does the State complain? Why do the States complain if they have failed themselves to provide a machinery for the drawing of good and proper jurors by the United States courts when the United States has imposed the duty by law upon its courts to avail themselves of that and not do otherwise? Why does the State complain then? Why does the State that thus complains come here and ask such legislation as will impose such a provision as is in this bill upon States that have with the greatest solicitude of all their citizens of all parties addressed themselves to the work of securing at all times and everywhere in all their courts an intelligent and impartial jury trial?

The distinguished Senator from Georgia told us on Saturday that this statute was sufficient, but that the trouble with it was that the judges in his locality and in the others where complaint is justly made if the facts are as they are stated here, did not construe the statute as it ought to be construed, according to its true meaning and intent. But this is not the first time that judges have misconstrued statutes. What is a high tribunal like the Supreme Court of the United States established here in Washington for but to correct the errors of the courts below? And when an error has been once corrected the judge that disregards that correction would expose himself to impeachment. There is no question about that. It is not necessary, therefore, even for the correction of the evil in its rankest form, in the States where the greatest amount of injury has been or may possibly be inflicted.

It is putting into the statute a power for a judge anywhere to inflict upon a community that has in its local and State legislation sufficiently protected itself against all of these evils and curses in the form of a vile and disreputable panel of jurors greater than any other I can conceive of in the management of public affairs; for whatever else may happen, whatever may go ill in any other department of the Government the people of the United States are comparatively safe so long as they have an august judicial tribunal within the pale of which party politics and party passión and party malignity may never enter, whose judgments, arrived at patiently and honestly, are judgments in which all the people confide and acquiesce. But, sir, the whole of this confidence and this security is staked in this bill upon the integrity, upon the intelligence, upon the impartiality of two men in a corner whose acts no man shall revise, for no man shall know them. The names they shall select to pass upon your rights and mine, I shall not know nor you. It is but necessary that one shall corrupt the other, it is but necessary that one or the other shall be lacking in moral qualities or in intellectual qualities, and the dearest rights of the citizens are wrecked; and all this in the name of reform; all this because there may be here and there a judge of the United States courts who, in the very language of the men who advocate this bill, departs from the true construction of the law of the land in the impaneling of juries for the trial of causes.

Sir, the Senator from Connecticut to some extent wisely reposed on Saturday on the high character of the judges that administer justice in the courts within his knowledge and affecting his rights. No such provision, unless imposed beyond escape by requirements of law, would ever be adopted by any judge of whatever political affiliation within any of those limits; but the Senator from Connecticut and myself do not know who to-morrow will sit in the places of those judges. There may come up from some other quarter, sent there under existing law, somebody who may have some other purposes to carry out, and the Senator proposes by his vote to authorize him by law to pick out in the city of Boston or the city of Hartford the most notorious of all the political men that border on one side or the other, provided he is in good standing with those he associates with, and set him to select a jury which, according to the customs under which he and I have lived, no one man ever did select, but the juror is chosen in open town-meeting by the vote of all the electors to what they deem to be a high trust, the duties of which he will discharge, laying aside at the door of the court-house every political affiliation, every political prejudice or passion which ever pervaded his breast. It is the opportunity established by law to overthrow that system which I say to the Senator and to the Senate will shock the mind of all justice-loving people of this land, enacted, if it be, without the slightest necessity, enacted, if it be, to supply a defect, an error of judgment, and not an error of statute; and so enacted as to inject into the whole system a virus which insidiously and darkly and unseen creeps over the whole system until in paralysis or in putrescence it falls.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few observations on this subject, and very few; but I want to do it when my friend the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] is here.

Mr. EATON. Wait a little while.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) Does the Senator suggest the want of a quorum?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do not think there is a quorum present. I will not trouble the Senate on that, however.

Mr. President, I feel it my duty to say something because of what occurred on Saturday. I came into the Senate Chamber in the midst of the argument being made by the Senator from New York. I caught during the latter portion of his argument what I thought was the main point he was then making, and I expressed my concurrence with his construction of the law as I understood it. I have examined his speech very carefully since the adjournment on Saturday, and I desire now, in a more formal and emphatic manner, to express my hearty concurrence in the legal view which he then presented. I did it qualifiedly on Saturday because I heard only a portion of his speech. While every sentence in his speech looking to the application of his argument I may not approve, I must say that the legal propositions submitted by the Senator on Saturday meet my absolute concurrence. I will read a portion of the remarks then made by the honorable Senator from New York. That Senator said:

> As the statutes stand now, as they have stood for a long time, not only in the State of New York, not only in the State of Pennsylvania, but in every one of all the States, juries for the national courts are drawn under the laws, usages, and regulations of the respective States, and the jurors have the qualifications of jurors in the States. My question to the Senator is this: How does it happen, indeed how can it happen, that juries in the national courts in any State are mis-selected or packed, unless that occurs either by a violation of existing law or by reason of defects in the laws of the States themselves?
> Let me now, if the Senator will allow me, restate this, because I have several times sought information on this point, and I find myself as ignorant as I was when the session began. Ever since 1802, indeed since a statute prior to that, preserved in all the statutes, in the statute of 1842 among others, is the provision that jurors to sit in a national or Federal court shall in every State be drawn, as far as practicable, according to the laws, usages, and practice of that State.
> Now I inquire how it can be in any State, unless the laws of that State are viciously defective, or unless the marshal, the judge, or the clerk of the court, (all of whom are triable and impeachable,) violate the law—how can it happen that juries are packed, that men of irresponsible or dissolute character are drawn upon juries? So far as I am informed of the laws of the States, no man's option selects the whole panel of jurors. They select themselves. How? Because they do or do not possess the qualifications required. In the State of New York a man must be a citizen between the age of twenty-one and the age of sixty. Then follows a long list of exemptions. If he be the superintendent of a mill he is exempt; if he serves in a fire company he is exempt; and so on. He must also be a freeholder or a tax-payer. No supervisor, the officer referred to by my colleague, determines who shall or who shall not go into the jury-box. The men who compete in the struggle of life determine that. A man who is a vagabond, a drunkard, an idler, a spendthrift, who is not a freeholder or tax-payer, never can get into the jury-box.

I am very sorry my friend, the Senator from New York, is not here.

> Why? Because by law he does not possess the qualifications that entitle any man, no matter what may be his politics or his political creed, like every other man, to go into the body of men from which the jury is drawn. Therefore the Senator will see that this does not rest upon anybody's option.
> Now I beg him to tell me how it can happen in a national court, the jury being drawn in accordance with the laws which prevail in the State courts and the usage in every instance, that a jury can be packed, unless the State has failed to pass laws in that regard, or unless the marshal or other officer defies and violates the law, for which he may be not only impeached and removed from office but for which he can be indicted under the statutes of the United States.

Sir, I indorse every word of that. I am indorsing the argument that if the law is faithfully followed and the law gives a good jury in the State courts, it necessarily gives a good jury in the Federal court. In other words, I am indorsing what the Senator from New York said, that the intent of the law as it now stands is that the Federal courts in selecting their juries shall be governed absolutely by the qualifications prescribed by the State laws, and as far as practicable by the methods of obtaining the juries in the State courts. That is what I say. I am not talking about what ought to be the qualifications of jurors.

After having made his point so strongly, the Senator pronounced further that in his judgment the bill now pending before the Senate is an indecent measure, because it proposes to abrogate the existing law which has existed since 1789 practically, and to provide a machinery by which politics is to be introduced into the jury-box, and men are to be chosen according to political affiliation. I wish it distinctly understood that I indorse that sentiment of the Senator; I agree with him there, with one slight modification only, and that is that the indecency is not to be charged upon the proposed law but upon the facts which make such a law necessary. If there are no facts which make the law necessary, then the law ought not to be enacted; if there are facts which make the law necessary, then it ought to be enacted; because the very object of law is to remedy evils, and sometimes very indecent ones, very improper ones.

Mr. President, I want to detain the Senate a very little while, because if the Senators on the other side of the Chamber will give me their attention I will show them why this measure or something like it is, as it seems to me, an absolute necessity; and I regret very much that it is so.

In 1868 we adopted in Georgia what is known as the reconstruction constitution. That constitution provides in relation to juries:

> The General Assembly shall provide by law for the selection of upright and intelligent persons to serve as jurors.

I know all about the history of that clause. It originated, as I said on Saturday, with what I considered the most intelligent and distinguished republican in the State of Georgia, a late Attorney-General of the United States. Of course the convention which adopted that constitution, I wish it distinctly understood, was a republican convention, and that constitution was ratified and approved by Congress before it became a constitution. Strange as those things may now seem, they are true. A State in framing a Constitution had to send it to Congress to be ratified! That constitution was sent here in 1868 and was ratified by a republican Congress, a Congress which was indeed two-thirds republican. So I am sure the gentlemen on the other side cannot complain of that clause in the constitution of Georgia.

On the 15th of February, 1869, the Legislature of Georgia passed an act to carry out this provision of the Constitution. This act was passed also by a republican Legislature. Among other things the act provided that a board of commissioners should be created, to consist of the ordinary of each county, the clerk of the superior court, and three freeholders, appointed by the presiding judge in that county of the superior court, the judge to be appointed by the governor, ratified by the senate; so that in 1869 every judge that we had in Georgia was appointed by a republican governor and ratified by a republican senate.

Now we have this state of things: we have a constitution providing the qualification of jurors, adopted by a republican convention, ratified and approved by a republican Congress; we have an act to carry out that constitution in relation to jury laws passed by a republican Legislature, and the machinery which the republican Legislature provided for the purpose of carrying out the jury law was that it was to be carried out by a board of commissioners, a majority of whom were appointed by a judge who himself was appointed by a republican governor and ratified by a republican senate. So you see the constitution, the law, and the machinery for carrying out that law were all republican. I state this particularly because I want to show how the evils have since grown up.

In 1871, soon after this law was passed, the United States courts in Georgia, the district court having circuit court jurisdiction at that time, adopted a rule. By that rule the marshal was instructed to procure from the superior court clerk for each county in his district a certain number of names of the "most upright and intelligent persons" between the ages of twenty-one and sixty years, to be taken from the jury lists of the county, without regard to race or color.

Under that rule, which was adopted precisely to carry out the State law and showing that it was perfectly practicable to carry out the State law by the Federal courts, our Federal courts acted for two years. I will say here that under this law, thus passed, as I say, by a republican Legislature, the whole machinery provided by a republican government, we procured as good juries both for the State courts and for the Federal courts as I ever saw impaneled. I take special pleasure in saying upon the subject of jury law, as to the jury-box, that we have had no cause in Georgia to complain of the republican State government, and never have complained.

But this rule was changed. On the 7th of December, 1872, a circuit judge having come into the State, Judge Woods, the rule was changed, and to this change I wish to call the attention of the Senate. Let me say, that the Senate may understand the change, that by the act of 1869, under which these juries were impaneled in the State courts, the board of commissioners were instructed to take for jurors upright and intelligent men from the tax-books of the respective counties, and to do so without regard to race or color, and the same rule was observed in the Federal courts by the order adopted in 1871 to impanel jurors in the Federal courts. But in 1872, on the 7th of December, another order was passed:

ORDER OF COURT AMENDING JURY RULES.

The court shall appoint three of the United States commissioners residing in the southern district of Georgia, and the said commissioners with the marshal for the district of Georgia, and the clerk of the court, shall, within thirty days after the adjournment of this court, select from the body of the southern district of Georgia five hundred upright and intelligent persons, citizens of said district, between the ages of twenty-one and sixty years, without regard to race, color, or previous condition, to serve as jurors.

Mark you, under the act of the Legislature to carry out the Constitution, the board of commissioners were instructed to select upright and intelligent persons from the tax-books, and this rule was observed by the Federal court by its order passed in 1871. By the new order passed in 1872 the United States commissioners were required to select five hundred upright and intelligent persons from whom? From the jury-box of the State? No. From the tax-books of the State? No; but from the body of citizens, without regard to the jury-box of the State and without regard to the tax-books of the State. Mark the language: "From the body of the southern district" they are to select "five hundred upright and intelligent persons," citizens of the district.

Mr. ALLISON. Did those three commissioners select the five hundred names, or did the clerk and the marshal act with them?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The clerk and the marshal acted with them.

Mr. ALLISON. Making a commission of five?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes, but mark, just as I stated, the law of the State, passed by a republican Legislature, created a board of commissioners, authorized them to select the juries from the tax-books in each county, upright and intelligent persons between the ages of twenty-one and sixty, and the Federal court in 1871 adopted that rule, and requested the clerks of the several counties to send up lists of names to the clerk of the Federal court, thereby to constitute the Federal jury-box, whereby you perceive that section 800 of the Revised Code was properly and literally followed, by which we obtained in the Federal court exactly the same class of jurors that we had in the State courts. I am sorry my friend from New York is not here. My friend from New York asked over and over, "If your State laws are good, if under your State laws you get good juries, how can you get bad juries in the Federal courts? How can you get irresponsible and dissolute characters in the juries in the Federal courts, because," said he, "the judges and the marshals are compelled to obey the State law; they are compelled to select men qualified according to the State law; and if they do not do it they are impeachable." Now I want to answer my friend.

Mr. CONKLING entered the Chamber.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I am gratified to see the bright face of my friend, and I know he will be gratified when I tell him that I am indorsing him in the fullest terms. I say to the Senator from New York that I indorsed his construction of section 800 on last Saturday, as I understood him, coming into the Senate as I did in the midst of his argument. Since that, I have examined the whole argument, and I now indorse it without qualification, except as to some of its applications. But as to the legal construction which the Senator puts upon that statute, I have indorsed it fully, and I am now answering the Senator's question, which, as he has come in, I will repeat to him briefly.

The Senator from New York asked the question over and over, and I have thought with a great deal of pertinency and force, "How can it be that you can fail to get"—that is the substance of his query—"as good a jury in the Federal courts as you have in the State courts if the law is obeyed?" That is right; how can you? I explained to the Senate, in the absence of the distinguished Senator from New York, that under the act of the State of Georgia in organizing juries the board of commissioners are required to select persons to serve on the juries, upright and intelligent persons, from the tax-books of the respective counties and put them in the box, and then it describes how they are to be drawn. As I have already said, the Federal court, in 1871, passed an order by which it requested the clerk to call on the clerks of the superior courts in the respective counties having charge of the jury lists to send up lists of qualified jurors to constitute a jury-box for the Federal court. I say to the Senator, and he will see that I agree with him, there is no trouble whatever where the parties are willing to obey the law in adapting its provisions to the Federal courts; and we have demonstrated in Georgia, by the very rule of which I speak, adopted in 1871, that it worked well. We did have as good juries as I ever saw in the history of the State since my recollection impaneled both in the State courts and in the Federal courts. But in 1872, on the 7th of December, the Federal judges changed the rule, and instructed the marshal and the clerk of the Federal court, with three commissioners, to select five hundred intelligent and upright persons to serve as jurors in the Federal court, not from the jury-boxes of the State, not from the places where the jurors in the State courts were procured, from the tax-books, which the Senator from New York very correctly said was proper—these five hundred men were not to be selected from either source, but they were to be selected from the body of the citizens only. Do you not perceive, therefore, that where there is a district composed, as is the southern district of Georgia, of about eighty counties, containing about one hundred thousand voters, the Federal officers being authorized to select five hundred men from that great number to serve as jurors, they went about and picked whom they pleased? They were not bound to look at the tax-books; they were not bound to be governed by the State laws; they were not bound to look at the jury-boxes of the State, but they just selected whom they chose. Out of that hundred thousand they selected five hundred to constitute the juries.

Will any Senator tell me why that change was made? I call the attention of my friend, the Senator from New York, to the direct fact that the order of 1872 passed by the Federal court was a direct and unconditional abrogation of the order of 1871 passed by the Federal court. The order of 1871 obtained juries for the Federal court qualified according to the State law, impaneled as near as may be according to the mode of the State law, whereas the rule of 1872 totally reversed that rule, totally abrogated that rule, and did impanel five hundred men without regard to the jury-box of the State, without regard to the tax-books of the State, and without regard to the laws of the State, except they put in as a catchword that they must be upright and intelligent.

Mr. ALLISON. What sort of juries did they get?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. It is unpleasant for me to state, but I will say frankly that they obtained jurors under the last order who were utterly disqualified according to the State law. I only wish, without using epithets, that the Senators on the other side could see the change as it actually was. I say frankly for myself that from that day to this only when absolutely compelled have I appeared in the Federal court at all. I do not believe there has been a jury in the Federal courts in Georgia in the last six years that my friend from New York would not adjudge to be an illegal jury.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire, as I have been out during the great part of the Senator's remarks, to what point involved in this proceeding now before the Senate does the Senator's argument tend? That he may understand me exactly, I think I may presume that the Senator from Georgia as a lawyer does not think that a good reason for changing a law is found in the fact that in some instance somebody has disregarded it or departed from it.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I will say to the Senator frankly that I am arguing that very point, the very point made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MCDONALD] on Saturday in the discussion between him and the Senator from New York. I admit that ordinarily the Senator's remarks would be true, that because a judge misconstrued a law that was no reason for changing the law; but where the courts have adopted that construction and are acting upon it and there is no other practical remedy for it, then the legislative power ought to intervene.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will pardon me, for I presume he is pursuing, as I am, real light upon this subject——

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. I will suggest to him, and I feel quite sure in advance that he will concur with me that there is a mode, one mode, a true mode, of reaching by legislation such a correction as he now indicates. I say a true mode, because long experience and universal concurrence have pointed it out as a true mode, namely, not to alter the whole law radically, not to rake a plowshare over its foundations, but to re-enact, reassert with more particularity, if more particularity is found necessary, the features of the law which have been mistaken, overlooked, misunderstood, misconstrued. So that, applying my suggestion to the present case, if it be true that the national judges in Georgia, holding as one of them did in a reported case, that a minute observance of the State laws was not required by this statute, have held further, as the Senator from Georgia has no doubt been reciting, although owing to my absence from the Chamber on the business of the Senate I was deprived of the pleasure of hearing a part of his remarks, then I submit the true way would be not to prostrate this law, not to repeal it, not to cast it out, but to add to it so much of particularity and definition as would guard against any future misunderstanding.

I submit further to the Senator that his observations in place of being adapted to maintain such a bill as this, all tend, if I understand them, to show the value of the law which this bill is to supersede. They all tend to show that if the statutes of the United States as they have stood so long were now executed as the Senator understands them and as I understand them, everything would be accomplished which any one ought to wish. That is the tendency of his remarks; and yet knowing as I do the fealty which that Senator owes to party, knowing as I do, despite all his fertility of resource and all his independence of character and all the confidence that he has a right to feel in his individual judgment, that he walks under the yoke of the party to which he belongs, and knowing that the charioteer of the party as to this bill, the learned and eloquent Senator from Pennsylvania whom it grieves me to miss now from his seat, has sent out an order throughout all the seats occupied by democrats that this bill is to be voted, I take it for granted that the honorable Senator from Georgia is to walk at the chariot wheel, and as often as his name is called is to vote "yea," the proposition being to substitute a political caucus hereafter for a jury, for that is all this means.

When you have appointed a commissioner in violation of the Constitution, let me say, (if the Senator chooses I will tell him what I mean by that,) to stand on one side and represent one party, and provided for another person to stand on the other side and represent another party, and to make up a jury by putting in so many of each, I say, and the Senator from Georgia with his experience knows that I am warranted in saying, that that means to submit issues to be tried in court hereafter to a political caucus, to men selected for their politics. If I thought it would do any good I would appeal to the Senator from Georgia before he assents to that, before he allows the day to come when such a change, never before heard of where civilized jurisprudence exists, shall be made, to at least try the experiment of amending the existing law so as to make it plain past the commission of such an error as he thinks was committed in the instance to which he has referred. But then I know, Mr. President, it is idle. The Senator from Georgia is not deaf; he will hear the appeal; but that is all the good it will do. I can tell him exactly, if he will allow me, how he will be situated. He will be situated exactly as a juror was in trying the question of the freedom of one of the fugitive slaves, referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts, who put his eye upon the North Star and ran toward the dominions of the British Queen seeking liberty in former days. He was overhauled in Boston and tried there, and when the jury came to be impaneled, on the front seat in the jury-box sat the man at whose house this fugitive slave had staid over night when he reached there. A member of the bar, this being ascertained, was applied to by the district attorney to know what sort of a verdict he thought that juror would find. "Why," he said, "he is a perfectly honest man, and he will find strictly according to the evidence; but my impression is it will take a great deal of evidence to convince him that one man can own another." [Laughter.] Just so with the Senator from Georgia. He will find strictly according to the law and the reason of this case; but it will take an immense amount of law and an immense amount of reason to show him that he ought to vote any way except as a good, regular democrat in the best of standing should vote, after the order has gone out that that vote is to be "yea" and not "nay," no matter what amendment may be offered.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The Senator from New York certainly cannot complain that I have been impatient. I have allowed him to make a speech and propound questions, and he has made such a long speech and such an able speech and propounded so many questions that I find it very difficult to take them up and answer them.

Mr. CONKLING. Knowing how the Senator from Georgia polishes all his utterances, I thought he would like to sit a little while and rearrange, so as to be more methodical and eloquent than he would be if he proceeded without a little pause in the midst of his remarks.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I always sit with patience when the Senator from New York is speaking; I do not want to interpose because he is a great actor. If the Senator had been in when I commenced he would have heard me quote that portion of his speech wherein he pronounced political legislation of this character to be indecent, in grand and eloquent phraseology.

Mr. CONKLING. Does it appear so in the RECORD?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. CONKLING. I am glad of it; I have not read it.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. And I have indorsed every word uttered by the Senator from New York with one single qualification, and that is, I say we should direct our indignation to the indecent facts which make the legislation necessary. I concur that unless in my judgment there was a clear case making this legislation necessary and proper, I would with the Senator from New York utterly denounce it. I am opposed to introducing politics, even indirectly or in any manner, shape, or form, into the administration of justice if it can be possibly prevented; but when politics has already been introduced, when the courts have introduced politics, when they have violated the laws of the country in order to introduce politics, and when they have in many of the States of this Union juries expressly impaneled because of their adverse politics to the population of the State, then I say it is necessary to provide legislation to prevent that evil. The indecency is in the state of the case, and not in the remedy provided for it. I am sure if the distinguished Senator from New York could have been where I was when this revolution was wrought in the jury lists of our Federal courts in Georgia, he would appreciate every word I say. I am not going to state to the Senate, unless I am provoked to do so, many facts upon this subject which perhaps ought to be stated; but I will say that I have as an American citizen stood and seen juries impaneled, in my judgment contrary to the laws of the United States, certainly contrary to the construction of those laws as placed on them by the Senator from New York and by myself. I have seen juries so impaneled take charge of and pass upon the life, the liberty, and the property of the citizen, who were expected to do it solely from a prejudiced, partisan stand-point, and who were impaneled for that purpose. I have seen it not only in one case, but, sir, I have seen it as a system. Hundreds of citizens of my own State have been arraigned before juries impaneled for the express purpose of convicting beforehand. I trust no Senator will require me to give the specific facts to verify this general statement. It is true, and I stand prepared to make it good; and it was done under this order which impaneled a jury not from the body of jurors as qualified by the State laws, not from the citizenship of the State as placed in the State jury-box, as I admit with the Senator from New York is the requisition of section 800 of the Revised Statutes, not from the tax-books of the State, but from the body of the citizens, selected in the discretion of the Federal officers, utterly ignorant of the population, and having no interest or sympathy in common with that population whatever.

I want to call the attention of the Senator to another fact. I will forbear to state a reason given by one of the judges himself why the change in this order was made. It was expected to change the character of the jury. This is strong language, but it is true. I want to call the attention of the Senator from New York to this fact, for I see his mind is perfectly fair on this question, as I believe it is; I know mine is. Before doing so I want to say in response to a portion of the Senator's remarks, that even with my knowledge of the facts which justify this measure or some similar legislation, and I think one more vigorous than the one mentioned by the Senator from New York, I would not vote for this bill even under party dictation, assuming all that the Senator has said about the power of party discipline, if it did not contain the clause read so appropriately by my distinguished friend from Connecticut on Saturday. It compels no judge and no court to adopt the objectionable features of this bill to which the Senator from New York has called attention. No court of this Union, after this bill has been passed, will be compelled to appoint this partisan commissioner, and the partisan commissioner with a partisan clerk will be under no obligation to select jurors according to their political affiliations alternately, a democrat selecting one, a republican selecting one, until they have made up a jury list of three hundred.

Mr. CONKLING. I think the Senator will withdraw or modify what he has said if he will read this bill. He said that no judge in any district would be bound to proceed under this law. Does he mean that?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Under the feature to which the Senator called attention, the partisan feature.

Mr. CONKLING. Exactly. Does the Senator mean that?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes, sir; I do.

Mr. CONKLING. Just observe the language:

> But nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any judge—> in a district in which such is now the practice.

Where?—

Why does the Senator say, how can he say, remembering these words, that it does not require in any district what he describes as the objectionable feature of this bill to be applied? Certainly he will modify that statement on reflection.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Oh, no. I will say to my friend that I had observed every word of this bill, and the very criticism which he now makes had occurred to me. At one time I thought it would be advisable to strike out the words "in a district in which such is now the practice." I think the measure would be much better with those words stricken out. I am dealing very frankly with the Senator from New York. I say frankly I would prefer those words out; but when properly construed it is only because of this clause in the bill that I would vote for the section at all; and here it is:

But nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any judge in a district in which such is now the practice from ordering the names of jurors to be drawn from the boxes used by the State authorities in selecting jurors in the highest courts of the State.

That does not affect my friend from New York; it does not affect my friend from Connecticut; it does not affect any Northern State. Why? Because I believe the practice now is in all those States for the Federal judges to draw the jurors from the State boxes or from lists made up of names in the State boxes. I have not heard any gentleman say anything to the contrary. That is the law, and that is what ought to be done; so that this measure will not change the practice in New York or in any State where the practice now is to draw Federal jurors from the names of those who are qualified under the State law.

Mr. ALLISON. That is not the practice in my State.

Mr. DAWES. Does it not authorize such a change?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. What does the Senator say?

Mr. DAWES. I inquired of the Senator from Georgia whether it did not authorize such a change in New York and Connecticut?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I have admitted that.

Mr. DAWES. Suppose there should happen to be a judge sent there who did not agree with the judge now there?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I have admitted that.

Mr. DAWES. Has not the Senator from Georgia expressed any objection to the enacting of that into a law?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I take it for granted that no man would be sent as a judge to Massachusetts who would administer the obnoxious features of this proposed law as denounced by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from New York.

Mr. DAWES. Would the Senator enact in a law that we never shall have any poorer judges than we have got now?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. With all due deference to my friend from Massachusetts, he is not meeting the question I am making. I say that that portion of this measure which he and the Senator from New York have denounced as so obnoxious need not be enforced in their States.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator from Georgia will yield a moment, with all due respect to him, I submit to him to answer for himself whether he has answered the question I put to him.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The Senator has put no question that authorizes an answer. I am answering a question put by the Senator from New York, which I suppose was propounded when the Senator from Massachusetts was not listening or was not in the Hall. I have admitted that under this law the judges would be authorized to impanel juries in the manner stated.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator, if he will allow me, if that is not an objection to the proposed law?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Certainly; I admitted it in plain language, as the Senator would have heard if he had listened to me, and I have admitted that it is so objectionable that but for this other clause I would not vote for it.

Mr. DAWES. But the objection I put to the Senator he does not seem to understand

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes, I do perfectly understand the Senator, and I ask him with all kindness to forbear, for his question has nothing to do with the point I am discussing.

Mr. DAWES. I certainly shall forbear, for it is perfectly evident to me the Senator does not understand my question.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I should like to answer the question propounded by my friend from Massachusetts, but I see he is putting a question which, if he had heard the whole discussion, he would see is unnecessary. I am arguing with the Senator from New York. I say that while I admit with him that the very idea of introducing into the system of impaneling a jury these partisan questions, by which one party is to select a democrat and another party is to select a republican, or whatever may be the opposing party, is objectionable, while I have indorsed all the language that the eloquent Senator from New York has applied concerning it, I still say that under this bill the judges are not bound to resort to that system.

Mr. CONKLING. In certain districts.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I will come to that directly, if my friend will only permit me to go on. But they may observe what he and I believe to be the present law. In any States which have observed the law heretofore, as he and I understand the law to be, and as I have no doubt the law is, it does not prevent the Federal courts from continuing that law as it now is. So it does not affect New York; so it does not affect Massachusetts. They need not complain of this measure.

Mr. ALLISON. But it does affect Iowa.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I will come to Iowa. Iowa ought to be taught better manners anyhow, [laughter;] not the Senator, but the State; she behaves very badly, and I am afraid this measure will not be sufficient to reach her.

Mr. ALLISON. As the Senator states that Iowa has bad manners, will he allow me a moment?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do not mean the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course I know the Senator does not mean that; but the Senator admits that the general provisions of this bill are vicious and bad, and he says but for the fact that there is a saving clause in it he would not vote for it. Now, that saving clause found in this bill cannot be applied to Iowa, because we do not draw our Federal jurors from the State boxes.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Very well; I will come to that directly. I think the judges in Iowa have heretofore done wrong, and therefore I do not think the Senator ought to complain of the wrong because the judge has done wrong.

Mr. ALLISON. He is a very good democrat.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do not know that he has done wrong; but if he does not draw the jurors from the State boxes he does wrong; that is my judgment. I do not say he must take the State boxes and draw out of the identical boxes, but I say the names to constitute a jury in the Federal box must be found, if the law is administered, in the State jury-boxes. That is what I say; and the Senator from New York agrees with me, I have no doubt. The Senator from Iowa would agree with me also, but he says that is not observed in his State. Then the Federal judge in his State does not observe the law; that is all I have got to say.

Therefore, I repeat that under this saving clause every State certainly that has heretofore observed the law can continue the present system of impaneling in the Federal courts juries qualified according to the State laws, and the obnoxious feature of the present measure so denounced by the Senator from New York will have no effect upon them whatever. Now I come to the clause referred to by the Senator from New York. He says that there are qualifying words in this clause, this exemption or exception:

But nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any judge in a district in which such is now the practice.

I think frankly with my friend that these words ought to be stricken out. I do not think there ought to be anything in this bill to prevent a Federal judge in any State, whether that is his practice now or has not been his practice, from taking the jurors from the States boxes. Then my friend will see what will be the result. The effect of this measure would be what? Not to administer that obnoxious feature that he talks about, which he so eloquently denounces, but to compel the Federal judges in the different States to go back to the law as it now is and to administer it as it now is.

Mr. CONKLING. It would be a good deal better no doubt.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I knew we should agree. I see the Senator's mind is right on this thing, and I know mine is, and I meet him in that spirit of fairness which I think all Senators ought to exhibit in this Chamber. Then what do I say? The existing practice is indecent because of a system which has grown up in some of the States which the Senator from New York abhors as much as I do, and which he agrees with me in saying is a violation of the existing law, and it is an evil which must be remedied. What is the system proposed to remedy it? It is a system to compel the judges who now appoint commissioners to select jurors, not from the State jury-boxes, but to select five hundred men from one hundred thousand voters, to constitute a jury list out of which jurors shall be selected for several years, to appoint commissioners of different politics. Why? So as to get a jury list composed of men of both parties instead of getting a jury composed of one party. The evil that we wish to correct has grown up in the administration of the law, which my friend from New York has condemned, to his credit. It is a practice which has disregarded the existing law, which has disregarded the State laws, and under which juries are impaneled composed of men who are not qualified according to the State laws—who are disqualified positively by the State laws, who cannot be found in the State jury-boxes. That practice has grown up and obtains now. I speak what I know when I say that it obtains now, though less now than a few years formerly, and under it juries are obtained in the Federal courts exclusively of one politics. That is the evil we would correct.

I agree with the Senator from New York that it is an outrage, it is an indecent thing, that there has to be such an evil in this country to be corrected; but judges, learned judges, conscientious judges, able judges in the South have interpreted this act of 1840, compiled in section 800 of the code, different from what the Senator from New York and I say it is. They have put such a construction on it that here I hold in my hand an order of the Federal court in Georgia ordering the marshal, clerk, and certain commissioners that the judge appoints to select men to serve on the juries, not taken from the jury-boxes of the State, not from the tax-books of the State, not from the men qualified by the laws of the State, but from the body of citizens indiscriminately; and they can select anybody they please. I tell my friend from New York that under this law a partial marshal can, without violating the order, select the worst and most irresponsible vagabonds in the State.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire of the Senator from Georgia who is the marshal of that State?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The marshal now is Mr. Fitzsimmons.

Mr. CONKLING. How long has he been marshal?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Over a year.

Mr. CONKLING. These evils have not occurred there since he has been marshal?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I say to the Senator that there has been an improvement, but the marshal alone does not comprise this board of commissioners; the marshal alone under the judge does not do it; it is the clerk and the three commissioners appointed by the court, as well as the marshal.

Mr. ALLISON. Is the clerk a strong partisan? What sort of a man is he?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. He is a republican, a very strong partisan, and we have had boards of commissioners down there, republicans, who to my certain knowledge, instead of going into the counties and getting the names of jurors out of a jury-box, got them from the party list, and the most notorious partisans of different colors have been selected. I have seen it with my own eyes, and no one man can prevent it. I have myself advised men charged with minor offenses to go and submit and depend upon the mercy of the court, rather than I would go and defend them before some of the juries impaneled.

Mr. CONKLING. They were guilty, of course?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do not know whether they were; they said they were not. Did you ever hear a man say he was guilty?

Mr. CONKLING. I ask their counsel, not them.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do not know, but they said they were innocent, and I believe a great many of them were.

Mr. CONKLING. You always believe that of your clients?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The Senator says no innocent man has been punished. I believe, sir, hundreds and thousands of innocent men have been punished in the South in the last few years, and many of them because of the very evil practices that have grown up in violation of law, as the Senator from New York himself believes it to be.

Mr. CONKLING. But the Senator does not believe that has been done by the courts and juries——

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes, I do; I believe there have been a great many improper convictions.

Mr. CONKLING. I was going to concur with the Senator. I believe hundreds and thousands of innocent men have been punished, but not by courts and juries.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Some by courts and juries, and some have submitted to punishment rather than trust to the courts and juries, because the idea has gone out, to encourage them to plead guilty, "it will be better for you; the punishment will be lighter." The man is in this predicament: he comes up and sees a jury impaneled that he knows will convict him, whether he is innocent or guilty; and there is whispered in his ear, "If you plead guilty the punishment will not be so great." Hundreds of men have gone into court and pleaded guilty, protesting their innocence.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the Senator another question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) Does the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I cannot refuse the Senator from New York, though I am taking too much time owing to these interruptions.

Mr. CONKLING. When I get an opportunity of asking a question of a really good lawyer I want to improve my opportunity to enlarge my stock of information.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Thank you.

Mr. CONKLING. Therefore if I tease the Senator a little with the multitude of my questions, he must forgive me. I wish the Senator would do me the favor to read lines 16 and 17 of section 3 of the bill, which he agrees with me in thinking is an indecent provision, and I concur with him in thinking so too:

> By the clerk of such court and a commissioner, to be appointed by the judge thereof, which commissioner shall be a citizen of good standing, residing in the district in which such court is held, of good standing—

I am not going to ask the Senator what those two "of good standings" mean.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I rather think I could not answer.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator could not tell me what they mean?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I doubt whether I could answer.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator and myself exchange ideas for a moment, I can give my impression which is that it is intended by the use of a double affirmative to prove a negative, so as to provide that they need not be of good standing; but I did not rise to trouble the Senator with that. "To be appointed by the judge thereof." I want to ask the Senator whether he has any doubt that that provision is in plain violation of the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I have not investigated that, I will say frankly to the Senator. Why does he think it a violation?

Mr. CONKLING. The Constitution of the United States declares that the President shall appoint officers, and so on—

> But the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

Now, having read that provision of the Constitution to the Senator, it is unnecessary with him that I go further and remind him that it has been decided repeatedly, until as I suppose no lawyer any longer doubts, that Congress has no power to deposit with a judge the right to make appointments of anything. Congress has authority to deposit the power of appointment with the court, but the judge is not the court.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I see the point perfectly.

Mr. CONKLING. The judge is not the court; and in this connection as a commissioner is to be appointed by the judge, let me ask what is to be the tenure of this commissioner's office? Somebody has said, "Once a bishop always a bishop." If this man is once appointed, does he continue forever, while he lives, to be a commissioner? Does he hold his office for a term? Does he hold it during the good pleasure of the court, in the language of the common law? If another commissioner is appointed by another judge who comes along, are there to be two commissioners? Does the latter supersede the former, or does the former continue to exist, and if he does, does he remain a commissioner de facto, as I heard argued in the case of presidential electors, or de jure, or neither, or both, or what is to be the particular nature of this curiously composite piece of furniture which is to be brought into the Federal courts?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I will answer the question of the Senator from New York very frankly. I say to him that as an original proposition I should doubt the constitutionality of the word "judge" here. When the Senator first asked me if I admitted it to be constitutional, as my attention had not been called to it, I did not understand his question. Now I do understand it. As an original proposition, I should not use that word, for I see the difficulty suggested by the Senator from New York very clearly, it is a very forcible one; but I will say to the Senator that in existing legislation the same thing has been done, and it has been so upheld that I forbear to give any such opinion.

Mr. CONKLING. Where?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. In appointing supervisors of election, for instance.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The judge has authority as the court in that case.

Mr. HEREFORD. The Senator from Georgia will allow me to say that if the position taken by the Senator from New York be correct, then I take it that we have not a constitutional clerk of any district or circuit court of the United States, for they are appointed by the judges.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. That is what I was going to say.

Mr. HEREFORD. Section 555 of the Revised Statutes provides that—

> A clerk shall be appointed for each district court by the judge thereof, except in cases otherwise provided by law.

Then there is no constitutional clerk.

Mr. CONKLING. How is that?

Mr. HEREFORD. There is no clerk who is a constitutional officer if the judge cannot appoint him. That is the way the law reads.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. If my friend will allow me, I said to the Senator from New York that a different rule had so long obtained and had so long been practiced upon that I cannot agree with him as to the constitutionality of such an appointment.

Mr. CONKLING. What section is that?

Mr. HEREFORD. Section 555.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. There are plenty of such instances, I will say to the Senator from New York——

Mr. HEREFORD. It does not fall within that provision of the Constitution at all.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that whatever may have been my impression when the question was first presented, that mode has been practiced so often that I will not say it is unconstitutional. I will yield what might have been my first impression, and say it must have been wrong. I am dealing frankly with the Senator from New York, and I will give him one instance. He will find one instance in the law where, upon application properly made, the judge may appoint persons to superintend the elections. I forget the exact language.

Mr. HEREFORD. The judge appoints all the registers in bankruptcy.

Mr. CONKLING. No, he does not.

Mr. HEREFORD. Then nobody is relieved in bankruptcy if the appointment by the judge is unconstitutional.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator is wrong again.

Mr. HEREFORD. I am not wrong.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Let me go on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from West Virginia has been kind enough in his infinite goodness and mercy to take off the hands of the Senator from Georgia and off my hands a little dialogue that I was holding with the Senator from Georgia. For one, I am extremely grateful to the Senator from West Virginia for the aid he has afforded me in the arduous attempt which I was making to ask a question of the Senator from Georgia, which I thought that Senator was abundantly competent to answer; and having returned my thanks to him, I will say to the Senator from Georgia that all the provisions relating to supervisors carefully provide what the court shall do. Section 550, which somebody mentioned, does not say at all that the judge is to make any appointment of the clerk.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. My friend will allow me——

Mr. CONKLING. One thing more and I have done. The section touching the registers in bankruptcy was originally obnoxious to this objection; it was changed afterwards to save the constitutional point, and the registers were appointed by the district court and the chief-justice of the supreme court acting together.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I have, I think, been very liberal to gentlemen on the other side in allowing interruptions, but I must get through, and they must excuse me from further interruption. There is no trouble in the world about the question, if my friend from New York and my friend from West Virginia had waited a moment; but the difficulty is when I commence answering a question, gentlemen commence putting in before I get through, as my friend from New York did. If he had allowed me to get through there would have been no trouble between us at all. Now, I say to my friend from New York again as an original proposition, I should have drawn a distinction between the word "judge" and the word "court;" and that the word "judge" applied in a statute did not mean the same as the word "court" used in the Constitution. I would say that as an original proposition; but I tell him the practice in so many instances has varied from that, and the power to appoint these employés or subordinates for temporary purposes, and even sometimes for more than temporary purposes, has been so long confided to judges by name, that I have abandoned that construction. I only mentioned one instance. The language of the law is there "court;" but I remind my friend that elections frequently are held when there is no court in session, and the judge always appoints the supervisors; it is the act of the judge.

Mr. CONKLING. Not at all, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do not know how it is in the Senator's State; but in my State the appointment is made by the judge; that is, the power conferred may be exercised by the judge when there is no court in session. The power there by the language of the act is given to the court, but the judge is to exercise it. So my friend from West Virginia has very kindly said, and I thank him, (I should have thought of it perhaps,) that in the case of the clerks of district courts they are appointed by the district judges. I tell the Senator from New York that in my State the clerk of the circuit court is appointed by the judge, and a great many officers I know are appointed by the judge.

Mr. CONKLING. Name one.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The clerk is appointed by the judge; the register in bankruptcy is appointed by the judge.

Mr. CONKLING. Under what section?

Mr. HEREFORD. I will read it to the Senator:

SEC. 555. A clerk shall be appointed for each district court by the judge thereof, except in cases otherwise provided for by law.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. My friend will excuse me from further interruption. I tell him frankly that this confusion of terms has been used very often, and really it has ceased to be a question. As an original matter I see the force of what the Senator suggests.

Mr. CONKLING. If an original matter, it is still true; for the section the Senator has read has nothing to do with it.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. There are a great many cases. If you hold that officers to do these temporary duties of various character cannot be appointed by a judge, then there have been a thousand things done in this country which are illegal and unconstitutional. But I will not delay the Senate on that point.

The Senator from New York asked me how long this commissioner will hold his term of office. Of course I should say as a judge that at each court, at each impaneling of a jury, at each time the jury has to be impaneled, at least when the list has to be made up, there would have to be a commissioner appointed. The court is to appoint a commissioner for a specific purpose, for a specific given act, and when that act is performed the authority of the commissioner ceases. I think there is no trouble on that point. I think there is no trouble with this measure at all as raised by the Senator from New York, and I say with that slight amendment in the clause to which I referred, so as to relieve the State of my friend from Iowa and any other States that may have behaved badly on this subject, I am willing to knock out a few words and let all the judges in all the States avoid this trouble about political partisans, about the appointing of commissioners of different politics in the State, by going back to the law as it now is, by going back to the law as it ought always to have been administered, just as the Senator from New York says it is, just as I say it is—by going back and selecting United States juries out of the jury-boxes of the State. That is the remedy for the whole of it, and that this bill gives.

That is the right remedy; it is a complete remedy; and it gives to the winds all this fuss and noise that the distinguished Senators on the other side are making about this partisan jury law. Nobody wants a partisan jury law. The courts have made it a partisan jury; we must have remedy for it; and if the construction of the courts as practiced in my State be true that they have a right to depart from the State system and adopt a system of their own, then require them by law so to carry out that system as that each party shall have an equal chance. That is all we ask. Partisanship ought not to be in it. They have put it in it; the courts have put it in it; we feel it; we know it, and we say to the legislative power, "compel these courts to abandon these partisan juries, or give all parties an equal chance." That is all we say.

Now I want to read one thing and I shall stop. I have been interrupted so much that I have occupied a great deal of time. I thought I should take but a few minutes when I rose. I want to call the attention of the Senator from New York and the Senator from Iowa and all the Senators on the other side to another thing. We in Georgia in attacking this order of December 7, 1872, attacked it upon the very ground stated here by the Senator from New York, that under it there would be jurors in the Federal courts that did not have the qualifications the jurors in State courts were required to have. The judges overruled that position and held that the order of December 7, 1872, was a legal order, and that they had a right to depart from the State rule. Then we made this issue; I read now from the United States vs. Collins, page 510 of Wood's Reports:

The other causes of challenge assigned are that the jurors were not designated, selected, and drawn in accordance with the rule, but that, contrary thereto, they were designated with reference to their race, color, and condition; and that they were selected, not by the persons appointed by the court for that purpose, but upon private information from irresponsible persons—and not from the body of citizens of the district, but from certain classes thereof, under private instructions from some of the persons appointed to make the selection as to the status, color, and political bias of the persons whose names were to be furnished to make up the panel.

Look at the strength of this issue. I call attention to it—

The Senator from New York over and over on Saturday said, "How can a jury be packed if the law is obeyed?" I admit if the law is followed it cannot be done; and when this order of 1872 was held to be legal, although it issued to the body of the citizens, we made the point then that the jurors actually impaneled were not impaneled according to that order, but were impaneled according to private information for personal and party effect. See how that issue was met:

The challenge being traversed, evidence was adduced for the purpose of sustaining the charges made in the challenge.

Here is what I especially call the attention of Senators to:

Among other witnesses the defendant called to the stand the marshal of the United States for this district, who is one of the officers appointed by the court to select and make up the list of jurors for the district, according to the rule made on the 7th of December last, and whose official conduct in that matter is impeached by the challenge. We refused to compel him to testify.

I call the attention of the Senate to that. Here was a jury impaneled under an order which disregarded the State laws, which went entirely out of the State jury-boxes, which authorized the marshal to select five hundred men at discretion, so that he selected them uprightly and intelligently from the body of the citizens, not from the State jury-boxes; and when the court held that order constitutional and legal, that they had a right to pass it, then we made an issue of fact, that, in point of fact, the marshal had selected men not according to the true purpose of the order, but by private instructions for party effect and for personal interest, and now that challenge is traversed and issue is joined. We propose to put the marshal himself on the stand to prove it, and the marshal refuses to testify and protects himself upon the ground that it would criminate him!

Mr. CONKLING. Now, will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. CONKLING. Does he not see that we are jumping from the frying-pan into the fire on that very point for two reasons: first because under this law this commissioner and the other may go at large and ad libitum as long as they say that in their opinion the persons they select have the qualifications, and more especially when they have done it have put in three hundred improper persons into the jury-box, can the Senator from Georgia with all his ingenuity tell me any remedy for that? Whom are you going to challenge, and on what ground then?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I admit it.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator admits it; but does he see the force of his admission?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. CONKLING. He is reciting to us here what according to his opinion was an instance of injurious effect of a bad selection of unqualified and unsuitable jurors. Now he is willing, as I understand him, to vote for a provision which expressly arranges for just such opportunity, which does not require these men at all to adhere to the State law and to take the persons selected by somebody else; but these two men each acting upon his own mere ipse dixit puts into its jury-box one hundred and fifty names, and when they are there the act is like the laws of the Medes and Persians, there is no amendment and no appeal; and the Senator from Georgia goes in; he wants to challenge the array. How and on what ground is he going to challenge the array? He reserves his peremptory challenge to an individual juror. He can challenge a juror for cause or to the favor; he can say that he has a bias in that particular case which it would require evidence to remove, and he can try that individual juror; but how is he going to get at these three hundred improper names? And yet he is assigning the very reason as I understand it why no such provision should be made.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Precisely. I admit the force of it. Have I not said to the Senator that I regard this proposed law as objectionable?

Mr. CONKLING. Yes.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. But the reason I vote for it is that it corrects an evil that is more objectionable.

Mr. CONKLING. And that although the Senator has stated as clearly as any man can state, over and over again, the adequate remedy for this, if one is necessary, and that a totally different remedy from this which he denounces as objectionable and improper.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I say to the Senator that according to the system we now have, and if he had let me go on I would have made this point, when the court below held that order of December 7, 1872, (which is contrary to the law as he and I agree,) to be a legal order, then we made an issue of fact that the jury had been impaneled, not according to that order, but packed, to use a common word, selected for a special purpose, selected for a partisan purpose, selected for a case purpose—in plain language selected corruptly. We made that challenge. That being an issue of fact, the marshal had to join issue, and then we proposed to prove it by the marshal himself, and the court held that the marshal could not be compelled to testify because it might criminate himself.

Mr. CONKLING. Will they not hold the same thing about these commissioners?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Let me go on. Every other person on the board of commissioners appointed by this order, being three freeholders, and being the clerk as well as the marshal, would be incompetent to testify against their will, too. So they could commit just as much fraud as they pleased. Here they are all of one party, summoning jurors to suit their party purposes, and summoning them fraudulently, picking out of one hundred thousand competent jurors five hundred to try particular cases, picking them anywhere from any county, picking up their particular partisans anywhere, men who would serve their particular purpose. When we made the issue that they were picked up that way, and proposed to prove it by the very men that did it, the very men virtually confessed their guilt by saying "I will not answer because it would criminate me," and the court says, "I protect you and will not compel you to answer." The court said there to the marshal that he had a right to answer if he chose to answer voluntarily, but the court would not compel him to answer. That is the state of things now in Georgia. That is what we have had there for six years, and I have frequently refused to go into the court because of it. Now we propose a remedy by this bill; and what is that remedy? One part of it proposes that instead of the judge appointing five republicans, to use plain language, to select five hundred men contrary to law, not out of the jury-boxes of the State, not off the tax-books of the State, not as the statute and constitution of the State require, he shall appoint one democrat and one republican.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. To do the same thing?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Well, that is a little better. It is bad——

Mr. CONKLING. It is indeed.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. But it is better to have half a chance than no chance at all. That is all. With one democrat and one republican we have got half a chance. Under the present practice we have none in the world. If it is half good, it is better than nothing. I speak frankly now, and then I am reconciled to take a bill that is only half what it ought to be for this reason; I called the attention of the Senator to it before; that when we enact this we say to the Federal judges in Georgia, "You shall not appoint this board of commissioners as you have done, you shall not appoint a set of men that can select partisans and select them for particular cases and particular purposes, and when a challenge is made and an issue joined say they shall be protected from stating the truth because if they tell the truth it will criminate them." We want to say by this law, "You shall not do that; but if you will appoint commissioners, if you insist upon your construction of the law," not as you and I construe it, Mr. Senator from New York, but if the judges insist on appointing commissioners as they construe section 800, "you shall appoint them equally from each party; you shall give each party an equal chance." I admit all that, but we say at the same time "if you want to abandon this whole indecent thing of partisan appointments for juries, if you want to banish that (I admit) disgrace to American civilization itself that the practice or the law ever existed that recognized political parties in the impaneling of juries; if you want to abandon that odious system altogether, simply go back to the law as we construe it to be, and impanel your jury from the State jury-boxes."

Mr. CONKLING. Why do you not enact it?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. We are enacting it; it is in this very bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Oh, no.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The Senator will see that we must put a penalty on these judges. If we simply say to the judges, "you shall have the authority to draw your juries from the State jury-boxes," the judges will say, "I have got that authority now if I choose to exercise it, but I do not choose to exercise it; I choose to appoint a board of commissioners; I choose to appoint a board of five republicans to select juries to suit me." We say, "no; you have no right to do that." We say, "you have no right to do that." The Senator from New York says, "you have no right to do that." I agree that is my construction of the law; but the judge says, "I differ with you;" and the difference between me and the Senator from New York on the one side and the code on the other is that they are the judges and we are not, and they say they have a right to put that construction. They say they have a right to make the appointments of these commissioners, and they make them all one way, and when corruption grows out of it we cannot prove it, because the very men who commit the corruption are protected. That is the trouble, and they will be protected in this case, too. I admit it. We are willing to come fairly up to it; but now we say to the judges, "if you insist on that construction of yours, we cannot reverse it; if you insist that it shall be so, you shall not exercise the power in that way; we prescribe the manner of exercising what you hold to be your power; we prescribe the manner in which you shall exercise that power; but at the same time we tell you that you ought to abandon that whole thing of partisan juries and get your Federal juries from the State jury-boxes."

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator permit an interruption there for a moment?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I would rather get through.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator seems to be talking fairly and courteously. I want to talk about it fairly.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Very well.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator argues as if he stood between the devil and the deep sea, as if there was no remedy for the thing he is talking about except such a remedy as we have here. That is not true. The Senator is here as a Senator with all his responsibilities resting upon him. When he is going to legislate to correct an evil, he should legislate in the best way. What does he say? He says this provision is to continue to protect the commissioner from answering just as the marshal is protected now.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I suppose it would, under the ruling of the court.

Mr. CONKLING. Of course under the ruling of the court, and he says that he proposes a thing which is indecent and bad to correct this evil. I ask him in the first place why does he not propose something which is not indecent and bad? That is the first question that I ask him. In the second place, why does he say that under this bill he has a measure which will drive the judges to go back to the State practice? He has shown that he has no such thing, and I tell him now that certain New England States are the only States in this Union in respect of which this exception will obtain. Why? Because nowhere else do they draw literally, under the practice now, out of the State boxes. Therefore the Senator is going to subject seven-tenths of all the country and all the States to what he says is an indecent provision, although he himself has pointed out the mode by a proper provision of correcting the evils which he is talking about. How does he reconcile that with his sense as a legislator; I will not say his conscience, but his sense as a legislator of the fitness of things?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. As I said in the opening of my speech, while I concurred with all the Senator said, I did it with a qualification; that was that the evil we are seeking to correct was more indecent than the remedy. Now, I say that with the simple amendment which I have already told the Senator from New York I was in favor of, this bill will do nothing in the world in my judgment but remand the Federal courts to the State jury-boxes in all the States. Therefore I am in favor of it. Without that I would not be.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator vote for that amendment?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I will.

Mr. CONKLING. I am glad of that. That will help it.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. And I intended before I got through to say so. I think it ought to be voted for. I see the difficulty, and I am not here, as the Senator thinks, to follow anybody but my convictions. Now I say that with that simple little amendment—for I have examined this whole subject and had it marked on my bill before the Senator called my attention to it—I consider this whole jury provision as nothing in the world but simply remanding all the Federal courts back to the jury-boxes of the respective States. Take my State, for instance. The State courts sit in each county; but the Federal district includes seventy or eighty counties; but there is no trouble in the Federal courts of Georgia just ordering the clerk to send to the clerks in the respective counties of the State courts for lists of the jurors in their boxes to be put in the Federal jury-box and drawn from. It is the easiest matter in the world; and the Senator from New York is right; it is entirely practicable.

I have been led off by the gentlemen who have interrupted me much further than I intended. Some things I have not said that I wanted to say; but I feel that this is important, and I say to my friend from Pennsylvania and the gentlemen having charge of this bill, that certain words in this bill ought to be stricken out; it is wrong not to strike them out; and I will vote to strike them out if anybody makes the motion, and I had intended to give notice that I would make it myself.
